Kernels.

"Phylitsciepoma," with the accent on the "po," is the name of a new society organization at Newark, N. J., says the Philadelphia Record, and Rev. Phœbe Hanaford is responsible for the preposterous title. It is supposed to mean Phy: for philosophy, lit for literature, scie for science, p for poetry, o for oratory, m for music and a for art.

A little girl who had heard her family talking about hysterics was present when a story was told at which her mother laughed immoderately. The child seemed much impressed, and looking anxiously at her mother, she said gravely: "Mamma, ain't you afraid if you laugh so much you will get historical?"

A schoolmistress asked her class to put the nouns "boys," "bees," and "bear," into a sentence. The scholars thought intently for a few moments, when one ragged youngster, with a look of victory on his face, raised his hand. "Well, Johnny," said the schoolteacher, "what is your sentence?" "Boys bees bare when they go in swimmin'." The teacher did not call on any more of her class.

Baby Alice and mamma were waiting at the station for the train when the gong in the hotel opposite sounded for dinner. Alice listened a moment and then exclaimed: "Oh, mamma, hear the tin pan holler!"

A young Scotchman at Aldershot fell ill, and was sent to the hospital. A bath was ordered. It was brought into the chamber where the invalid lay. He looked at it hard for some time, and then threw up his hands and bawled: "O doctor, doctor! I canna drink a' that!"

A benevolent old gentleman found a tiny girl not more than two or three years old lost in a London street, and crying bitterly. In vain he asked her where she lived and what her name was; she turned a deaf ear to all his inquiries. At last he said:

"My dear, please tell me your name. Do try to recollect. It can't be so very long since you were baptized."

NEW CURE, KIDNEY and BLADDER DISEASES.

If you are a sufferer from kidney or bladder diseases, pain in back or rheumatism, you should send for the new botanic discovery, Alkavis, which will be sent you free by mail postpaid, by the Church Kidney Cure Company, 418 Fourth Avenue, New York. Alkavis is certainly a wonderful remedy, and you should try it, as it is offered you free.

"What did Noah live on when the flood had subsided and his provisions in the ark were exhausted?" asked a Sunday-school teacher of her class one Sunday.

"I know," squeaked a little girl, after all the others had given it up.

"Well, what?" inquired the teacher.

"Dry land," said the child wisely; and the answer passed.

A colored girl happened to meet a gentleman going down a street, and nearly came into collision with him; then both made for the other side of the path, and another collision was imminent. They then danced back and dodged again, when the girl suddenly stopped, and said, "See heah, mister, what am dis gwine to be; a schottische or a waltz?"

A train parted in the middle, and the signal rope snapped off like a thread, the end of it striking an old lady on the bonnet. "What is the matter?" she exclaimed.

"Oh, the train is broke in two," replied a gentleman, who sat in the next seat.

"I should say so," the old lady said looking at the broken cord. "Did they s'pose a little bit of string like that would hold the cars together?"

Child:—"Why don't you have your dinner-table mended?"

Hostess:—"Mended?"

Child:—"Yes'm. It's very weak and rickety, isn't it?"

Hostess:—"Why, no dear, it's solid mahogany."

Child:—"That's queer. Mamma said I must remember not to lean my elbows on it while eatin'. Our table is real strong."

Daughters of the Revolution and Their Times. 1769-1776. By Charles Carleton Coffin.

A story of the events that led up to and immediately preceding the Revolutionary War, giving especial prominence to the women who through loyalty, patience and bravery, made it possible for husbands, brothers and lovers to leap to the rescue of their country. The narrative is a charming one, the characters from life and the whole plot in unison with the events of those stirring times.

Religious Progress. By Alexander V. G. Allen, professor in the Episcopal Theological School in Cambridge.

The author proceeds to unfold this subject by first inquiring into the constituents of progress—whether it be in revolution which breaks away violently from old forms, evolution which is steady advance from old to new, from less to greater, or in an unswerving adherence to the old forms, believing that change is retrogression. The analysis is interesting but somewhat heavy. Professor Allen follows it by specific illustrations in the "organic life of the church," comparing creed with creed, and method with method. In closing he says: "In order that the individual may appropriate his own, he only needs to be alive in himself, full of faith in God and man. Then it will dawn upon him that the history of the church in all its diverse movements is but his own enlarged biography. . . . To the ever new man, the old world will be forever new, common and familiar things will shine with a new light. As there may be no limit to the wonders of scientific discovery, so the relations which may exist between the world and the soul of man who is ever growing in faith and spiritual imagination are practically without limit, and so the everlasting interest of life, the perpetual progress of humanity is sure."

Hull House Maps and Papers. A Presentation of Nationalities and Wages in a Congested District of Chicago, together with Comments and Essays on problems growing out of the Social Conditions. By Residents of Hull House, Chicago. Colored maps, diagrams and eight illustrations, $2.50; with maps mounted on cloth, $3.50.

It is a hopeful sign when reform literature turns from sentimental to practical. "Uncle Tom's Cabin" was necessary, but only as the fire-brand to set aflame that greater conflagration which burned away the cords that bound the slave. Many books have been written depicting the horrors of slum-life, the ghastliness of the sweater's shops, the lurid destruction of the saloon. And the fire has been kindled. The world is awake. Godly men and women are at work. "Settlements" are one result of the work, and the Hull House Settlement is demonstrating, not what ought to be done but what can be done. The book in question presents in graphic form a certain number of facts concerning a third of a square mile in Chicago, containing "a criminal district which ranks as one of the most openly and flagrantly vicious in the civilized world," and also the poorest and most crowded section of Chicago. With the aid of men engaged in making a government investigation of the slums of Chicago in 1893, each house, tenement and room was examined, and the schedules of the inhabitants, their nationalities and earnings were rendered available. These maps speak for themselves, but the special essays, of which there are eleven, bring home the lessons in thunder tones.

Mrs. Florence Kelley, the special government agent expert in charge, in Chicago, writes most movingly in regard to the Sweating System and the Employment of Children in manufacturing establishments. Isabel Eaton furnishes a chapter on the Cloak-makers of Chicago; Charles Zeublin tells of the Jewish quarter or Ghetto; Josefa Humpal Zeman gives a short sketch of the Bohemians who make within the City of Chicago the third largest Bohemian city in the world; Alessandro Mastro-Valerio, himself a South Italian, gives a genuine and sympathetic study of the Italian Colony; Julia C. Lathrop describes some of the Cook County charities, and Ellen Gates Starr shows how much art may do to relieve the sorrowful darkness of labor. Finally Miss Jane Addams appealingly pictures the influence of the "Settlement" as a factor in the labor movement. An appendix, illustrated with photographic reproductions, gives a definite account of Hull House and its beneficent methods of work.

5 POPULAR BOOKS.

We will give for one new subscriber, free of all charge, the five books named below, written by

CHAS. H. SPURGEON,
HENRY DRUMMOND and
T. DeWITT TALMAGE,

The greatest modern writers on religious topics. Their works are justly famed, and these have all had an enormous sale both in this country and abroad. The books are clearly printed on good paper, and each is as complete a book as though they were bought in five separate stores, and all are bound in attractive, heavy paper covers.

No. 71. John Ploughman's Pictures. By the late Rev. Charles H. Spurgeon, the great London preacher and evangelist. This is one of the most original and popular books of the age. The author states in the preface that its object is to smite evil, and especially the monster evil of drink, and it is safe to say that the plain talks of John Ploughman, couched in Spurgeon's quaint sayings, his wit, his logic, his power for good, have accomplished more than any similar publication. This book can be read by every member of the family over and over with increasing pleasure and profit, and every mother who has a son that must face the temptations of the terrible curse of drink, will place a good weapon in his hands when she induces him to read this work. Illustrated.

SERMONS BY T. DeWITT TALMAGE.

No. 74. Talmage on Palestine. A book containing a series of sermons, by the Rev. T. DeWitt Talmage, about his recent and noted travels through Palestine, telling what he saw and learned there. They make such delightful reading, and so instructive and entertaining, that the book is immensely popular. On the days he delivered these sermons in his church in Brooklyn, which seated 4,500 people, thousands were turned away from the doors for want of standing-room inside the church. Even to read the book makes one thrill through and through.

LECTURES BY HENRY DRUMMOND.

Prof. Henry Drummond is without doubt the most popular writer of the age. It is with much pride that we are enabled to offer three of his most popular works. If you read one, you will want all; and if you read them once, you are almost certain to read them over and over.

For simplicity, truthfulness, gentle yet mighty force in statement, and loving loyalty to God, they are unequaled by anything ever written on the subject. They will be angels of mercy to every home that gives them a welcome place on the reading-table.—Quarterly Review.

No. 64. The Greatest Thing in the World. By Henry Drummond. This book is on love as taught by Christ and the disciples; and if any one doubts that love is the greatest thing in the world, and if they want to be made stronger in their love for all things, they must get this book, by all means.

No. 63. Changed Life. By Henry Drummond. If you want a practical solution of the cardinal problem of Christian experience, read this book on "Changed Life." You will be drinking at the fountain of eternal life.

No. 62. Peace Be With You. By Henry Drummond. This book might be called a short treatise on Rest, Joy, Peace, Faith and Light. It is so simple, yet so grand and so clear, that you lay the book down feeling that a new and brighter day has dawned in your life.

TO MOTHERS.

Never has there been so much interest manifested among mothers of all classes concerning the proper care and culture of children as now. The work of the W. C. T. U. along purity lines has in a marked degree awakened parents to a sense of their responsibilities in the training of children in such knowledge as shall be a preventive to the impurity which is largely the result of ignorance.

As valuable helps to mothers who have experienced this arrest of thought we commend the little books by Dr. Mary Wood Allen, National lecturer for the purity department.

TEACHING TRUTH

aims to answer in chaste and scientific language, the queries of children as to the origin of life, and is wonderfully adapted to meet the needs of mothers. Miss Willard says: "I cannot keep a copy over night; it is an evangel to every young person in whose hands it might be placed. I would invite the public school-teachers to examine this rare little book."

Price 25c.

CHILD CONFIDENCE REWARDED

Is a little pamphlet of nineteen pages, emphasizing the importance of mutual confidence between mother and child—a confidence which should possess the element of such absolute truth as to always merit the little girl's somewhat paradoxical statement, "If my mamma says it's so, it's so, even if it isn't so."

A suitable book for general distribution at mothers' meetings.

Price 10c.

ALMOST A MAN

will be found a most helpful booklet to put into the hands of boys upon the threshold of manhood, or, better still, for mother or father to read with the son who is "almost a man." Dr. Allen has a wonderful gift of presenting this most difficult and misunderstood subject in such manner as will both warn and uplift.

MONTHLY READINGS.

The Bible Reading for May is by Mrs. Mollie McGee Snell, and the subject is

THE LORD'S PRAYER.

All Bible students have tasted of the rich spiritual food which is so abundant in this, the "universal prayer," and Mrs. Snell's exposition of it impresses us more than ever with its illimitable heights and depths, and will help us to comprehend more fully the heart significance of a prayer that is so often upon our lips.

The Responsive Reading for May deals with

and is prepared by the W. C. T. U. specialist in this department, Mrs. E. B. Ingalls, than whom no one is better qualified for the task. It is a valuable contribution to the literature of that important department, and every local superintendent should see to it that her union uses this reading. Unions that are not regular subscribers to the monthly Responsive Readings should send for a supply of these and send soon.

CAMPAIGN ECHOES,

by Mrs. Letitia Youmans, the heroic pioneer of the white-ribbon movement in Canada, and to-day the honorary president of the Dominion W. C. T. U., was written at the earnest request of white-ribboners on both sides of the border. Besides being an autobiography, a record of eighteen years of unremitting toil in the service of God and humanity, it is valuable as authentic history of the temperance reform in Canada.

It is a work of 312 pages, dictated from a bed of sickness and constant pain, and breathes from beginning to end a spirit of Christian service and unwavering faith in God. The book is dedicated to the author's "white ribbon sisters in this and other lands." The introduction is by Frances E. Willard, and the price is (cloth bound, with portrait of Mrs. Youmans) $1.

An old-fashioned way of getting there. Slow and safe, but hard work. Most women, have got beyond this kind of traveling—found something better.

Now, why can't you look at that other old-fashioned proceeding in the same light—washing things with soap and hard rubbing. That's slow enough and tiresome enough, everybody knows, and it's not as safe as washing with Pearline. It's really destructive, in fact, the wear of that constant rubbing. Break away from these antiquated ideas. Use modern methods. Pearline saves at every point.

Send it Back Peddlers and some unscrupulous grocers will tell you "this is as good as" or "the same as Pearline." IT'S FALSE—Pearline is never peddled, and if your grocer sends you something in place of Pearline, be honest—send it back. 457 JAMES PYLE, New York.

OUR BOW PIN.

We desire to call the attention of our women to the new white ribbon badge. It consists of a bow pin of white enamel on sterling silver and will meet a very general demand for a "white ribbon" which has some intrinsic as well as distinctive value, and which—like the inclusive "aim" of the organization it represents—will retain its pristine purity and all opposing forces. Every W and every Y should wear one of these truly symbolical pins.

Signal Notes.

April 18 has been made Peace Day for America.

London is to have a great railway congress in June.

Fourteen thousand new books were copyrighted in the United States last year.

American flags are to be supplied to the 12,000 public schools of New York state.

New York state spends twenty million dollars a year on public schools, an investment giving highest returns.

It is now announced that tea can be grown in South Carolina. If this be true, there can never be another Boston tea-party.

The quadrennial National Fair of Japan is to be held in Kioto this year. This is also the 1,100th anniversary of the dynasty.

The American University at Washington has received a bequest of $20,000 from the estate of the late Rev. Dr. S. R. Birch of Kokomo, Ind.

Greece is planning to revive the world-renowned Olympic games upon the very spot where the ancient athletic sports took place. April 26 to May 5 are the dates fixed.

It is sad to learn that the estimates presented to the Norwegian legislature include an appropriation for four million Kroner to be devoted to the construction of warships.

At the fifth international prison congress which convenes in Paris, June 30, fifty queries are to be presented for debate, among which are most important propositions relative to the prevention of crime and the reformation of juvenile criminals.

Thirteen American newspapers have reached the century mark. Nine are published in the New England states (four being credited to Massachusetts alone) three are indigenous to New Jersey and one is located in Augusta, Ga. The oldest newspaper in the country is The New Hampshire Gazette, founded at Portsmouth in 1756.

A new international committee has been appointed for the Young Women's Christian Association and an additional $25,000 is asked for the international work. At the fifth annual meeting held recently in Pittsburg, Pa., 29,459 members were reported and an increase of thirty associations. The expenditures for the year were $10,109.

Massachusetts is talking of having a Bird Day and the first Friday in May is suggested as the date. This is a timely suggestion, for until the Band of Mercy can give us a generation of bird protectors, the destruction of our feathered songsters in wantonness and for adornment will annihilate the winged race with its lovely plumage and soul inspiring songs.

According to the estimate of the secretary of the Japanese legation at Washington twenty battles were fought in the Japan-China war from its beginning in July, 1894, to March 6, 1895. The total loss of the Japanese has been 912 killed and 2,061 wounded. The Chinese loss he estimates at about 8,000. All the world rejoices at the ending of this war and is hopeful that the outcome will be the advancement of the Orient in the march of civilization.

The First Prohibition Church of Cleveland, O., was organized March 25, 1894. Without change of principles the name of the Church of the Open Bible was chosen and inserted in the charter. The following are the principles, there being no creed:

The undersigned do hereby band themselves together as Christians, avowing the following principles:

1. We believe in entire holiness of heart and life. That is, we believe that the heart, out of which are the issues of life, may be cleansed by the blood of Christ from all sin, and that by perfect love to God we may lead a blameless life, loving God with all our heart and our neighbor as ourselves.

2. We emphatically avow that the use of tobacco or of any spirituous or malt liquors is a barrier to membership in this society.

3. We pledge ourselves as follows: "God helping me, I promise not to aid by voice, means or vote any person, party or institution that is not uncompromisingly committed by word, act and discipline to the overthrow of the liquor traffic, corporate robbery and licensed wrong of all kinds."

Non-resident members are received, and the pastor, Rev. Wm. U. Guy, 59 Rosewood Ave., would be glad to correspond with such.

Recalled Stormy Times.

"Well, that looks natural," said the old soldier, looking at a can of condensed milk on the breakfast table in place of ordinary milk that failed on account of the storm. "It's the Gail Borden Eagle Brand we used during the war."

Publisher's Notes

The food question is coming to the front more and more as one which is closely related to the alcohol habit. Fruits, we begin to see, should occupy a more conspicuous place in our daily menu than we have hitherto assigned them. Their juices, nutritious, healthful and unstimulating, supply those demands of the physical system which some people imagine are satisfied by the use of beer or wine. First, taking it for granted that she has her fruits, every housewife should learn how to prepare them in appetizing forms for the table. Mrs. Hester M. Poole's book, gives just the information needed upon the subject. It is a practical manual for housekeepers, containing nearly seven hundred recipes for wholesome preparations of foreign and domestic fruits. As the author says: "Recipes for a dozen new dishes to be made out of the same fruit are an acquisition the value of which only a housekeeper can justly estimate."

FRUITS, AND HOW TO USE THEM,

SINCE OUR LAST ISSUE.

The Canadian Parliament reassembles, May 9.

The revolution in Cuba is gaining power, and troops have been cabled for from Spain.

A social settlement congress, in which many leading exponents of that practical idea participated, was inaugurated May 3, in New York.

China has asked ten days' extension of time, from May 8 to 18, for the ratification of the peace treaty, which Japan has refused to grant.

Nicaragua has agreed to pay the indemnity of £15,000 demanded by Great Britain within fifteen days after the British men-of-war leave Corinto harbor.

A dreadful cyclone, Friday afternoon, wrecked many villages and farms in Sioux county, Ia., and killed nearly two hundred people, most of whom were children at school.

The directors of the McCormick Theological Seminary, Chicago, have rejected the proposition of the Presbyterian General Assembly for a surrender of the control of the college property.

Good citizenship has infected the colleges in the formation of the National College Civil Service Reform League at Chicago, May 3. Stephen Demmon, Northwestern University, was made president.

England's chancellor of the Exchequer, Sir William Vernon Harcourt, announces a reduction of five hundred million dollars in the national debt, during the last twenty years, making it now thirty-three hundred million dollars.

A committee has been appointed by the representatives of the powers to draft reforms for Armenia. Han Bey, a Turkish official, will be president; two under secretaries of state, a magistrate and one Greek and one Armenian official, constitute the commission.

The legislative committee sent to Quincy, Ill., for the purpose of investigating the Soldiers' and Sailors' Home, found that "the great evil of the home is intemperance," and reported a resolution to authorize the superintendent to prosecute saloon-keepers who persist in selling intoxicants to the inmates after being forbidden.

ONLY ONE WEEK'S WORK FOR THE GREAT PETITION.

If your name and your friends' names are not on the Great Petition and you desire they should be before it goes to London, do not delay one hour, but send by next mail to Mrs. Rebecca C. Shuman, 2130 Sherman Ave., Evanston, Ill., and be sure to put on letter postage.

Another state has raised the age of consent law—Wisconsin, from twelve to fourteen years. While not as high as it should be, it proves the effect of agitation and the contagion of a good example. We will soon present to our readers a tabulated statement showing the legislation of the past winter on the purity question.

Again has death invaded the home of one of our leaders, removing this time the eldest son of our National treasurer, Mrs. Helen M. Barker. His sickness was of very short duration and his death, which occurred last Thursday, utterly unexpected until a few hours previous. The funeral took place on Sunday, May 5, at Englewood, Ill. Thousands of hearts will turn in warm sympathy to the wife and mother and near relatives in their great bereavement, and will pray that the intensity of their loss may be tempered by the Father's all-comforting love.

St. Louis has been honored the past week by the Mississippi Valley Congress of Women in which the W. C. T. U. has played a prominent part, being represented by Mrs. Clara C. Hoffman, Mrs. S. F. Grubb, Mrs. Leonora Barry-Lake and Miss Carrie Lee Carter. A lively discussion followed the motion to admit men as delegates, but they were finally admitted, one woman arguing in their favor thus: "For nearly six thousand years men have been running things to suit themselves and they have made some big mistakes. One of their biggest mistakes is in treating woman as an inferior being and excluding her from their councils. Let us not imitate their mistake, but treat them as our equals and admit them to our conventions if they seek admittance."

The General Conference of 1896 is to assemble in Cleveland, O., this month, at which time the question of the eligibility of women as delegates will be settled. It is important that women should be sent as delegates and alternates to the Conference, and it is important for Methodist women to determine what their action shall be if the decision proves adverse after all the manifestations of favor evinced by the laity and a majority vote of the ministers, to say nothing of the precedent of years in counting women alternates whose names were on the roll as members authentically elected. Will those who have a purpose and a plan which they have carefully considered please write on the subject to The Union Signal, marking plainly on the envelope the following words: "Methodist women in the General Conference."

One appointment of the new Republican administration of Chicago we can highly recommend—that of Miss Jane Addams as garbage inspector in the nineteenth ward of the city. A few weeks ago, during the annual letting of contracts for the cleaning of the streets and the removal of garbage, Miss Addams was one of the bidders, but her bid was not accepted and she will now have the pleasure of being inspector over the contractor who was given the work. Miss Addams is one of the best known women associated with municipal reform, as in addition to her responsibilities as the head of the Hull House settlement, she is a prominent member of the Chicago Civic Federation and an author of much repute. We safely predict that the streets and alleys of her ward will show a clean and smiling face and that the garbage boxes will be no onger disease breeders and nostril abominators.

Miss Willard's cottage in the Catskills, the "Eagle's Nest" at Twilight Park, N. Y., is for rent, as the World's Convention holds Miss Willard abroad and she will not be able to return to occupy it before fall. It is now on the list of offered cottages, but we feel anxious that appreciative friends occupy it. Five friends, coöperating, could secure for themselves an ideal home for the summer for a comparatively small sum. The cottage has seven rooms, is dainty and attractive; is two thousand feet above the sea; has a view unsurpassed in all that lovely region, and is near the Squirrel Inn, an excellent hotel kept by two Philadelphia ladies (Friends). There are facilities for housekeeping. For further particulars address Miss Mary A. Lathbury, 17 Webster Place, East Orange, N. J.

The arrangements for the Conference in Grindelwald, which Dr. Lunn is making part of the scheme for the delegates of the W. C. T. U. and their friends who are following this two-hundred dollar tour, which he has planned to include the great convention in London, in June next, promise to be of a very interesting character. Among those who will take part in the Grindelwald program during the week that some of our readers hope to be present, will be Mrs. Josephine Butler, the noble pioneer of the great movement against the state recognized degradation of our sex; Mrs. Wynford Phillips hopes to speak on Woman's Sphere in the Political World, and Miss Agnes Slack one of the first of women Poor-Law Guardians in England, will deal with Woman's Sphere in Municipal Life. Miss Hallie Q. Brown, of Wilberforce University, is to speak on the temperance question, while the Rev. Egerton Young, and Mrs. Hoffman, will preach on the Sunday.

Mrs. Shuman, the maker of the Great Petition, has sent word that she cannot attach any names to the Petition after May 15, as it takes considerable time to securely pack the great rolls and get them ready to express to New York and on board the steamer Berlin that sails June 5. There are doubtless hundreds of men and women who desire to have their names on this largest and most remarkable appeal ever presented to the government of any nation. This can still be done, provided there is not an hour's or a moment's delay. The very day that such people read this notice, they should dispatch to Mrs. Rebecca C. Shuman, 2130 Sherman Ave., Evanston, Ill., their signatures. There is no time to send for blanks, so cut out the Petition as it appears on page 13, of this paper, paste it to a large sheet of white paper and put names and addresses below it. "Now is the accepted time." Ten minutes' delay may prevent your name traveling around the world in the best company it was ever in.

Miss Susan B. Anthony was in Chicago last week and naturally did not escape a reporter's interview. When asked as to when the "new woman" was coming, she quickly replied, "It all depends on what you mean by the term 'new woman.' The term has become a cant phrase, carrying almost as much opprobrium as the term 'woman's rights woman' used to imply. The 'new woman,' as the phrase goes, may mean a loud, mannish woman affecting the boisterous conduct of men, with none of the saving graces of her own sex If that be the new woman I do not welcome her coming If by the new woman is meant a woman earnest, thoughtful, lofty of purpose, self-reliant and equally well educated with man, why, then, she has come. We have got her in our homes, where she stands side by side with her husband, welcoming his friends on the common ground of intellectual equality, joining in their discussions—a college-bred woman who can do something more than pour tea when her husband entertains his friends. We have got the new woman in everything except the counting of her vote at the ballot box. And that is coming. It's coming sooner than most people think."

THE VANGUARD OF THE FUTURE.

BY KATE LUNDEN.

'Tis evening. On the battlefield of Time
The Past is dying, conquered and alone,
And through the shadows of approaching night
Is borne the echo of its funeral chime.
The hoary century tottering to its grave,
Stops for a moment on the trampled field
And trembling writes upon the broken shield:
"The Past is passed. Remember what it gave;
For what it took the Future shall atone."
We read the legend in the fading light,
When, lo! into the half-deserted camp
An army marches. Proud with rhythmic tread
The swaying columns form in solid lines
Which more than fill the places of the dead.
And still they come; the well-known measured tramp
Is heard on far-off plains, o'er storm-tossed waves,
And on the banner of the gathering braves
In bold and light-emblazoned letters shines
The name: The Vanguard of the Future.

. . . . . .

"Listen! The battle for freedom is nearing,
Unsheathèd flashes the veteran's sword.
Though we are small we can join in the cheering
And we will help in the strength of the Lord.
Bright are our eyes and our arms firm and steady,
Our hands ne'er shall handle the poisonous cup.
We are the victors; we feel it already—
Tremble, King Alcohol, we shall grow up!"

. . . . . .

Some years have passed.
The bugle sounds again
To call each faithful warrior to his post.
The scene is changed; of women and of men
Is now composed the former childish host.
They sing of victory as they sang before,
And 'fore that song the powers of darkness quail;
Their banner glistens as it did of yore.
And over mountain range and green clad vale
Is echoed back the battle's deafening roar
Half drowned by their triumphant "Victory! hail!"
The war-cry of the future.

"Forward! the battle of freedom is raging,
Forward we go in the name of the Lord;
For God and our country this war we are waging,
For home we are wielding the veteran's sword;
Pure are our hearts as the snow on the mountains,
Our lips never tasted the death-dealing cup;
Deep we have drank from the life-giving fountains—
Tremble, King Alcohol, we have grown up!"

REVEREND BALAAM BULL'S NIGHTMARE.

In Five Chapters.

BY JEAN CALVIN.

Chapter IV.

"But now there arose one in the twenty-third century who was indeed mighty in learning," continued Theodora Parker. "It was Dr. Jane Buckley, and she said at the famous General Council of 2340 A. D.: 'Sisters, our work in translation is not yet complete. Do you not realize that every "man" who can be excluded from the book will make room for another "woman"?' "

"Fool!" said Balaam Bull, in a rage, "that's a woman's logic all over!"

"Will you hush?" retorted the stranger, angrily.

"It was impossible," said the preacher, "for the women to fail to admire the profound scholarship and logic of Dr. Jane Buckley. In an instant there flashed upon them such a view of the sublime possibilities opened up to them by the working out of Dr. Buckley's rule of interpretation that it was no wonder she was elected a bishop on the spot by her admiring co-workers! And then they proceeded to their labors of translation.

"Now it is almost impossible for those who are not acquainted with the nineteenth century translation of the Greek and Hebrew sacred text to understand the marvelous alteration which was wrought by the application of Bishop Jane Buckley's rule of interpretation."

"Marvelous! I should think so!" said Balaam Bull, dryly.

"In the case of nearly all Greek and Hebrew proper names no distinctive terminations are used to designate the sex, and further, there are no such careful distinctions made as to sex as we are accustomed to in the English in our use of pronouns, which, with verbs, were generally left unexpressed. For instance, by turning to the 36th chapter of Genesis we find that the nineteenth century English translations call Noah 'he,' 'she,' 'son' and 'daughter.' Jesus is constantly called the 'Son of Man,' while we know he was the 'son of woman' exclusively. Dukes and women-dukes, deacons and women-deacons were all called by the same words descriptive of their office without respect of sex. The instances are too numerous to mention. But all this uncertainty was cleared up by assuming that all those of any importance were women unless the contrary and inferior sex was clearly designated."

"Good gracious!" groaned Balaam Bull, and he almost fell out of his seat in a faint.

"For instance," continued Theodora Parker, "Honeydear Ann Howson, in her recent and most excellent work on St. Paul, is quite able to prove to the satisfaction of all modern theologians that Paul was a woman."

Balaam Bull took his hat and was about to leave the church, but the stranger detained him, saying: "It is strictly against our rules to allow any one to go out during the sermon, and you will get into trouble if you do." With a sigh he sat down again.

"Speaking of that excellent author, Honeydear Ann Howson," continued the preacher, "you will allow me to digress for a moment in order to show you how completely she has cleared up all obscurity as to the meaning of a difficult passage in the fourteenth of I Corinthians. I will read it:

" 'Let your women keep silence in the churches: for it is not permitted to speak unto them, but to be in subjection, as also saith the law.'

"Quoting from the famous authorities, Delia Stanley and Madam Clarke, Honeydear Ann Howson is able to show that the males were forbidden to speak unto the women prophets because the males 'babbled' and 'chattered' in the most foolish manner, interrupting and asking questions during the sermon. We should have understood that from our own personal experience when women first began to preach five hundred years ago, for it is necessary even to this day to have an order of women deacons to maintain silence."

"Yes, and they'll get after you, too, sir, if you are not more careful," whispered the stranger to Balaam Bull, who was muttering something under his breath.

"The women were ordered to keep the men silent," continued the preacher, "and the men were not permitted to speak unto them, but to be in subjection as also saith the law. The law referred to can be found in Genesis 21:12, the ordinance laid down for the control of 'faithful Abraham, father of all them that believe,' namely, 'In all that Sarah saith unto thee hearken unto her voice'—in all! in all! Not in one thing, but in everything! And in order not to provoke this vain babbling of the males in the churches, women were not to even speak to their husbands, but at home. We see that the law was for the male to keep still and 'hearken unto her voice' when the woman was giving forth her admonitions and exhortations."

"Extraordinary!" said Balaam Bull.

"But to resume. After many years of an almost exclusively female social life," she continued, "the males, jaded, mutilated, unfit for civil life, returned—a pitiful handful as to numbers—from their foreign conquests. Now the women had, of course, caused a total destruction of the old-time translations of the word excepting a few copies stored up in the museums, and had substituted their own revised version, 'Buckley's Interpretation,' as it was called. But when the old soldiers opened it they found that it no longer abounded in that to them most beautiful word of all 'man,' 'man,' and they were offended and said, 'We will re-translate to suit our own tastes, for you have ruined the Bible for us!' But when they sought for males who had knowledge of Greek and Hebrew they found they had nearly all been killed in the wars, whereas all the women were able to dispute with them from the original text.

"Then they asked for a place in the pulpits to air their grievances, and were informed that their grievances were all imaginary, and besides Paul had commanded women to keep them silent, and they would not dare disobey. 'But,' the males asked, 'what about the law, "Thy desire hsall be unto thy husband, and he shall rule over thee"?' 'It is no law,' said the women, 'it is a prophecy.' 'Well, then, why do you not fulfill it?' the males asked. 'We as a sex have faithfully fulfilled that prophecy for five or six thousand years, and now we declare our intention to fulfill other prophecies concerning women also.'

" 'What other prophecies?' asked the males.

" 'Such as "The women that publish the tidings are a great host," ' said the women, 'and "Thy daughters shall prophesy," but more especially that one in the thirty-first of Jeremiah, "How long wilt thou go hither and thither, O thou backsliding daughter? for the Lord hath created a new thing on the earth, woman shall encompass man"! We have heard the Lord's call and stopped our backsliding into subjection and are now going on to our complete development. Has not Jesus already come,' they added 'to save woman from the penalty of sin? We appeal to Him and refuse the penalty of subjection any longer!'

"At last the whole contest between the women and these returned soldiers turned on the single question, 'Is Abraham or old Adam upheld by the Word as the typical father of believers?' The women contended for Abraham, for Paul had said of him 'he received . . . a seal of the righteousness of faith . . . that he might be the father of all them that believe'; but the males declared they preferred Adam as the typical father because God had prophesied (commanded, they said) to Eve, 'thy desire shall be to thy husband (Adam) and he shall rule over thee.'

"But women declared for 'father Abraham' and his household as the type set forth by the Word for every believer, the household to be regulated by the following laws:

"1. Abraham the father of the household found his sole delight in the fact of sacred fatherhood. Genesis 17:5.

"2. Sarah was the (woman) prince over their wonderfully numerous progeny. Genesis 17:15.

"3. The children of believers cannot inherit the promises given to believers, unless they have a free mother. Compare Genesis 21 with Galatians 4.

"4. The males are to share equally with women in the penalty for sin. Sarah said to Abraham, 'my wrong be upon you,' and God said to Abraham, 'hearken unto her voice,' thus confirming its truth.

"When God said to Abraham, 'call Sarah a prince, hearken unto her voice, and cast out the bond-servant and take the free-woman only for a wife,' he was speaking to the great type of Justified Households. Herein it is expressly declared that the rule of Adam's life must be exchanged for another rule which was then given. Paul distinctly declares this the time of the casting out of the penalty of law and the bringing in of the liberty of the gospel.

"But, alas! it has taken time and effort to educate the tastes of males, for they continually turn by preference to Adam as their type instead of Abraham. And it is only by the most rigid enforcement of the law, 'Let the women keep silence in the churches,' that we have been able to lead the males into the better way. But now 'the leaven' which the woman took and hid has leavened the whole lump, and we see to-day after five hundred years' patient toil the all but complete fulfillment of the prophecy contained in the Lord's parable. The fact of the redemption of woman was not preached by a male ministry, but nevertheless it was hidden away by woman and when the full time came woman's redemption has had its leavening effect on the whole nation.

"I may not pause to do more than give the hastiest possible glimpse at this wonderful contest, which at the first gave the name, The Contestant Church, to that body of believers who are now known simply as The Church, seeing that all other bodies of believers have been swallowed up by it. For instance, in the 11th of I Corinthians Paul declares 'Man is the head of woman,' and then again, 'The woman ought to have power over her head.' When the males were asked to explain this (for they declared that it did not refer, as the women thought, to the law of Abraham's household 'hearken unto her voice') one male who professed to be learned in the Scripture, having graduated from a theological school before he went to war, undertook to support the ancient theory that it meant 'a woman ought to wear a veil to show she was to be governed by her husband, her head.'

" 'How do you prove that!' the women demanded. 'By the context,' he said. 'Doth not nature herself teach you that long hair is a shame to a man?' At this the women raised a shout of derision, declaring the sense was the express contrary, for they had changed the punctuation from the ancient form.

" 'But, he said, 'I learned it in school.' 'Very well,' they replied, 'you shall go to a better school now, and unlearn it.' So saying they put him in a cage in the zoological gardens and watched his hair from day to day to see what would happen, and if nature would keep it short, for that, he had contended, would be the result. The poor male (who had lost both arms in the war) was let out after a few months with long flowing locks! And not a barber in town would cut it for him. We may conclude the women won their cause. It was the reductio ad absurdum practically applied in both visible and invisible form."

"What an outrageous deed!" said Balaam Bull.

"Then there was the interesting contest against the form of marriage service the women had instituted. It seems almost incredible in our day that the wicked males could ever have contended against that most picturesque and charming part of the service—the giving away of the bridegroom to the bride, in exact fulfillment of both the letter and the spirit of the oft repeated divine command, 'Therefore shall a male leave his father and his mother and cleave unto his wife.'

"Again there was a bitter contest to maintain Madam

Clarke's interpretation of I Tim. 2:11, which was that Paul herein lays down express injunctions that the women learn 'in all quietness' how to subject the male, and she was forbidden to teach him to exercise authority. Like Samson, the secret of woman's power must never be revealed, for Eve was only deceived into transgression. Adam seems to have gone into it willfully. And the first prophecy in all the Bible declares that woman and her seed are constituted the enemies of Satan; nothing is said of the male and his seed. Presumably it would not be safe to put power into any but the hands of that sex constituted the enemy of Satan from the first; who can tell when the male would make a truce with Satan could he but get the power!"

REFORM PROGRESS FOR FIRST THIRD OF 1895.

II.

BY REV. WILBUR F. CRAFTS.

DIVORCE, IMPURITY AND MORMONISM.

Divorce legislation, which has at least been checked in its downward tendency since the great divorce report of the United States department of labor was published through the efforts of Dr. S. W. Dike, has narrowly escaped a serious relapse in South Dakota, where one house of the legislature recently restored the old ninety-day law to recoup the state for losses through a defaulting state treasurer and the panic by calling back its profitable "divorce colonies." But after the press of the country had reported the bill as a law, it failed in the other house, and South Dakota thus escaped a shame scarcely less than Omaha's open partnership in the profits of impurity.

Strangely, no effort seems to have been made to induce Congress to veto the same shameless traffic in the Territory of Oklahoma, whose secretary writes us glibly that "divorces are granted readily on ninety days residence for good cause shown." When Congress has vetoed Oklahoma, a nation's scorn will bring North Dakota to its senses as another Botany Bay of hostility to the family, where ninety-day divorces are bought and sold.

There is encouragement to press the crusade against impurity in the inglorious failure of the Kentucky congressman's attempt to traffic in his notoriety as an adulterer by a lecture tour, and in the partial success of the new agitation for such changes in "age of consent" laws as shall make a girl's "consent" before her majority in relation to her person as invalid as such consent has always been with reference to her property. The pioneer states in raising the age of consent to eighteen are Kansas, 1887; Wyoming, 1890; Colorado, Missouri, 1895. North Carolina has this year raised the age of consent from ten to fourteen, which though encouraging, should not be regarded as even a halting point.

New Hampshire and Delaware have been erroneously reported as having raised the age of consent. In the former state the bill was so scandalously amended as to make it worse than worthless, and so the governor allowed it to fail. In Delaware a law with reference to impurity as a "misdemeanor" was improved, but the real "age of consent," as always understood to be that of the law of rape is still seven years, not a sacred number, but a diabolical one, for which the press should bind Delaware to the whipping-post.

In Indiana a bill to raise the age to eighteen passed the lower, but failed in the "upper" (?) house, being "crowded out." In Wisconsin a bill to raise the age to sixteen failed in the "lower" house. It has been reported in the press that a law raising age to eighteen has passed both houses in New York, but probably they were separate bills, as on April 9 the Secretary of State informed me no such bill had become law. In Connecticut, on April 11, such a bill was being held back by the committee to which it had been referred. The contradictions in the press in regard to the foregoing bills have made it necessary for the writer to secure correct information from the secretaries of the states named, on whose authority the statements above are in most cases made. An examination of the laws passed suggests that the purity superintendents of the W. C. T. U. and other leaders of this movement need to confer and agree on the best practicable law, and everywhere work for that.

What do the society girls, "Daughters of the American Revolution (!)" and others mean by engaging in Trilby tableaux everywhere? Do they wish to give the public a hint as "broad as a barn door" that they think it would be beautiful to be as bad as Trilby and too ignorant to be ashamed?

Amazing news comes from St. Louis, which we could believe only on unimpeachable authority, namely, that its Evangelical Alliance, alarmed by the spread of prostitution into residence districts, has asked the city authorities to district it, which implies licensing it. These good men need to read up the literature of the American Purity Alliance, and see that such a compromise with sin is as ineffectual as it is wrong. Harlotry can be prohibited—has been with good success in Toronto and Allegheny and Lincoln—but can never be "regulated," as is being attempted in Boston and New York as well as at St. Louis, but not in the two former cases by preachers.

The "living pictures" which have spread from New York city theaters, like a plague, to other cities, have occasioned the introduction of two bills in the New York legislature and like bills elsewhere, forbidding the public exposure of woman's form without other drapery than tights. Much of the zeal devoted to the legislative attacks on high hats at theaters might better have been devoted to the high kicking. In many theaters the less men are able to see the better for them and all concerned. For theaters as now conducted the higher the hats the better.

As to Mormonism, now that Utah is dressing herself in a constitution for statehood, let all who think Congress should have waited for riper repentance, help on the missionary and educational work on which we must now rely in place of the restraining hand of Congress. The outlook at this writing is favorable for constitutional provisions in favor of prohibition and woman suffrage. The constitution will also contain, of course, the provision against polygamy required by the enabling act of Congress.

THE ANTI-GAMBLING CRUSADE.

The daily papers gave no head-lines to what good citizens must regard as one of the best measures enacted by the recent Congress, the Woodbridge anti-lottery law, secured mainly by the efforts of Prof. S. H. Woodbridge, of the "Third House," who in the absence of any organized federation of churches or living anti-lottery league, gave lavishly of money and time to this fight for eighteen months and won, despite the lottery champions, Senators Brice and Gorman, only five minutes before the life of Congress expired. Express companies that have abetted the national robber, the Honduras (née Louisiana) lottery will now find it dangerous to continue their wrong doing. Postmaster-General Wilson will find the enforcement of this law his most important and most difficult duty.

The racetrack gamblers of New York state, whose infamous Ives pool bill was outlawed by the new constitution in its prohibition of all forms of gambling have found the legislature responsive to their wish to nullify the constitution. The assembly passed, on or near April Fool's Day, with scarcely any opposition, the Way-Percy racing bill, asked for openly by the racetrack gamblers, which is shrewdly worded to permit, while seeming to forbid betting, and to exclude, while seeming to impose a penalty. On visiting Albany half a week after the bill passed the lower house, senators informed me, as was also stated in the press, that almost the only opposition to the bill came from the small gamblers who were excluded from the gambling trust which the bill forms for the large racetracks. The churches will be shouting their vain reproaches after their constitutional protection against gambling has been stolen and carried off before their eyes, as Rhode Island and Maryland are doing in similar cases, and as Missouri will be doing when she realizes that her legislature has recently legalized racetrack gambling. Rhode Island's last legislature began its work by repealing the tracetrack gambling permit of it predecessor. New Jersey's legislature submitted a constitutional amendment to the same effect. Kansas passed a law to make such a constitutional amendment effective. Connecticut passed an act against policy playing. Best of all, Judge Tuley rendered a decision against stock gambling.

IMMIGRATION REFORM.

The hard times, during which there was more emigration than immigration, was a favorable time for increasing the restrictions upon immigration, but the excellent measures urged by Senator Chandler and Congressman A. W. Stone in the last Congress were defeated by the official representatives of the administration, and with the slowly returning revival of business the perilous tidal wave of almost unrestricted immigration will again sweep over us, finding only an apology for a breakwater to check its destructive force.

LAW AND ORDER.

There have been repeated instances of lynching this year in the North, and more numerous cases in the South, but this savagery seems to have been somewhat lessened, as compared to the past, either by the unwonted cold or otherwise. Lawlessness, however, has reached an unprecedented high tide, flooding even legislative halls. The needless Sunday session of Congress, near its close, is compared by the New York Herald to a French ball in its open drunkenness and vice, but the Indiana legislature takes the palm for lawlessness of legislators in that its session closed with a free fight over a petty case of patronage, for which fracas Democrats and Republicans were equally at fault. Troops were called out both in Brooklyn and Savannah to defeat attempts to govern by brickbats instead of ballots. Brooklyn has also found it necessary to put upon its Law and Order League the duties which its so-called "reform" mayor refuses to perform in the enforcement of law. And even the newer "reform" mayor of New York proposes to reduce the crimes of the Sunday saloons only by legalizing them. Even the disorderly houses, we were informed at Dr. Parkhurst's Society, are "as bad as ever."

THE JAPANESE WOMAN.

II.

BY ADELAIDE DAUGHADAY.

The small maiden whose career we are considering, being born in the "Meiji," or "Period of great Enlightenment," is, at a suitable age, sent to school, for, although probably her mother and grandmother cannot read, the spirit of progress abroad in the nation has touched the family. With a host of other little people of both sexes she studies her lessons in a voice pitched somewhere in the neighborhood of "high C," each one trying to drown his neighbor's noise. Life now flows on smoothly, as the teachers are kind, or would do so if it were not that the struggle with the brain-torturing Chinese as well as Japanese ideographs begins at this point, a contest that must continue through the school course, and through life if any attempt is made to do much reading; and the fact most discouraging to foreigners is, while floundering in this Slough of Despond, that the people themselves, after spending ten or more of the best years of their lives in trying to master the 120,000 different characters are not able to read and write easily themselves. Often educated people cannot read for us letters received, nor address envelopes at our request. If we ask them how to write an ideograph they begin to consult together, tracing the lines on the palm of one hand with the forefinger of the other, or making them into the air, and some minutes are consumed in trying to decide how it should be made. Many of these require fifty or more strokes of the writing brush, one line following another in fixed order. Although reading and writing tax youthful energies to the utmost a little of everything else under the sun is added, as our Japanese friends have not grasped the thought that education means to draw out rather than to put in; neither is the pouring-in process regulated at all by the age nor capacity of the recipient. The children of the various primary schools with which I am familiar, have eleven and more studies, though fortunately all do not occur the same day.

The daughter of a school inspector was put in a mission school. Before entering her as a pupil the father sent for a catalogue, and seeing there were fifteen studies named in the six years' course, sent to Tokyo for the books, so when she appeared upon the scene she was followed by a servant bearing on a tray a small library. At the end of a week a letter of indignant protest was received from the father because his daughter, aged ten, was having but five lessons a day besides music and sewing. But Japanese little folks do not take life very seriously, and the numerous religious and national festivals afford many holidays; but you may judge of how superficial must be their knowledge, and how the memory is enormously developed at the expense of the reasoning faculties. Their system of education is admirably adapted to stifling all originality of thought; and the moulding of character in the plastic period of school life is an idea that has not yet presented itself before their mental vision. Above the primary the sexes go to separate schools, and the school course of a girl may stop very suddenly any time after she is fourteen years of age, that she may prepare for the great end of life—marriage; her brothers may go on many years longer if the family purse permit.

While the masculine nestling is thus trying his wings, our little "lady bird" is being trained to fold hers closer and closer. All the naturalness of childhood is being carefully pruned away and her manners are being formed according to a fixed standard. She must now walk on the street with eyes cast down and head inclining forward, must speak only when addressed, and everywhere and at all times cultivate a very shy and deprecating manner or she will be accused of being "proud," which thing, perhaps, more than any other, would effectually prevent a desirable matrimonial alliance being arranged for her. She is now taught that the one great aim of her life is to become pleasing and useful to the opposite sex. In the home, at school and in the few books she reads this lesson is iterated and reiterated. She must have no opinions of her own, but reflect those of father and brother, must become expert in all household ways; and if she belong to the higher classes must be able to serve tea gracefully and arrange flowers artistically. Whatever she learns must be in obedience to this grand ideal. Singing and playing on koto or samisen will make her more attractive, and among the merchant classes, when quite young she often dances or postures for the amusement of her father's guests.

This does not mean that she is usually in evidence at social gatherings as a participant in conversation and amusements; on the contrary, her part is to quietly and shyly serve the food on trays to the guests, and afterward sit far in the rear and sing and play for their entertainment. Sometimes she sits behind a screen, but if she can be seen her drooping figure and expressionless face show that she is not proud of being permitted to appear at all, instead of remaining with her mother and the servants in the kitchen. In the many scores of addresses I have heard given to young girls the burden of each has been, "Be amiable, be obedient, be skilled in domestic duties, and if opportunities to attend school are given, make the most of them, as this may help you to be more useful to your future husband." One educated man who had just recovered from an attack of inflamed eyes, added to his remarks, "It is well for a woman to know how to read and write, as, if her husband is ill, she can write his letters and read for his amusement." Amiability, as they define the word, is perfect acquiescence in all the husband's decisions, and never under any circumstances to show the slightest jealousy. Marriage may occur any time after fifteen, and the parties may never have met previously, or it may have been a speechless meeting where a few furtive glances on each side were the only knowledge they have of each other excepting that obtained from the "go-between." A young girl once came to me in a tremor of excitement and said: "A friend living next door to my home has just written me that my father has made an engagement for me to a young man, but as she did not mention his name I do not know who it is." It was several weeks before her father notified her of the fact and told his name.

Of course, there are many kind, indulgent fathers in Japan who would scorn to dispose of a daughter without previous consultation, and who even seem to some extent to be governed by her wishes in the matter, but custom does not require this, and in the case of a bad, reckless man paternal tyranny is something fearful, as a daughter may be given in marriage and afterward taken back again according to his caprice. A very sad confirmation of this fact recently came to my knowledge. Years ago a young man was adopted by a rich family to marry the only child of the house. During the parents' lifetime all went well, but soon after their death she was sent with her little girl to live in an outbuilding on the grounds, while a younger and more attractive woman was brought to live in the home of her ancestors, and the husband, by idleness and dissipation, squandered her inheritance. Not many months ago he and a boon companion of his frequent revels made a journey to Tokyo together, and while there concocted the plan of cementing the intimacy by marriage with the daughter of this recreant husband, now just entering young womanhood. The man is twice her age, the father of several children, whose mother he has recently sent away. One evening the daughter was electrified by receiving a telegram from Tokyo saying: "To-night Mr. ——— will arrive in ——— and call upon you to make arrangements for your marriage with him to-morrow morning." What should she do? She and her mother consulted together and said: "We have no money; we have no relatives in another city, so we cannot run away. Shikata ga nai. (We must submit to fate.)" Afterward when calling upon her she confessed, "I am wretched. I am married to a drunkard. He lies hours every day in a drunken stupor, and when awake is very unkind." If the two men who were the "high contracting parties" should happen to quarrel the contract would become null and void, and she would be given to another. The new laws for divorce in Japan read well, but they are condemned by the nation as being "too foreign," so they are not enforced, and old customs still hold sway.

EDITORIAL CORRESPONDENCE.

Dear Union Signal:—It is important that our workers should know that Mrs. Josephine Princell, an accomplished Scandinavian lady, and Miss Kate Lunden, another Scandinavian of remarkable talent, as we all know who have read her bright articles in our native tongue contributed by her during the last few years, have united for the purpose of organizing local unions of their fellow countrywomen in the various churches where their tongue is spoken. They have met with great success, and we can assure our friends that if these ladies are invited to any town or city which has a large Scandinavian population they will achieve most helpful results in bringing that noble race into closer touch with the teetotal movement and the broad principles and outlook of the white ribbon.

Miss Lunden can be addressed at Flemington, N. J. and Mrs. Princell at 821 Ninth Ave. S., Minneapolis, Minn.

We ask the English friends who have criticised us concerning the "color line" to notice that the plan of the ladies referred to is to organize Scandinavian women in their own churches, not because we should not be glad to have them with us, but for the reason that they can be much more readily reached within their various denominational folds, and we may remark in this connection that the same is true of our colored sisters North as well as South.

It is needless to say that when these local unions send delegates to the state union, or they send delegates to the National or World's Unions, they will be received on precisely the same terms as any other delegates. This ought to go without saying by this time, but men (and women too, alas!) must be "Taught as if you taught them not

And things remembered taught as things forgot."

LEGALIZED VICE.

Dear Union Signal:—So much has been written under the above heading that a clear statement of facts seems to be demanded.

The St. Louis Evangelical Alliance had the question of social evil under consideration for some time, finally the executive board appointed the following committee: Dr. W. W. Boyd, chairman, Dr. J. Henry George, Dr. S. J. Nichols, Dr. M. Rhodes and Dr. J. W. Lee.

After carefully considering the situation, the committee decided to formulate a bill and present it to the legislature. Being near the time of the adjournment of that body, the committee decided it was not best to wait for the next meeting of the Alliance, but to act independently as individuals. With this idea in view they prepared a bill, not changing in any way the original law regarding houses of ill-repute, but simply adding a clause. The law says no disreputable house shall be kept within a certain number of yards of any church or school building. The bill prepared by these gentlemen added, "nor without a certain district to be designated by the police."

When the committee had formulated this bill, the chairman, Dr. Boyd, carried it to Jefferson City, and the rapidity with which it was passed was astonishing. The Missouri legislature is not noted for rapid work, particularly when a bill smacks of reform, but brother Boyd was received with open arms and as a public benefactor was greeted only with smiles and encouraging words. Like a flash, both houses passed the bill and it was ready for the signature of the governor.

April 20, the governor vetoed this bill giving as his reasons, first, the unconstitutionality of the measure. This is a disputed question. The committee say such a law now exists and is not unconstitutional. That this bill did not change the law and that the bill was carefully examined by lawyers of eminence and they pronounced it constitutional and proper. Then it passed the gauntlet of the judiciary committee of two houses and afterwards passed both houses.

The governor further says, the bill provides that the board of police commissioners may establish certain districts within which the maintenance of such houses shall be only a misdemeanor and that the keeping of these houses outside said districts shall be a felony. Although the statutes making the keeping of these houses a misdemeanor is not expressly repealed, it does seem that when prostitutes are compelled to reside within given boundaries there is an implied agreement that they will not be molested.

The veto was a perfect surprise to the committee who were so confident of the bill becoming a law that they made no plans except for its adoption. At the next meeting of the Evangelical Alliance the committee submitted a report. Some of the members were very much opposed to the work done by these gentlemen, and after much discussion nothing was done. So the Alliance has kept perfectly free from any complicity in the matter.

There are in St. Louis eight thousand prostitutes, more than one per cent of the population. That something ought to be done no one will doubt. That this committee used their best judgment, no one who knows them will question. The names of these gentlemen stand out prominent and clear in the community. Some of them are warm friends of the W. C. T. U., and not for worlds would we impugn their motives, but it is the old story, men legislating for women. Why must it always be so? Why were not a few women put upon this committee? We have at least one woman minister in St. Louis, why was she not invited to join in this work? The answer that comes to mind first is, this was a committee of the Evangelical Alliance. Ah, no, they were acting independently of that organization. I ask again, why is it women are always ignored? No, gentlemen, you cannot justly legislate for any class of women, and the sooner you wake to that fact the better for all concerned. You "men people" always stumble when you go alone in the home, the church or the state. You need the "weaker (?) sex," particularly when you make laws for them, and remember, please, this law does not affect men in any way except to make it easy to do wrong.

This committee had pledged fifty thousand dollars to found a home for these women who would reform. The home was to be built in the heart of this loathsome district. Again we see the near-sightedness of one sex. Any woman would know that it is impossible for these poor creatures to reform amid the sin carried on in that section of the city. They would not dare go to the window to look out. A home for reformation cannot be helpful so near the vice. These gentlemen could do much more good if they would raise that fifty thousand dollars and divide it in the homes already in existence, homes that are almost perishing for want of money.

In connection with this it will be of interest to know that the police are just now making war upon immoral theaters that are connected with saloons. The W. C. T. U. took up this fight some time ago, visited these places, brought the matter to the attention of the grand jury and had some of the proprietors arrested, tried and imprisoned, but the prosecuting officers were so lenient toward the offenders that it was difficult to do much at that time. However, the war once started has gone on, and now the police say they shall be exterminated.

CHRIST'S LAW CONCERNING MARRIAGE.

Dear Union Signal:—In your issue of April 25, Rachel Foster Avery intimates that the Bible teachings in regard to marriage permit freedom of divorce. The teaching of Christ on this subject may be found in Matthew 13:3-9. There the Saviour distinctly states that "from the beginning" the ordinance was that a man should leave father and mother and cleave to his wife; and they twain should be one flesh. Moses, indeed, legislating for a people just emerging from barbarism, permitted comparative freedom of divorce; but Christ, while stating that this was allowed "for the hardness of their hearts," reasserts the doctrine of the original institution, and lays down the principle that nothing but marital unfaithfulness can rightly sunder the marriage bond.

Mrs. Avery instances the act of Ezra in separating the Jews from heathen wives, in illustration of Bible teaching on this subject. The great mission of the Jews as a people was the preservation of monotheism in the world. They were forbidden, therefore, to intermarry with the peoples surrounding them whose religion was a most degrading idolatry.—Ex. 34:14-16. Ezra, the reformer, found among the people numbers who had contracted these illegal marriages and required a separation.—Ezra 10:10-18. Such special cases have no bearing on the Bible teaching as to marriage.

As I understand Mrs. Avery, her ideal is that the marriage relation should endure "so long as each is worthy of trust by the other." But how should this be applied in practical life? How far does the trust extend which renders marriage valid? Suppose one party continues trustworthy, and the other does not, shall both be free to contract another marriage? And who is to care for the little children sprung from these unions, when parents have ceased to trust each other? Does not this teaching practically open the way for divorce when either party wearies of the matrimonial bond? So long as men and women, both imperfect, are united in marriage, occasions of temporary alienation and distrust will arise; and if no sense of duty holds them together, there will be separations which may be the cause of lifelong wretchedness.

I do not suppose that Mrs. Avery, or those who agree with her, follow their teachings out to their logical conclusions, but I cannot think of anything more dangerous to the welfare of the home and of society. The indissolubility of marriage, except for the one crime which by its very nature vitiates the relation, is one of the strongest pillars upon which society rests. Whatever breaks down the home, hurts woman most, because she is most dependent upon home affections for her happiness. Domestic life is the source of the purest joy; but for both man and woman, it is a discipline in patience, in forbearance, in self-control. They are no true friends of the real advancement of woman who would attempt to loosen the bond of marriage or to make it anything less than the lifelong union of one man and one woman.

A STOPPING PLACE IN PARIS.

Dear Union Signal:—To the white ribbonists who are going abroad this summer I will say that you will find no more centrally located, home-like or comfortable stopping place in Paris than Miss de Broen's Mission, 205 Rue St. Honoré, which is also the W. C. T. U. headquarters. It is within five minutes' walk of the Louvre, the Tuileries, Place Vendome, Champs Elysees, Luxembourg and many other noted places.

Before going to Paris last August, I was cautioned about drinking the water, and was glad to find that a Pasteur filter was used, and that the water was perfectly pure.

The cuisine attached to the headquarters is simply delicious, and the ladies in attendance are most gracious and obliging, ready to give any help or advice to their guests. My daughter in a letter dated Paris, April 6th, says: "What a nice place this is, and so reasonable."

It will be of interest, perhaps, to know that in 1870 when Miss de Broen with some friends visited Paris, she went to Père la Chaise, the resting place of the most illustrious man that France has produced the last two centuries. They little knew what a sad spectacle they would witness. Only the night before above five hundred Communists had been shot there, and the long ditch into which they fell, one after the other, was their common grave. The dead were buried and out of sight, but what of the living? A crowd of women and children surrounded the spot, some had brought a little black cross bearing the name of the lost husband, father or son. A few were silent in their deep grief but most of them uttered cries of rage and revenge. Miss de Broen's heart was touched, as she passed among them, speaking words of comfort and pointing them to Christ, the only comforter, and seeing that she did comfort them, she decided to stay in Paris and do what she could for these miserable people, for she felt that though guilty they were not too bad for the love of Christ to reach them. Her proposal was received with surprise by her friends and many obstacles thrown in the way. The quarter where the Communists lived was not considered safe even for soldiers except in large companies, and for a lady to go and work there was out of the question. She said, "If God has put this thought in my heart, He will send the means," and the means were received in a most wonderful manner, and she established her mission at Belleville.

The situation is as lovely as the name implies, but it is associated with all that is bad in the mind of the French. It is the capital of the Commune, and men speak of Communists with bated breath. The mission was first opened for women; they received five pence for three hours' work, but they were given to understand that the chief object was to tell them about the Lord Jesus. And this was the beginning of the mission which for twenty-five years has accomplished so much for the Master. Here Miss de Broen established a soup kitchen, Sabbath and night schools for adults and children, sewing classes, a free dispensary, savings bank, a free lending library, and social and religious meetings are held in the commodious hall built there. Many of the Communists are to-day numbered among the most orderly and most pious of the inhabitants of the great French metropolis. The proceeds of the house at 205 Rue St. Honoré, are applied to the mission at Belleville, but it is largely supported by friends in England and Scotland.

MARRIAGE AND DIVORCE.

EDITORS UNION SIGNAL:—I am surprised at the sentiments upon the subject of marriage that have appeared in late numbers of THE UNION SIGNAL. To every Christian heart the words of Jesus and His apostles upon this question are conclusive. See Matt. 5:31, 32, and 19:9. Also Rom. 7:2, 3, and I Cor. 7:10–13. We are not living under the Old Testament dispensation but the "I say unto you" of Jesus is our rule of life.

How many of your readers, in the light of this word and the knowledge of the probable result upon society, should husbands and wives be at liberty to separate at any time when they might conclude "that it is not God who has joined them together," can by silence seem to give consent? I certainly cannot. The acceptance and advocacy of such a theory would be a death-blow to our usefulness, and would give our enemies an opportunity they will not be slow to improve.

Hoping THE UNION SIGNAL and the W. C. T. U. everywhere will give no uncertain sound upon this question,

I am, yours respectfully,

Union Springs, N. Y. MARY S. KNOWLES.

WOMAN SUFFRAGE IN OREGON.

DEAR UNION SIGNAL:—Last winter the legislature of Oregon enacted a law raising the "age of consent" from fourteen to sixteen years of age. Also, our last legislature by a very large majority in both houses passed a resolution submitting an amendment to the state constitution, granting woman suffrage in Oregon. This amendment must pass a second session of the legislature two years hence before it can be submitted to the people, but it is very encouraging that the present legislature passed it by such a large majority.

For three weeks past I have been attending the various county conventions of the W. C. T. U. in Oregon, and have been greatly pleased by the earnestness and activity and increase in unions and membership everywhere apparent. Oregon hopes to show an increase of five hundred members by the time of meeting of next National Convention.

Astoria, Ore. NARCISSA W. KINNEY, State Pres.

DEAR CO-WORKERS:—A letter recently received asked a question touching so vital a part of our work that it seems best to make the query the text of this week's talk. Our friend writes: "What books, papers, etc., should be admitted to our homes? Several of our young people are fond of reading fiction. What course would you advise us to pursue to save the young and awaken parents to their responsibility? What books and magazines would be helpful?"

At the bottom of every desire to read or to see or to know, is mental hunger. As the hunger of the body is satisfied, so the body grows. Plain, wholesome food in judicious quantities, taken according to need, is in the strange laboratory of the human system transformed into pure blood, which in turn builds up wholesome, vigorous, beautiful flesh. An unwholesome diet (and this usually is coexistent with lack of wisdom as to times and quantities) has exactly the opposite results. Thus, also, the mind hungers, the mind is fed, the mind is built up.

In another part of her letter our sister says: "Some sad things have happened in the past few weeks." Ah, yes! the young people had been feeding upon mental indigestibles and blood-poisoners, as witness, the result, —"sad things have happened."

May I interpolate a bit of personal testimony? As a very small child I learned how to read principally in the Bible. From it mother drew stores that satisfied my hunger and did me good. How I wondered at the child Samuel answering the Voice that called him in his sleep; how I revelled over young David watching his father's sheep and delivered out of the paw of the lion and the bear; how I cried softly to myself with my face hidden in mother's dress as she read about Jesus blessing the little children. Those readings, when I was three and four and five years of age have never lost their blessed influence over me and I can, to-day, trace my "hunger and thirst after righteousness" in great measure to my early acquaintance with God's word. But,—hidden away in the old garret was a mysterious box of books that mother said, when I inquired concerning them, "are not good for little girls." The lock was a broken one, the little girl was human, the mother was unsuspicious, and in course of time the books were read. However, by those stories of love, exaggerated fiction and feverish romance, was wrongly fed a legitimate hunger, and to-day, side by side with my love for what is best in books, and for the Book of Books, I can trace the influence of that early mental food.

It is hard to undo harm done; hard to cure a diseased body; harder yet a diseased mind. With this as other parts of work, we must begin in earliest childhood. Had the old box in the garret been locked, or better yet, its contents burned; had mother not trusted her little one until there had been built a foundation for trust, how much better and brighter would the child-mind have been. But here is the problem staring us in the face; "sad things have happened;" the minds are sick; how can we heal them?

As a union this good work can be helped along by educating mothers regarding the subtle dangers of a large per cent of our books and papers, and by furnishing in a reading room and otherwise the books needed.

What books? What papers? The question is hard to answer in detail, because of the variety of supply, and because of the variety of need. But if every conscientious mother and father would follow these rules they could easier answer for themselves:

1. Read every book before your children read it.

2. Relentlessly banish everything that in anywise winks at or seeks to pull down the precepts of that Book which is the fountain of all good.

3. Accustom the children to an open Bible. Read it aloud; read it in private; have it read aloud and in private. This will create hunger for the best.

I have made no list of books and papers here. Perhaps we can compass that another time. But in every town there are book-stores, and in most a city library. Get catalogues. Go and examine the books as carefully as you examine the food you prepare for your tender baby.

As a final word, may I ask you to read and think over Joshua 8:35 and Deut. 31:12, 13?

BY MATILDA B. CARSE.

PRAYER.—O Lord, forsake not the works of thine own hands.—Psalms 138:8.

PROMISE.—The Lord will perfect that which concerneth me.—Psalms 138:8.

How much that is beautiful and expressive of the sentiment that inspires white-ribboners to high and noble deeds is gradually taking form in and around the Temple. The little barefoot maiden holding out her brimming cup of cold water to refresh the thirsty passerby was evolved from the quick and fertile brain of Anna Gordon, and through her persistency has been embodied in costly bronze. It now stands in front of our stately Temple near the entrance to Willard Hall, the gift of three hundred thousand children to the city in which the Columbian Exposition was held. The unveiling of this beautiful work of art, so symbolic of the genius of our organization, caused a great stir in and around the Temple last week, a full description of which is given elsewhere. It will rejoice the hearts of white-ribboners the world around to know that outside the door of Willard Hall a girl's hand pours forth constantly a stream of pure water to refresh the thirsty, that whosoever will may drink, and inside the Hall a woman's voice daily emphasizes the Master's words, "If any man thirst let him come unto me and drink. The Spirit and the bride say, come. And let him that heareth say, come. And let him that is athirst, come. And whosoever will, let him take the water of lif freely."

Can any white-ribboner afford, after realizing the good that the Temple and all that it embodies mean to the building up of our great and holy cause, to wrap the mantle of her selfishness around her, and when asked to perform the small task of getting a dozen friends to give a dime towards filling a Temple Wheel, say, "I cannot do it; I have no time"? It is hard to believe that there are such women in our ranks, but, alas, it is too true; we have heard of them. It is not lack of time, but lack of true interest in that which concerns the Master's kingdom. Of such our Lord in "that day" will not say, "She hath done what she could"; rather they may fear He will say in condemnation, "Inasmuch as ye did it not," etc.

Mrs. Helen M. Stoddard, Texas' able president, has a mother worthy of such a daughter, Mrs. Esther Gerrells, Indian Gap, Tex. She is now eighty years old. We have a letter in her own handwriting, in which she says: "Please find inclosed a draft for $100, which I wish to give to the Temple fund. I have long desired to put in my mite, and this is the first money that has come into my hands for which I have not had immediate use, so I send it, greatly desiring your success in paying for the Temple." This donation does not stop this aged saint from doing anything further for the "House Beautiful." She is now as industriously at work filling Wheels as if she had sent no check. Another gift has been received which, according to heaven's arithmetic, will amount to a great sum. It is $5, given by Miss Alice Bennett, Vineland, N. J., a poor girl who earns her living by doing housework. The above sum was included in a check for $50, sent by Mrs. L. I. Jolly for the W. C. T. U. of Vineland on their $100 pledge.

Miss Ann M. Howell, Xenia, O., sends $25. She says: "I send it in the name of my honored mother, Mrs. Hannah Howell, who though surrounded for forty-five years of her life by slavery and moderate drinking, always maintained her principles against both. She has been enabled to raise three sons, who now are old men, and who have never taken a dram in their lives." Mrs. Mattie A. Thomas, Chargin Falls, O., sends a first instalment of $30 towards placing her name on the Ohio tablet in Willard Hall. She writes: "My interest in the Temple and all it represents and means to white-ribboners is not abated, although for some time unable to meet with my union, as I am temporarily stopping in Omaha." Mrs. Fannie M. Burnham, Windham, Conn., sends $25 in memory of her husband, Marvin Burnham, who, before his death, expressed a wish to aid in paying for the Temple. Mrs. M. H. Wells, Wellsville, Pa., sends $10 to be credited on the tablet in memory of Rev. Wm. Hunter, D. D.

All orders for Temple Wheels and mite-boxes and everything pertaining to the Temple should be addressed to Mrs. Matilda B. Carse, The Temple, Chicago. Send two cent stamp for either the Temple Wheel or mite-box. Money orders and checks should be made out in the name of Mr. G. B. Shaw, treasurer, and sent to our financial secretary, Miss Sara G. Johnson, Room 1111, The Temple, Chicago.

PURITY OF CHILDHOOD.

BY J. S. K.

How perfect the joy when with youthful eyes beaming,
I gathered in April the crocuses' bloom;
The fragrance of spring and its sweet music seeming
The holiest treasures from nature's storeroom.
And divine was the hope that far in the distance,
As duty and honor's clean pathway I trod,
And rising each day to a grander existence,
Each deed would be proof I was walking with God.

Those lofty ambitions, called forth by the flowers,
Were crushed by the weight of defilement and sin;
While scattered and lost, like the leaves in the showers,
Have been all the hopes fondly cherished within.
All vainly I long for some happy transition,
Which back to the roses of childhood would lead,
And restore to my soul that sacred condition
That purity brings—'twould be heaven indeed.

THE SEX BIAS OF THE COMMENTATORS.

BY MRS. JOSEPHINE BUTLER.

[Mrs. Butler, known to reformers by her great work in social purity, in an article published in The Humanitarian, expresses herself with great earnestness upon the need for the woman-touch upon Bible criticism and commentary. There is so much of wisdom in her thought that we are glad to quote freely.—Ed.]

For many years I have been deeply pained by the position of many earnest and good people with regard to the Hebrew Scriptures. There is a wide feeling of revolt against both the morality and the teaching of the Old Testament.

I think the Bible has suffered more from its friends than its foes and attribute it to two things. First, if we look back at the earliest centuries of Biblical and theological criticism and commentary, we find a continuous voice of man. The loss of that high moral tone and spiritual refinement which the voice of woman would have brought into Scriptural criticism is the first reason for the repugnance felt by many good people to-day with regard to Old Testament history. The second reason is that people do not bring to the reading of the Scriptures the good sense and discrimination, in fact, the philosophic method, which scholars bring to bear in reading any other book.

There has been a great mistake made by teachers in not impressing upon the minds of children that Bible characters are not all sinless persons, and that nowhere does divine teaching condone sin. People have been taught to reverence wholesale all the characters in Scripture. These men commentators seem to be nervously afraid of blaming their own sex in their relations with women. In all Bible commentaries, down to the latest, "The Speaker's Commentary," of which I speak with deep respect, there is, besides the exclusively masculine bias, a tendency throughout to excuse the Bible characters. Now a woman commentator would look with deeper horror upon the lapse of David, and would feel more strongly about the shabby conduct of even good men towards women. The wrong-doing or crimes of spiritually favored saints cannot be too strongly commented upon. Young people feel an impatience in reading Bible history, because they are not taught to separate in their own minds what is worthy of example from what is worthy of reprobation. I consider that this revolting and impatient spirit has been induced by the teaching of male theologians and commentators.

Take yet another instance where sex bias is equally visible—the exclusion of the Second Book of Esther from the canon. The First Book of Esther, in which the heroine seems in every way subservient to the King, living only to give him pleasure, abasing herself at his feet and trembling at approaching his presence, this is pronounced canonical. Doubtless, the learned council thought it an admirable example to set before women, but when they came to study the Second Book of Esther, in which the soul of woman rises in revolt against the drunken and licentious monarch who owns her as his chattel, they shake their heads in doubt. That part of the story must be apocryphal. And so we have that prayer of Queen Esther for herself and her people, one of the most beautiful outpourings of a woman's heart ever penned, excluded from the Scriptures:—"Thou knowest all things, O Lord; thou knowest that I hate the glory of the unrighteous, and abhor the bed of the uncircumcised, and of all the heathen." "Thou knowest my necessity; for I abhor the sign of my high estate, which is upon mine head in the days wherein I shew myself, and that I abhor it, and that I wear it not when I am in private by myself." "O thou mighty God above all, hear the voice of the forlorn, and deliver us out of the hands of the mischievous, and deliver me out of my fear."

This is Queen Esther as I feel she would have desired to be handed down to posterity. If a woman had been upon the council she would have known that to exclude the revelation of the inner life of the Queen was a grave injustice to her character. Men did not appreciate the evidence of a spirit of rebellion against unholy matrimony, and therefore, fearing, as the Persian nobles did regarding the rebellion of Vashti, that "the deed of the Queen shall come abroad unto women, so that they shall despise their husbands," these sex-prejudiced ecclesiastics consigned the Second Book of Esther to the Apocrypha.

I cannot help thinking that the dispute concerning the authenticity of the eighth chapter of St. John is due to the feeling natural to the masculine mind that Christ's act of emancipation of the woman sinner would be a dangerous precedent for women. Men would say, This is a dangerous teaching; we shall have women thinking that they can sin and not be punished. You will see a marginal reference, in the revised version, that many of the ancient authorities omit verses 8–11 from the chapter, so the revisers have placed the wonderful story of Christ and the woman taken in adultery in parentheses.

It is one of the most wonderful stories in the Bible, and how greatly we still need the application of its teaching. It is the woman whose sin is dragged to the light of day. "Master," said those Scribes and Pharisees, "this woman has been taken in adultery," and wildly they clamored for her to be stoned. But what of the man, her fellow-sinner, do they bring him to be stoned, also? Oh, no; then, as now, it was the woman who must pay. It is strange that people to-day should be asking whether sexual morality is equally binding upon woman and man, when we have the teaching of Christ so clearly defined in this incident.

I feel that the barriers are fast breaking down, and that the voice of women will in the future be heard in connection with our religious life and faith.

VISITING SHIPS IN NEW YORK HARBOR.

BY MRS. SARAH A. MCCLEES.

How to reach the men of the sea with good influences? is a question often asked. Responses are varied according to precedents of past experience. Christian men of benevolence have, for many years, looked after Jack Tar in missions and Bethels along shore. A few (a very few) of these safe harbors have been under the care and conduct of women. Seamen's Friend societies and Port societies in our large cities have taken the friendless sailor boy under shelter temporarily, furnished him clothing, books, papers, magazines and broken unto him the Bread of Life.

It would seem that nothing more was wanting to the needs of this class of men. One thing, however, has been lacking,—mother element on board ship.

It has been quite a novel undertaking (once supposed to be impracticable and improper) for women to attempt going aboard ships without escort; but many of these prejudices of the past "good old times" are giving way to the advanced thought of the present day.

If one has an object in view, such as placing books on the ship for the use of the crew, it will be needful first to gain consent of the commanding officer. By a little tact, this is easily obtained, but an answer to the question how to reach the men involves other considerations than a mere interview with the commander.

The crowded docks present the first impediment; here are to be seen all kinds of merchandise, from various parts of the world; bales of cotton and wool and jute; bags of fragrant coffee and spices; boxes of teas from India, China and Japan; some articles very malodorous, such as dried fish, with names unknown to us who are acquainted only with sea-food of choice quality.

Here we stumble over a vessel load of bananas from the West Indies, and must edge our way between them and the teams carrying away these luxuries of the tropics. From the hold of another great ship, there is hauled out what seems to be a whole quarry of the onyx stone in great blocks for manufacture. Men are busy taking into the great holds thousands of tons of various kinds of merchandise representing wealth untold, 'longshoremen, stevedores, teamsters, and sailors are hard at work with the aid of heavy machinery set in motion by steam engines that roar and puff with deafening sound.

The narrow entrances at the gateway of the dock are sometimes obstructed by the heavy teams, and women seem to be in the way. We step aside or retreat until the coast is clear, and at last reach the side of the ship.

The preliminary difficulties surmounted, and access gained to an official clothed with authority, inquiries must be instituted into the needs of each ship's crew, for reading matter; the questions asked and answered in course of conversation generally reveal the character of the seamen aboard, and give a clue to the specific quality of books required in the work of reform or culture.

Mission work, truly, is this modern ship-crusade of Christian women. It needs tact that never accepts repulse nor acknowledges defeat; suavity of manner that always wins and gains quiet, unobtrusive victories. Where there is a real, hearty interest that goes about in the spirit of the Master, "seeking to save," obstacles are accounted as trivial, in view of the grand object to be attained. From part of this aggressive movement a wise judgment would exclude very young members of King's Daughters' circles and similar organizations. There is, however, so much to be done in other directions, equally essential to the general interests of such a mission, that young ladies may well turn their attention with enthusiasm that way.

Here is a field for exercise of their special faculties and cultivated talents. Has any graduate from the high school or college a musical gift? Has she a letter writing faculty? Is she artistic in taste or practice? Her sketches can be applied by way of illustration to the cards and leaflets that delight the eye and catch the fancy of Jack Tar. Her friendly letters and stories from real life or romance in pure ideals, will enliven the monotony of his long sea voyages; her voice attuned to sacred melody or simple ballads of home will carry him above the low and sensual and prove a sacred uplifting ministry.

Besides these intellectual and moral influences which can be utilized for the sailors' benefit there is practical helpfulness in the preparation of loan libraries. The books must be selected with care, the choice being made of such as will be read with a relish by our fastidious rovers who will surely reject dry, theological treatises and eagerly devour stories of adventure. Each volume must be covered, stamped, packed and a record made of the contents of the boxes.

There is the making of comfort bags, supplying them with all the appurtenances for Jack's use in repairing his costume,—buttons, thread, pins, needles, thimbles; "mother's" letter to the boys far from home, and other little love tokens that touch the heart under the tarpaulin.

Miss Agnes E. Weston, of Davenport, England, whose home is so well known by British seamen, a woman who has accomplished more than any woman in the world for their benefit, says that "sailor boys respond to personal interest; many a strange life history has been told and many a boy has brightened up at a touch of kindly sympathy."

Among the first visits in the harbor of New York was one to a ship which came into port from London, England, bound for Australia. Going aboard, our card was taken by a gallant young fellow to the English captain, who received us in his cabin most graciously. After a few moments' conversation, he retired, and returned bringing a fine-looking, portly lady, whom he introduced as his wife. With a warmth of cordiality unknown in social life at a first interview on either side of the ocean which separates English and American cousins, the captain's wife stated the object which had brought her to our shores. Her youngest son, in a family of eight boys, had received a spinal injury in a game of football, and hoping for recuperation of his wasted vitality, she had tried the sea voyage, by advice of the family physician. She was to return with her invalid to her other sons in the London home, while her husband sailed away on the long voyage eastward. Those who are travelers finding themselves among strangers on new ground, and unfamiliar faces, may imagine the pleasure of the captain's wife in the visit of a New York lady representing a part of the large city's Christian benevolence. "For three weeks," she said, "I have been on this ship with my husband and son, not seeing the face of one of my own sex, not knowing a soul in your great seaport town." She then told of her affiliation with the Church of England in London, her charitable enterprises, and the interest she felt for the "lads" serving an apprenticeship on the good vessel.

"How much these boys need the mother-love and home influence!" she said with much fervor of spirit. "If I could only leave my own family," she continued, "gladly would I take the long sailing voyage for the sake of these homeless English boys."

The visitor, on taking leave, queried with herself, "Why should social etiquette demand merely the formal, conventional call from two to five o'clock in the drawing-room, and forbid the call upon our friends from over the sea in their floating palaces?" Shall not our city ladies go with kindly interest and hospitable greeting, to exhibit an interest for the stranger within our gates? Shall not the motherly element show itself to the sailor boys who may be wrecked on our shores by influences counteracting what they may have learned in earlier years, in far distant lands?

Los Angeles, Cal.

DEAR BOYS AND GIRLS:—There were lively times around the Temple, Saturday morning, April 27. Such a stir and bustle of merry children and grown-ups has not been seen since Willard Hall was dedicated. I'm going to tell you all about it for the event was nothing less than the long-promised dedication of Willard Fountain.

Such a happy sight has never been seen in Willard Hall, I am sure. Nearly the entire floor was occupied by the children (all our Chicago Cozy Cornerers were there, of course!) with banners and flags. Mrs. Rice, of Boston, who is superintendent of the Loyal Temperance Legion for the whole United States, was the "General of the day,' and there couldn't have been a better one.

Of course, God's blessing was asked the very first thing and then some Bible verses were read by a lady leader, the children all joining in the response. Mrs. Rice recited a fine poem, "The Captain's Well," and then gave:

HISTORY AND HOPES OF THE WILLARD FOUNTAIN.

The Woman's Christian Temperance Union, "the organized mother love" of this nation, gathering in its sheltering arms the blessed children, has trained them through these many years, not only to the personal practice of total abstinence, but also to earnest effort for the spread of its principles. It was the thought of Miss Anna Gordon, superintendent of the Loyal Temperance Legion for the World's W. C. T. U., whose prerogative it was to stand in the place that I occupy to-day, and whose absence we so greatly regret, that our Columbian year should not be allowed to pass without some memorial of the enthusiastic response of our L. T. L. boys and girls to every noble call.

What so fitting as that this memorial should be presented to the city of Chicago, which has added to all its other grand achievements its splendid entertainment of the Columbian Exposition. What so fitting as that this gift of the Loyal Temperance Legions of the world should take the form of a wayside fountain; offering to all who would receive "the blessed water—the wine of God," in place of the beverage of death dealt out by the city through its thousands of saloons!

To Miss Gordon's thought were given wings in the letters describing the plan that flew fast and far; in the hearty coöperation of national, state and local superintendents in this and other lands; in the swift feet and busy hands of the children gathering the dimes which were to multiply into upwards of two thousand dollars, for the gift must be in keeping with this magnificent city.

Our bronze maiden received her first introduction to the American public in the National W. C. T. U. exhibit in the Woman's building at the Columbian Exposition. Since then she has been in retirement, ready, at any auspicious moment, to enter upon her mission. It was expected that long ago she would have taken her place upon the busy thoroughfare, and have begun her life-work; but circumstances which could not be controlled, have hitherto frustrated the best-laid plans.

But to-day she waits just outside this hall for her introduction to you, Loyal Temperance Legioners, and to the Chicago public. We know you will give her right royal welcome, for is she not to stand during the years as your representative, her outstretched hands symbolizing the ready helpfulness of our brave young temperance army?

Is not every L. T. L. boy and girl, through her ministry, to offer the cup of cold water to all who will receive it?

Wasn't that a beautiful speech? And after applauding it heartily, the Legions joined in singing the "Cold Water Song."

Next, a bright boy, Arthur Sanford, of Evanston, came forward. He had the pleasant task of presenting the fountain to the representative of Chicago city and right well he did it. In a clear voice that could be heard in every corner of the hall, he said:

DEAR MR. MAYOR:—This beautiful little bronze maiden offering a cup of cold water to men and women, boys and girls, and inviting horses, dogs and birds to drink from the trough at her feet, represents three hundred thousand temperance boys and girls, who sing as their marching song, "Saloons Must Go," and whose banner bears the motto, "Tremble, King Alcohol, we shall grow up."

We earned the money, Mr. Mayor, that paid for this fountain, the pennies and dimes coming from many distant countries in our W. C. T. U. family, and we have named it in honor of our beloved president and white ribbon commander-in-chief, Miss Frances E. Willard.

One little girl in South Africa thought Chicago was the principal seaport of Patagonia, but she sent her pennies just the same, hoping that people would drink water from the fountain instead of whisky from the saloon.

This fountain is the children's memorial gift to the great city that so splendidly entertained the World's Fair, and, strange to say, the very first contributions that came to the fund were sent by two little girls in Spain.

London furnished the sculptor, Mr. George E. Wade; the Maine New Hampshire Granite Company in the good old Prohibition state of Maine, presented us with the granite for the base, and on the child's cup you will see the badge we so proudly wear, bearing our letters L. T. L., Loyal Temperance Legion.

Mr. Mayor, I have the honor on behalf of the Loyal Temperance Legion of the World's W. C. T. U. to present to the city of Chicago, through its chief magistrate, this fountain, and we shall pray that every cup of cold water may carry with it the blessings of God.

The mayor's representative, who was the city's lawyer, shook Arthur's hand cordially and told him he would make a good lawyer, he had advocated his cause so well! With words of praise for the work of the temperance children (and their mothers, too) he accepted the fountain on behalf of the city.

A sweet little girl with nut brown eyes and curls, dressed in white, came modestly forward. Her name was Dorothy Horning and she gave the fountain to the Illinois Humane Society with the following happy poem written by Mrs. Katharine Lente Stevenson:

PRESENTATION OF THE WILLARD FOUNTAIN TO THE ILLINOIS HUMANE SOCIETY.

Don't you think we're lots of children
All together here to-day?
Well, we're just a little handful
Of the company, they say.
For, in every land and nation
Wheresoever people dwell,
There are boys and girls belonging
To our own dear L. T. L.

We are temperance lads and lassies
And we neither smoke nor swear;
We are kind to all dumb creatures
And our hats no dead birds wear;
We believe God meant all people
To be good just everywhere,
So we try to help them be so,
Try to answer Jesus' prayer.

And we've made this lovely maiden,
Bought her with our hard-earned dimes;
She's to stand here for a witness
Through all lands and to all climes

THE WILLARD FOUNTAIN.

That old alcohol is poison;
That cold water's always best;
That God loves the little children,
Dogs and birds, and all the rest.

And, dear sir, that's just the reason
Why we give to you to keep
Our dear little bronze-faced maiden;
For we know you always speak
Out straight for the dogs and horses
And for everything that lives,
Just as this clear sparkling water
Of itself to all things gives.

Take her, then, our little lassie,
That we bought Columbian year,
You will let no harm come to her;
On that point we have no fear.
Take her, our own Willard Fountain,
You will find her staunch and true
As the great soul she is named for;
Aren't you glad she's given to you?

You ought to have heard the children clap their hands at this and wave their flags! The Humane Society gentleman looked wonderfully pleased. The first thing he said after taking Dorothy's hand was, that of all the gifts ever received by the Illinois Humane Society, this fountain and the poem were the most precious. He promised to care for the fountain, and after his remarks everybody felt sure it would be in good hands.

Of course the exercises would not have been complete without a message from the children's friend, and the one who had planned the fountain, Miss Anna Gordon, who, although absent in England, was present in spirit. The fountain's "godmother," too, the great woman beloved wherever the white ribbon shines around the world, was not present, but sent a beautiful message, part of which follows:

REIGATE, ENGLAND, April 6, 1895.

To our good friends assembled to unveil the little Cold Water Girl Fountain beside the big White-Ribbon Temple in Chicago:

We had always hoped to be with you when the earnest little maiden with her cup of blessing was set in place to do her work, and here we are four thousand miles away; but "hearts are near though hands are far," and if everybody's "top eye" was open they would see us and ten thousand others in the group in front of Willard Hall.

Perhaps the child has lived longer in our minds than anybody knows or she herself is in the least aware, for it seems many years since Anna Gordon began saying to me once in awhile as we rode on the train or in some lull from the work we had in hand: "I have never seen a statue representing a child as if it had conscience, character and love of humanity, nor have I ever seen an outdoor statue of a little girl. I think that the spirit of the white ribbon ought to be embodied in a drinking fountain where an earnest, true-hearted little child of the people and of the gentler sex stood forward with a cup of cold water offering it freely to the tired and thirsty multitude that beats its life along the stony street, and to those faithful four-footed neighbors whose comfort we are so apt to forget." And then I would exclaim: "Anna, that is a beautiful idea and so practical." The New Testament pronounces a blessing on any one who should give a cup of cold water to a little child and the outshining of the gospel of love since the day when Christ spoke these words to His disciples, could hardly be more delightfully illustrated than by having the little child give the cup of cold water instead of receiving it in the name of Him "Who came not to be ministered unto but to minister."

The story of the little girl has a moral well worthy of remembrance, and it is this: Everything good was first a thought in somebody's mind, and was loved, or ought to have been, by somebody's heart, and was finally wrought out by one or many hands. So, if we think good thoughts and determine that they shall be embodied in a noble and helpful way, and if we keep right at it—just as a carpenter keeps hammering on the head of a nail—we shall sooner or later see that thought wrought out before our eyes into the form that we desired. If every boy or girl who has helped or who reads about the fountain would determine in this way to carry out some bright purpose or helpful plan, it would be worth more to the world than all the good that will be done even by this whole-hearted little cold water girl.

Believe me, with affectionate remembrance and warm interest, Always your friend and sister,

FRANCES E. WILLARD.

After showing their appreciation of this the children were ready for the letter from Miss Gordon, which was appropriately read by Miss Melville, the editor of the L. T. L. paper, The Young Crusader. Here it is in full:

THE COTTAGE, REIGATE, ENGLAND,
April 12, 1895.

DEAR FRIENDS, BOTH GREAT AND SMALL:—It is one of the greatest disappointments of my life not to be with you at the unveiling of the little bronze maiden so generously presented to the city of Chicago by temperance boys and girls all over the world.

I have long looked forward to the day when I should see this representative of our young teetotalers standing in her sturdy strength with her cup of cold water in her outstretched, welcoming hands.

But away in the mother country we are helping prepare for the great World's W. C. T. U. convention to be held in June, and you will be glad to know that her twin sister will then be presented to London by the cold water boys and girls of Great Britain.

The figure will probably stand in front of Memorial Hall, where for many years the white-ribboners have had their headquarters, just as ours is close to the Temple.

Would it not be delightful if this same little girl with her Loyal Temperance Legion "loving cup" should be duplicated in all the countries bound together by the "winsome token" of the white ribbon!

Mrs. Rice is capable of representing not only her own admirably organized work in the United States, but the wider field as well, wherein we hear the inspiring music of "the little feet a-coming."

May I again thank all the generous young contributors who worked so wittingly and well for the fountain fund, and the kind-hearted friends one and all who in many different ways helped on the children's enterprise.

God bless the ministering children whose bonny gift shall speak of purity to every passer-by and quench the thirst of beast as well as man, of birds as well as little children, is the prayer of your friend and sister,

ANNA A. GORDON.

The handclapping ceased, and after a fervent prayer by Mrs. Carse, the Legions formed in line, marching out in the sunlight, around the block, and back to the Fountain for the unveiling. The crowd had become so great that the street was blockaded. The familiar song, "Saloons must Go," was sung, and as the children finished giving their Prohibition salute, a little boy and girl pulled the white ribbons which held the flags of America and Spain, and disclosed the beautiful Fountain from which the water began to flow. A shout went up from the people and the waving flags and banners made a glorious sight.

Mrs. Rice took the first drink and many others followed. A big team of horses drawing a coal wagon were the first animals to taste the water from the trough. The white ribbons on the cup chains were taken off and fastened on their bridles. I wonder if they realized what it meant.

So this was the way in which the Chicago white ribbon children set the Fountain running, which, dropping cold water from the bronze maiden's cup, will be a blessing and a joy forever to those who have given and to those who receive. Your

THE BUSINESS OUTLOOK.

DEAR FRIENDS:—Are you doing any effective work towards securing a "free literature fund"? Each day brings appeals to which we must say an emphatic "nay," for our "philanthropy fund" is, of necessity, devoted largely to the pleadings of poor white-ribbon women, who are suffering for the necessities of life, and yearn for the paper dearer to them than you can possibly understand, if you do not have to practice self-denial to obtain your official organ.

One devoted woman who must remain incognito, has given to the "philanthropy fund" ten dollars, and, as a result of this beneficence, the eyes of twenty hungering women grow brighter as the mail brings to them their beloved UNION SIGNAL. Sisters, you who have an abundance and to spare, could you read the piteous appeals which come to our desk, some of them from suffering Dakota and Nebraska, you would give at least one half dollar to supply a discouraged, disheartened white-ribboner with the mental and spiritual food for which she hungers almost as much as that which is vital to her existence.

But the "philanthropy fund" is not the free literature fund; the latter is per se pure and simple a fund to distribute to poor unions such literature as will enlighten, encourage and interest the members in the various lines of department work in which the National W. C. T. U. is actively engaged—to supply tracts, leaflets, pamphlets, at cost to those who would do good, but have not the wherewithal, who are filled with a burning desire to help on the temperance cause, but who are powerless from want of effective weapons. The free literature fund, which belongs to the National and not to the W. T. P. A., would enable the discriminating leaders at Headquarters to respond to calls like the following, which comes from a prisoner in the Columbus penitentiary:

DEAR MADAM:—I am very much interested in temperance work since I came to this place, having such decided chances to see that drink leads so many of us to prison. It is my idea to devote some of my time to the cause when I am free. I can get in touch with a class that as a rule your society fails to reach; yet they are brainy men, and men well worth a struggle to prevent going to ruin. If you have any old papers or books that will help myself and others, we will be pleased to get them. I can get permission to put them in the hands of ones that need them. Is there any way I can get the loan of two copies of Miss Willard's Bible Reading? I will return it if requested. Can you do anything for those who have no money, no friends, to help them on to a higher plane or better life, and who want to do so?

Yours for self and others, W. T. R.

Here's another:

DEAR SISTER:—In my work I am in great need of temperance papers and tracts. If you can send me anything gratis it will be thankfully received and distributed in the name of our Lord. ——— ———.

Can you not individually do something for this fund?

WOMAN SUFFRAGE AND THE W. C. T. U.

Shall the Woman's Christian Temperance Union as an organization espouse the suffrage cause? was once a vexed question with us. It was settled so long ago and so completely that it seems late in the day to reopen the matter; but as some of our sisters have appealed to us on the subject we will briefly review our reasons for considering the action of the National in this regard wise. The question, so far as white-ribboners are concerned, has ceased almost entirely to be one of doubt concerning the righteousness and desirability of woman suffrage itself. It is now simply, Is it best for our temperance army in its organic capacity to take up suffrage? Is it not better to keep solely to distinctively temperance work lest we alienate some who would otherwise work with us?

In answer to this, let it be said that the question had resolved itself into this before the National did take a stand for suffrage, and doubt as to the expediency of avowing our principles was all that prevented an earlier indorsement of the suffrage movement. A fair trial proved that the keep-still policy did not have the desired effect of bringing into our ranks the anti-suffragists. As has been indicated, the very large majority of our members were suffragists. They had become such as a natural and inevitable result of their temperance work. Consequently, the opposers of suffrage identified the principles of the organization with those of the majority of its members, and were quite as effectually alienated as they were afterwards when the W. C. T. U. in its organic capacity declared for suffrage.

The same is true to-day in some of our Southern states, where the state unions, desiring to keep themselves free from unpopular questions and work only along lines in which all good people can unite, refuse to indorse suffrage. Because very many, perhaps the most, of their members are suffragists and exercise their undoubted right to advocate suffrage as individuals, the anti-suffragists hold aloof from the W. C. T. U., even bitterly oppose it, and accuse its members of hypocrisy. A negative reason, then, for avowing our principles as an organization is that we gain nothing by the opposite course.

But the very fact that our women as a whole are suffragists would seem to indicate a positive reason for our position. It would seem that there is some natural connection between the two causes of temperance and suffrage. This is the case, and this is why our women are so largely suffragists. Almost without exception, our white-ribboners began their temperance work conservatives on the question of woman's place in the universe. They have become suffragists because the inexorable logic of events forced them to be. They began their work by attacking the saloon, but very soon it began to dawn upon them that they were but imitating Bridget with her mop, expending their energies in futile attempts to mop up the water with the faucet turned on at full force. They saw that it was the liquor traffic, not the saloons that must be annihilated if any permanent ends were to be reached, but immediately found that the liquor power had its hand on the mainspring of all political action, and that legislatures, courts, municipal authorities and political parties waited on its commands.

Our women used all the womanly arts which they had been taught to believe were omnipotent with men, only to find that such arts availed nothing against the money, the votes and the political power of the liquor traffic. To their sore dismay and bitter disappointment, they learned that in politics a disfranchised person is nothing but a cipher on the wrong side of a decimal point. This being true Prohibition and woman suffrage are inseparable issues, and it is clearly the simplest and the wisest course to carry out in this matter also the policy we have adopted in other matters and avail ourselves of our great organization to forward this, a cause allied to temperance.

Moreover, the very fact of our W. C. T. U. indorsing suffrage is one of the strongest arguments we can bring for suffrage. There can be no plea so powerful with conscientious people, with those who are given to candidly weighing the opinions of other conscientious people, as the fact that while woman suffrage associations, according to their own testimony and that of their opponents, worked for years with very little success in winning women themselves to the cause, a few years' work along a line of practical reform converted these same women. It is but another exemplification of the principle in accordance with which Anglo-Saxon civilization has progressed; we will not revolutionize for a mere theory, but if any man has a grievance, let him state it and we will then consider remedies.

Women could be aroused to ask for the ballot only when their real need of it became evident to them. To-day they are stating the reasons which convinced them and the sense of justice which, in spite of much wronging of others, is really strong in our race, is responding to the appeal. To most men the strongest reason for granting suffrage to women is that the foremost women of the land, those who along one line or another are devoting themselves to the uplift of humanity, are declaring that for the interests of their work it is necessary that the ballot be given to women. The best men of the land are ready to fulfill the promise constantly reiterated in the earlier stages of the suffrage movement, "when women themselves want the ballot they shall have it." We fully believe, therefore, that the temperance and suffrage questions are inseparable, that they mutually reinforce one another and, therefore, it is best that the Woman's Christian Temperance Union espouse, as it has done, the suffrage cause.

CHURCH, SCHOOL AND SALOON.

Recent investigations undertaken by Mr. James T. Dailey into the relations of church and public school with the liquor business in the city of Philadelphia, suggest a line of work for temperance reformers which we believe would result in immense gain for the cause of prohibition. If we could have a committee of investigation in each of our large cities—and our small ones, too, for that matter—who would turn the searchlight of truth upon the power behind the saloon domination we hear so much about and which is so deplored by good citizens in general and by the church in particular, it would reveal a condition of affairs as must, we believe, convert many a Christian voter from the error of his ways and prevent a multitude of sins.

Mr. Dailey is assistant foreman of the composing-room of the Philadelphia Public Ledger, and it is from the standpoint of a wage-earner that he was led to study the liquor question and to declare as a result of that study, that "the saloon was not, as had been said by a reverend gentleman from the South, the 'perspiration of a bad civilization,' but it was the very muscle and arterial blood of the serious troubles we are witnessing in the labor world." He says further: "When I began this exhaustive research it was only with the purpose of discovering who the office-holders and politicians were who were engaged in binding on our shoulders the burdens and crimes of the saloons. It was not expected that the church, the Protestant church, would be found so conspicuously in the liquor business; but as the investigation advanced day by day, names familiar in the church became unpleasantly numerous, until they began to make quite a show in numbers."

The investigation developed the fact that in Philadelphia, at least, not only church members but church officials—men whom the world regards as the church's standard-bearers—are direct supporters of the drink traffic, not merely by casting their vote and their influence for the liquor parties, but by actually signing petitions for saloon licenses. And this kind of churchanity—for it is not Christianity—is common to all denominations. Episcopalian vestrymen, Presbyterian elders, Baptist deacons, Methodist class-leaders, if they do not agree in their methods of worshiping God, seem to be united in one method at least of serving the devil. They see no inconsistency, apparently, in praying, "Thy Kingdom Come," and then going deliberately to work to prevent its coming! "There are no religious differences," says Mr. Dailey, "in the matter of signing the license petitions, for while the majority of applicants are Catholics their Protestant brethren cheerfully loan them the use of their names."

If this is the relation of the church to the saloon in the "City of Brotherly Love," it would be interesting to know what a similar investigation would disclose in New York, Chicago, and other municipalities where rum rules. When church and saloon—one standing for good, the other for evil; one the representative of God upon earth, the other the representative of Satan—join hands for the government of a nation, is it any wonder that such an unnatural alliance should produce unnatural conditions? That the system which is the offspring of such a union should be a monstrosity, a manifestation of crime and poverty and general moral deformity?

Mr. Dailey shows further how the saloon and the public school are also brought into "inharmonious harmony." He finds that one hundred and forty-six school directors signed four hundred and eleven license petitions. In one ward, out of thirteen directors twelve of them signed no less than eighty-eight saloon petitions! And who elects these school directors, these men who shape the educational policy of the coming voters and law-makers? The church and the saloon. It is easy to see why the liquor traffic fears nothing from the "opposition" of the church, why it cares nothing for the anathemas of the pulpit and laughs in its sleeve at the temperance resolutions of conference and synod and council. It is easy to see why church "temperance societies" prove ineffective and why the women of the W. C. T. U. carry on their work outside the church.

That the liquor traffic does not regard the church as its enemy is evidenced by the fact that liquor sellers often give largely to church enterprises. Their money helps to build Christian houses of worship and to send Christian missionaries to foreign lands. But we have yet to hear of a liquor seller helping to build W. C. T. U. headquarters or giving money for the dissemination of temperance literature, or contributing to the support of its round-the-world missionaries. The rum power is not afraid of the "good Lord, good devil" policy of the church; it is tremendously afraid of the do-everything policy of the W. C. T. U., for liquor men realize in far greater degree than does the average churchman that this is the policy which is turning the way of the wicked upside down and preparing "the way of the Lord."

With the affairs of government manipulated by a fusion of church, school and saloon is it any wonder that "the consuming jaws of the drink monster devour the substance of the workingmen in all our great industrial centres"? When the church enters into a contract with the powers of darkness is it any wonder that she fails to radiate light? That the truth which is to make us free—free from all discordant conditions—is not comprehended? That she lacks the vital, drawing power of the Spirit?

No matter how a man talks, if he votes with either of the liquor parties—and every political party now in the field, save one, is a liquor party—he helps to place the saloon yoke upon every department of government; the saloon policy is his policy, whether he stands behind the bar or behind the altar.

PRESIDENT'S LETTER.

II.

Reigate, April 16, 1895.

Dear Sisters and Comrades:—First of all let me say how much I admire the "Temple Number" of The Union Signal. It is a great credit to all concerned, and will do an incalculable amount of good. Happily, it is in no wise controversial. It is my observation that controversies not only do no good but much harm. If our character and record are not strong enough to carry us through we must go under, but if they are, we shall float like buoys above all the waves that can be set in motion by conflicting and discordant elements. It is easy to tear down and difficult to build. While we are engaged in doing one we shall make little progress with the other.

The position to be taken is that the Temple is already an assured success. The children's song, has all come true, and nobody is the worse for it, but all who have helped are much the better. If we never gain a cent's worth from the rentals, we have already gained the most adequate and attractive headquarters in which any reform is housed on the fair circle of the globe; in which the "real work" of helping men and women to be better is being steadily carried forward, and from our publishing house we are sending forth arrows tipped with the fire of light and love from the arsenal of reason, conscience and common sense. To the Temple fly the white doves of a well-nigh incalculable correspondence from all parts of the earth; and when the fogs lift from the financial outlooks of the present and the recent past, the Temple will be in a position to avail itself of the rising tide of prosperity that will fill up all its present nooks and corners of office room and bring in the "wherewithal" to liquidate the debt. Everybody who thinks a kind thought, speaks a good word or puts a dime into the "Temperance Wheel" helps all this to be wrought out in action.

"Brick and stone and mortar fair,

In looking over my article on the "Evolution of the Woman's Temperance Movement," in the Temple number, I regret that I did not choose a somewhat different title; for instance, "The Material Development of the W. C. T. U.," since I was obliged to confine myself to the bodying forth of the movement in the outward form of Temples and other headquarters. I would on no account overlook the fact, gladly declared by all our writers and speakers, that the scientific temperance laws now enjoyed by almost every state and territory in the Union are the invisible temple—sturdiest and greatest of all that we have reared. How Mrs. Hunt must rejoice that the New York legislature has strengthened the bill according to her wishes. It will not now be long until Georgia, Arkansas and Indiana will fall into line—especially as Indiana has now the Nicholson law from which our leaders in that state hope so much. [Since writing this I learn that Indiana has doffed the black cap and have given three cheers for the white-ribboners and our former school-ma'am comrade, quiet but effective, Miss Lodie Reed.]

Everything here looks very hopeful for the two Conventions. You have doubtless heard that two hundred or more pulpits will be open to our speakers in London and suburbs on Sunday, June 16. It has now been decided to take Albert Hall, the largest auditorium in England, holding, I think, fifteen thousand persons, and give there a great spectacular exhibition, in which there will be processions of costumed representatives of all the different countries where the W. C. T. U. is organized, each of these processions carrying its own national banner and marching in one after the other while the various national airs are rendered by the band. An impression of the extent of the movement will thus be visually presented.

There will also be processions of the various temperance societies in their regalia and a choir of young women wearing broad white sashes over dark blue costumes, and a choir of four hundred children now being trained by Mr. Cowley, superintendent of music of the London public schools. To hear all these fresh young voices sing,

"There are bands of ribbon white Around the world, around the world," will be enough to quicken the blood of age. How I long to have Mrs. Thompson, of Hillsboro, Mother Stewart and other great Crusaders present then and there.

The beautiful and plaintive hymn which will perhaps embalm the memory of our beloved Mary Lathrap longer than her splendid speeches even, will be sung by a group of children from the slums:

"There's a shadow on the home," and responded to by a marching procession of white ribbon children advancing with spirit along the aisles while they sing:

"We are coming to the rescue."

There will be limelight views of the Temple and other famous headquarters in various parts of the world, of the leaders and of the Polyglot Petition which will itself be present, the central object on the great platform. There will be speeches by our leading men and women and many other features to which I have not space to refer. Indeed, when "our folks" gather from various lands and witness the result of the preparations that are being made with so much intelligent devotion, I think they will say with the Queen of Sheba, "the half was never told."

I am glad that the American contingent, which will be by far the largest, is to have such a good send-off in the form of a reception tendered by the New York W. C. T. U., by the proprietors of the New York Voice and Prohibition Park. Probably there are others who will have something to do with the project, and for all I know other temperance forces of Gotham will combine, but, however that may be, the occasion is sure to be one of the most historic ever witnessed in our country. Can we not induce our Canadian sisters to unite and come with us—i. e., attend the New York reception and make the voyage in company?

Did I mention that Dr. Lunn has kindly complied with my modest request that he should bring our "Poly Pet" from New York to Southampton in the ship with the white ribbon pilgrims? He reports that the numbers are constantly increasing, and we take heart of hope that as the days approach more and more of our good brothers and sisters will perceive the remarkable advantages of being in London at a date when so much that is of interest to reformers will be concentrated there for the first and last and only time.

Mrs. Josephine Butler will be with us at the convention though she has never recovered from the severe attack from which she suffered a year ago in Italy. She is not strong enough to speak to large audiences, but will endeavor to meet groups of our most earnest purity workers, that she may give them the benefit of the knowledge and experience that have come to her in this quarter of a century of devoted study and self-sacrificing toil. This will probably be the last public opportunity of meeting one who truly merits the name of the Joan of Arc of the nineteenth century.

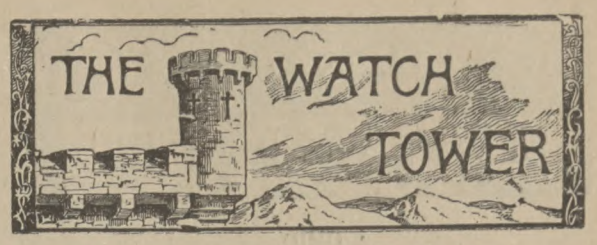
We are all wishing that General Neal Dow and his daughter could come over, although it seems too much to hope at his age. He is wonderfully beloved here and I think that no person on the face of the earth would receive so enthusiastic a welcome from the great hosts of temperance reform.

My hand-book for white-ribboners is well under way, and we expect to have it ready for the convention. Anna Gordon has her third number of the "Marching Songs" well started, and it will soon be ready for publication, so that some of its choice new melodies may be heard, I hope, at the National W. C. T. U. Convention in Baltimore next October. From all accounts we are going to have a delightful meeting there, and certainly our memories of the beautiful hospitalities that we experienced in the Monument City in 1878, make us more than glad to go back again to our comrades of the South.

With what heavy losses have we not met this year; in this pathetic aspect it has no rival. That beautiful woman of matchless faith and fortitude, Mrs. Ella F. M. Williams, of Montreal, treasurer of the World's W. C. T. U., and that reformer, whose zeal was like a fire in the bones, William Jennings Demorest, of New York, founder of the medal contest, have been added to the sacred roll-call since I wrote last; and now comes to me the announcement that our beloved friend and neighbor, Rev. Dr. Henry B. Ridgeway, of Evanston, has passed onward. The cables multiply that bind us to the better and enduring world.

Yours, in loving comradeship,

Frances E. Willard



"The modest, sensible and well-bred man
Will not insult me, and no other can."

A remarkable case has just been brought before the Massachusetts state board of arbitration which On Duty readers will not fail to appreciate. It is virtually a case of boycott against Congregationalists because of the earnest work of the pastor of that denomination at Medford in the enforcement of the liquor law of the state. By reason of this agitation a hotel was obliged to close. A certain New York firm (the resident member of which was personally interested in the hotel) has since discharged thirty of its employés, the only reasons given being that they attended the Congregational church, supported the pastor's anti-liquor campaign, or traded at stores owned by Congregationalists! The situation is not without parallel and the action of the board is awaited with interest.

The Chicago Interior (whose veteran editor, by the way, has just received an unprecedented mark of esteem from his religious co-workers in the celebration by banquet of his twenty-fifth anniversary in connection with that paper) claims to adhere "with absolute fidelity to all truth, in facts as well as in doctrine." This sweeping claim is verified on another page of the same issue in its reply to the query of a correspondent:

"Are women eligible to office in the Presbyterian church?"

"No. When the Assembly met in Pittsburg the last time the Rev. Mr. See was censured for allowing a woman to speak in his church. We expect the women to raise the money, do the work, keep up a respectable show of numbers in the prayer-meeting, while we hold the offices and do the talking."

On Duty thinks there is more truth than poetry in this.

Pitiful is the plea of the Massachusetts opium smoker, Li Sam, who spoke before the assembly of Chinese opium smokers against the proposed prohibition of that drug: "People who do not smoke will never know a smoker's troubles. I had the habit grow into me for the past thirty-seven long years. I have tried and tried again to stop smoking, but my strength failed me. At last I gathered up my nerve to try again for the last time. I decided if I failed to do what I pledged, I would—die a fiend. Two weeks ago to-day I stopped smoking for twenty-four hours. My dear fellow-men, there are not enough words in Confucius' dictionary to tell you how I felt. I had rather have all the devils in the great hell torment me than to take the right of smoking away from me. We smoking men do not ask the people to encourage us, but we would ask the public pity."

A superintendent of a New York hospital says: "Tobacco has done more to precipitate mind into the vortex of the insane than spirituous liquors."

The Union Signal was in error wherein it stated that our dear Cherokee friend, Mrs. Jane Stapler, president of the W. C. T. U. in Indian Territory since its organization in 1883, was with us at but one of our Conventions. She was present at Cleveland last autumn, at Boston in 1891, and at Denver in 1892, where she made a deep impression on Lady Henry Somerset, who regarded her, as we all must, as a true mother-patriot and statesman. About ten years ago Miss Willard was in her home in Tahlequah. There was then no railroad, and she made the journey by wagon, finding a beautifully situated town with a large educational institution for Indian girls just completed as an offset to one for boys, which had been founded a generation earlier. Mrs. Stapler was the Lady Bountiful of the tribe, having been daughter and wife of a chief. Her sons were accomplished young men and merchants, married to white ladies of high standing. But no face was so kind, no hand so helpful, no heart so deep as that of Mrs. Stapler, to whom the poor turned as an embodied providence, and who never sent any empty away. She was truly one of whom it could be said as an everyday matter of fact:

"None knew her but to love her,
Nor named her but to praise."

On Duty.

OHIO.

MIDYEAR EXECUTIVE MEETING.

The midyear meeting of our state executive committee and superintendents of departments was held in Upper Sandusky, March 27 and 28. Twenty-four members, including the four general officers, were present. The first half day was given to a consecration service and Bible reading, led by our state and National evangelist, Mrs. R. J. Trego. It was a meeting of great spiritual power and at its close we felt that the Holy Spirit had prepared our hearts for the business that was to come before us. Several members spoke of the spiritual strength always derived from our executive meetings, and of always receiving a message at these meetings to carry home to the church.

Our "Home" and chapel at Lakeside are to be open for the summer with Miss Emma L. Goodwill, of Canton, as matron. Our school of methods to be carried on there is in charge of our state president, Mrs. Monroe.

Mrs. H. E. Hammond, editor of the Ohio W. C. T. U. Messenger, gave a fine financial report, stating that all bills were paid and there was one hundred dollars in the bank to the Messenger's credit. The devotional exercises at the opening of each meeting were very strengthening spiritually, and the music, led by our state recording secretary, Miss Pollock, who has a voice of rare beauty and cultivation, and is an expert pianist, was really a delight.

The executive decided that a district or county president must reside within the district or county she is elected to serve, and that no woman can fill the offices of both district and county president.

The work of the purity department was forcibly presented by Mrs. Dora Webb, state superintendent, and the executive decided to urge the passage in our legislature of a bill to raise the age of consent to eighteen years. The bill formerly introduced in Ohio by Senator Iden was strongly recommended by Helen H. Gardener, of the Arena, and was indorsed by our committee, subject to such revision as our superintendent, Mrs. Webb, deems best.

The Winn law was highly commended by Mrs. Webb and others, who have seen its efficiency thoroughly tested in our cities. This is a law defining houses of prostitution and forbidding the sale of liquors therein. It was decided to push this law vigorously. The circulation of "Child Confidence Rewarded," "Teaching Truth" and "The Mother's Friend," Dr. Allen's new monthly, were highly recommended. Mrs. Monroe distributed twenty copies of "America's Shame" among the members of the committee.

At eleven o'clock on Thursday morning Mrs. Trego again gave us a very helpful Bible reading on the 54th Psalm and the 22d verse of the 55th Psalm. She made very clear the kind of burdens we can cast on the Lord, and showed clearly the kind we may not thus cast on Him.

Quite a discussion followed a motion to ask our legislature for municipal suffrage for women. It was amended to read full suffrage, and was then referred to our state superintendent.

Under discussion of juvenile work Mrs. Wisner, superintendent, urged that district presidents give special attention to the formation of normal classes for the training of leaders for Loyal Temperance Legions. Emphasis was also given to the advantage of urging young people to work for diplomas and seals in this department.

Mrs. S. M. Perkins, superintendent of infirmary work, made a stirring appeal for more aggressive work in this department, urging not alone religious services, but careful investigation of the condition of patients and the correction of neglect and abuses, such as she finds in many of these institutions.

Mrs. Trego recommended very highly Miss Greenwood's little book, "Hints and Helps for Evangelistic Workers," as of great value to local workers.

Our president, Mrs. Monroe, gave us a very touching account of the sickness and death of her beloved daughter, which aroused the most earnest sympathy of each one present. She spoke very feelingly of the Captain of our Salvation who was made perfect through suffering. Mrs. Monroe's loss cannot be expressed nor estimated, and she is greatly prostrated, physically, by the sorrow she is passing through, but in it all Christ has been to her a refuge and strength. His grace is sustaining her as nothing else could.

Two public evening meetings were held, the first addressed by our state vice-presidents and the second by our state superintendents. Both of these meetings were very entertaining, bright and instructive, displaying great diversity of talent among our speakers. The music was furnished by a choir of young people from the Good Templar Lodge and was an attractive feature of the program. Miss Pollock gave us a beautiful solo.

Our annual thankoffering service will occur June 17, the anniversary of the organization of the Ohio Woman's Christian Temperance Union, for Ohio had adopted this name six months before the National union was organized.

Our entertainment in Upper Sandusky was so cordial and generous that it was with great reluctance we bade our friends good-by.

COUNTY CONVENTIONS.

Brown county met at Russelville, March 26. The day was fine, the sunshine warm and bright, and by contrast with our long cold winter, cheered the hearts of the white ribbon people everywhere, making them eager for an early start to their county meeting. Long before the hour fixed arrived, the Presbyterian church, the largest in the town, was filled with an interested company of women and men. Before the meeting opened the band came and gave quite a concert in front of the church. The people went outside and Miss Boyer, county president, made them an excellent speech.

The morning meeting was full of interest, and at the afternoon and evening meetings there was no standing room left in the church. The ladies of Russelville served both dinner and supper at the church and a social hour was much enjoyed. In every particular the convention was a success. The discussions were lively and to the point and the women were prompt in taking part. A good choir sang stirring temperance songs.

The address of the evening was made by Rev. J. E. Abrams, of Ripley; subject, "Where are the Young Men?" It will not soon be forgotten. A local union of twenty-two members was organized and promises good work.

Hamilton county's semi-annual convention, held in the headquarters of the Central W. C. T. U. of Cincinnati, 83 W. 9th street, had representatives present from every W and Y in the county. The attendance was unusually large. Devotional exercises were conducted by Mrs. McGrew, of Forestville, and Mrs. Tucker, of Carthage. After the appointment of committees a Crusade hour followed. Nine Crusaders were present. Interesting talks were made by Mrs. Nixon, of Indian Hill, who was identified with the old Johnnie Robinson Crusade, and Mrs. Norton and Mrs. Woolman, of Walnut Hills. Mrs. Louise F. McDonald, of the latter union, read a paper on "The Results of the Crusade."

Devotional exercises of the afternoon, led by Mrs. Dr. Whallen, of Wyoming, were followed by a talk to the newly made women voters by Mrs. Sarah C. Shrader, of Cincinnati. It gave them much valuable information. A paper on "Scientific Temperance," prepared by Mrs. D. W. White, of Price's Hill, was read, also "Plans of Work," by Mrs. Rosetta Mercer, superintendent of the franchise department.

Dr. Mary Booth, on behalf of the Central Union of Cincinnati, invited the county union to share the Central's headquarters until such time as they felt able to secure rooms for themselves. The invitation was accepted, with the privilege on the part of the county of contributing a nominal sum to the rent. A petition addressed to the State General Assembly asking that the age of consent be raised from fourteen to twenty-one years was read, and it was resolved that copies of this petition be circulated by the local unions. Mrs. Mary Cottrell, the president of the county union, was not able to be present at this meeting, and Mrs. Alma C. Davis, corresponding secretary, presided.

WORK IN BELMONT COUNTY.

Miss C. S. Burnett recently closed a very successful series of temperance meetings at St. Clairsville. They began with a Sunday evening union service, subject, "The Moral and Religious Aspect of the Temperance Cause"; Monday evening she took up "The Problem of the Day and its Solution"; Tuesday, "How to Save Our Boys"; Wednesday, "Woman's Part in the Temperance Work"; Thursday, "The Bright Side of a Dark Picture." She handled each subject in a clear, logical, convincing manner, carrying her increasingly large audience with her from step to step. The union reports these meetings a great success financially and every way. The old members have had their zeal quickened and ten new ones have been added. A large L. T. L. has been organized, and placed in charge of a most competent leader. Great good was done in the community by the presentation of so many different aspects of the temperance question, and a result of the agitation was that the town voted in favor of banishing the saloons at a local option election that week. Miss Burnett has also been at Martin's Ferry, Bridgeport, Colerain, Loydsville and Bellaire, "working like a steam engine day and night," as our women write. Bridgeport had Miss Burnett a week before their school election. Last year at this election 135 votes were cast. This year two women entered the field as candidates, and the vote polled was 985. One woman was elected on the board. In four weeks Miss Burnett has given nineteen temperance lectures, three on narcotics, two on equal suffrage and a popular lecture twice. She has also in that time addressed one Epworth League, one missionary meeting, two Sunday-schools and ten public schools on the effects of alcohol and narcotics on the body. She has also held six day meetings.

PERSONAL.

Our state superintendent of franchise, Mrs. Louisa Southworth, of Cleveland, has spent the winter and spring in St. Augustine, Florida. She writes that her health is much improved and she will return home in May. She has kept watch of the school ballot in Ohio with interest and thinks it very satisfactory. Her youngest daughter has written her that the most remarkable thing that has happened in her absence is that she (the daughter) has voted before her mother. So the world moves. Mrs. Southworth will return home with renewed strength for the franchise work.

Rev. Henrietta G. Moore, of Springfield, was elected to the school board of that city on the Prohibition ticket. She was a successful teacher in Ohio for many years and her election is a victory for woman and education.

Just after sending our last letter we learned of the death of Mrs. B. P. Sears, of Bowling Green, president of Wood county for many years, and one of the most loyal and interested white ribbon women in Ohio. Deep sadness is felt everywhere where she was known that our cause has lost so earnest a leader. May God raise up a standard-bearer in her district and county to lead her women on. She will be greatly missed.

Antoinette H. Clevenger,
State Reporter, Wilmington.

COLORADO.

NEWS FROM BEYOND THE PLAINS.

It is with some hesitancy I write my "April" letter, having received but two reports from local unions outside of Arapahoe county. May I say just here, that only as each "sister," loyal in her own little corner, shall pass along the reports of the work done, can we hope to keep in touch with the great and ever progressing achievements of our beloved white-ribbon army.

At the recent meeting of our state executive there was an impetus gathered for renewed faith and more determined effort. Realizing our own weakness and the unlimited resources of our Heavenly Father, I believe every member felt to obey the command found in Malachi 3:10: "Bring ye all the tithes into the storehouse," etc. A distressing feature, and one which calls for prayerful consideration, is that in regard to political differences. Must we not be "wise as serpents and harmless as doves," even while we stand firm to our convictions as individuals, striving to win for our cause by gentleness and unwavering example, rather than by harsh words of criticism or reproof?

From Delta comes the cheering report that at the late election, through the untiring efforts of the W. C. T. U. the no-license ticket was carried; hence for another year the saloon must stay out. Notwithstanding "hard times" considerable money has been collected and promptly paid into the state treasury. Mothers' work with helpful literature is also exerting its immeasurable influence for good.

From Boulder encouragement extends to all since the railroad officials courteously invite the presence of temperance literature by allowing a rack to be placed at the station, and it is well supplied with ammunition. One day each week a part of a column in the daily (Populist) paper is given to the W. C. T. U., while in unison with the Ladies' Relief Corps and another society, plans are being perfected for the best equipped reading room in the county. The Temple Wheel is also going its round with gratifying results.

ARAPAHOE COUNTY CONVENTION.

I feel a just pride as I write of the sixth annual convention held April 11. A new and beautiful church in the Highlands was tendered us for this meeting. A goodly number of delegates and visitors were present, a profusion of potted plants lent their cheering influence, and just at the side of the desk a life-like picture of Miss Willard looked upon the assembly. The day was one of Colorado's loveliest, and after the devotional exercises the convention was called to order by the president, Mrs. M. A. Cassell. The utmost good feeling prevailed throughout the day, and as the superintendents read their reports fresh courage was gathered for the ensuing year.

One of the county unions reported a fivefold increase in financial receipts, while another had raised three times as much money as in the previous year. All had a very creditable showing; this in face of so great financial depression as has pended all through the year is certainly very remarkable and equally commendable. At the noontide prayer a sweetly solemn and impressive atmosphere pervaded the entire company. After a basket luncheon the afternoon session was opened with devotional exercises by Rev. David Tatum (the Quaker evangelist).

Surely these conventions tend to unite more closely the hearts and purposes of all who are privileged to attend; and when the evening service was concluded it was with happy memories of a delightful day that all turned their steps homeward.

With ten county unions in good working order, representing twenty-five departments, each under the care of a superintendent, it would be impossible in limited time and space to enter in the details of this varied work. In unison they held a birthday social (on March 28 at the home of one of the members) at which time an interesting program was presented and nearly fifty dollars added to the county treasury. Any one not desiring to contribute the number of pennies which counted their years, were permitted to place one dollar in the "tiny golden sack" with the assurance no questions would be asked.

A public meeting of special interest was held by the Brainard union, early in March, when among other good things the following eight reasons were given why every Christian man and woman should belong to the W. C. T. U.:

1. Because in this age comparatively little can be accomplished without thorough and complete organization.

2. Because the W. C. T. U. is thus organized; and includes in its departments every phase of the temperance reform.

3. Because its express purpose is the entire destruction of the greatest foe Christianity has ever had.

4. Because the church, though hating and fearing this foe, has no systematic or adequate plans for its overthrow.

5. Because if every Christian belonged, the drink curse would be doomed.

6. Because the evangelization of the world would be hastened a thousand fold.

7. Because if these things are true, those who do not come up to the help of the Lord in this terrible war must be guilty of the blood of lost souls.

8. Because those who do help will share in that blessed verdict, "Inasmuch as ye did it to one of the least of these, my brethren, ye did it unto me." (Matt. 25:40.)

That the eyes of the world are upon us was clearly proven when the state superintendent of public instruc-

God hasten the day when from mountain and plain,
Prohibition's glad triumph we all shall proclaim.
For our youth of the future we covet and claim
Temptation removed—shall we seek it in vain?

Oh, no; since in most states we now have a rule
That temperance instruction come into the school.
All honor to her by whose effort this came,
Generations unborn shall reëcho her name.

PENNSYLVANIA PEN POINTS.

We hope most sincerely that each superintendent of press work and corresponding secretary in the counties mentioned in the May Bulletin letter written by your humble servant, will pay special attention to the request made, and hasten to comply. We want to know of the actual work done by the unions.

McKean county held its twenty-fourth semi-annual county convention at Custer City, April 18, 19. A very fine program was carried out. Mrs. Louise S. Rounds was the speaker of the last evening, and pleased all with her lecture. A new Y. W. C. T. U. was organized in Smethport, on April 15, by Miss Adda Burch. This union has taken up parlor work as one of its special departments. Smethport W. C. T. U. is an active union, it having held five silver medal Cooper contests since the holidays; it has added one new member to its roll, and an excellent sermon on Sabbath observance was preached by the Rev. J. W. Sanborn, of the Methodist church; it is now preparing to hold the second union temperance meeting.

MERCER COUNTY.

Millbrook W. C. T. U. held a franchise contest on Friday evening, April 26. Sharpsville W. C. T. U. is holding a series of gospel temperance meetings monthly. Fifty signed the pledge at the first meeting. Mrs. Anna Belle M. Holvey was present at the anniversary meeting held by the Sharon union, and made a fine address on that occasion. She also lectured the following evening on "The Wedge of Gold."

Mrs. Holvey lectured at Greenville and Sandy Lake for the benefit of the temperance unions there.

Rev. Dr. Fradenburg, pastor of the Greenville M. E. church, has begun a series of temperance sermons, which are highly spoken of.

Salem Loyal Temperance Legion held a very enjoyable and well attended temperance meeting.

PHILADELPHIA COUNTY.

Tuesday evening, April 9, the members of the West Philadelphia union, with a number of friends, took possession of their new headquarters at 3824 Lancaster avenue, and held a devotional meeting. Madame Layah Barakat gave a Bible reading. The state president of New Jersey spoke a few words of congratulation. Mrs. Russell, the president of the union, made all welcome.

This union has twenty-three departments, which are all doing active service. Mrs. K. D. Hauk is their efficient superintendent of press work, and let me echo the wish that there were more like her.

The first Philadelphia Y has had the honor of having Miss Frances Willard and Lady Henry Somerset address them. We would be very glad to hear from Philadelphia county press superintendent more fully as to work done in her county.

LUZERNE COUNTY.

The semi-annual convention of Luzerne and Lackawanna counties was held in the Methodist church of West Pittston; Mrs. Dr. Hand and Mrs. C. H. Cool, the respective presidents of these counties, presided. Mrs. Louise S. Rounds gave a Bible reading, parliamentary drill and a fine lecture.

Kingston W. C. T. U. is holding very profitable mothers' meetings, of which Mrs. A. B. Tyrell is the superintendent.

Kingston Y. W. C. T. U. held a pleasant reception recently, at which a pleasing program was well rendered. Mrs. H. W. Palmer, of Wilkesbarre, who always captivates her hearers, gave a delightful address. About two hundred were present, to all of whom some excellent refreshments were served.

Mrs. A. S. Benjamin, of Michigan, filled a number of appointments in this county, and pleased the workers so well that she was engaged to return in May to fill several dates. Mrs. C. H. Chamberlin has been appointed special reporter for this county to THE UNION SIGNAL correspondent.

NORTHUMBERLAND COUNTY.

At the county executive meeting, which was held in Potts Grove, the union of that place gave a dinner to the members and visitors present, and it was unanimously voted that the county unions observe Memorial Day by decorating the graves of deceased members with our badge, the white ribbon, together with flowers, and it was decided the superintendent of the flower mission department take charge of the decorations in each union. The last annual convention was held at Watsontown, and was well attended. Miss Margaretta Watson was reëlected president.

A committee with a number of the delegates visited the cemetery and decorated the graves of their departed sisters with the flowers that had decorated the church.

Most of the unions have been working vigorously to secure a long list of signers to the petitions for closing saloons on Memorial Day. One union secured three thousand, and another over two thousand names.

Watsontown union have been doing some hard work to prevent the establishment of a wholesale liquor store there, and the towns of Northumberland, Montandon and McConnell each kept a beer bottling establishment from gaining a foothold in their towns.

Milton union has distributed over one thousand packages of literature at the fair. This union paid the county president a visit and held a conference. The social department is not being neglected in this county.

A musical and lunch social was held by the Milton union at the residence of Miss Mary Falls. The Milton glee club furnished the music which was very much enjoyed.

ALLEGHENY COUNTY.

The regular quarterly convention of this county was held in Allegheny recently. The morning session was devoted to hearing the reports of superintendents. One of the most interesting features of the program was the woman's suffrage symposium which was part of the afternoon's program. Mrs. A. F. Bryce, Mrs. C. O. Page, Mrs. E. W. Gormley and Miss Lee Anna Starr, and each address was very ably discussed—after which Attorney Koethan, of Wilkinsburg, gave a fine address on "The Ballot-box and What it Will do for Woman." Mrs. Wilkenson, of Bellevue, read an excellent paper on "Beer Drinking," and Mrs. R. C. Wylie, a well prepared paper entitled, "The School of Methods." Chaplain Bradly, of the county work house, made a fine address on "The Home or Saloon, Which?"

LAWRENCE COUNTY.

Mrs. Anna Belle Holvey spent three weeks in this county, everywhere delighting large audiences. This is her third tour in that county and her work there received such indorsements as these: "She is the best woman lecturer I ever heard," and "If such words don't make temperance sentiment, what will?"

WESTMORELAND COUNTY.

Greensburg Y's are working to secure funds to erect a public drinking fountain at a cost of three hundred dollars.

FRANKLIN COUNTY.

Chambersburg union had Miss Ida Hultin deliver her lecture on "The Crowning Race" and was greatly pleased with it.

I am yours for service,

KENTUCKY.

NOTES OF PROGRESS.

The Glasgow W. C. T. U. is coming to the front, as the last report from there says they have nearly doubled their membership in the last three months. Will not the other unions in the state follow their good example? They had Mrs. Helen M. Barker, treasurer of the National W. C. T. U., March 18 and 19. They secured her for the 18th only, but the gentlemen were so delighted with her, they insisted on having her for another lecture, and in spite of a pouring rain she was greeted by a good audience on the 19th. In the afternoon she spoke to ladies only and made a deep impression, as was indicated by their earnest faces and tears in many eyes. As the result of her work sixteen active and three honorary members were added to the union. Much interest was aroused in W. C. T. U. work and many men converted to woman's suffrage. It is needless to say her talks were a great feast to the workers.

The Glade W. C. T. U. at Berea, reports that they have kept up their meetings during the winter, which is no small thing, as the members live in the country and the weather has been so cold and disagreeable. They have had two public meetings and were preparing to have a third, under the special care of the franchise department. This month they take up the juvenile work for the summer, as is their custom.

Mrs. M. M. Givens, state superintendent of juvenile work, sends me the following: "The Eddyville Loyal Temperance Legion deserves special mention. The superintendent, Miss Clara B. Blair, wishing to make a visit in Ohio, tried to get a leader for the children during her absence. Failing in this, it was decided to hold the regular meetings, the superintendent conducting them by mail. Each week the minutes are sent to her. The children are too much interested and in earnest to omit the meeting even temporarily."

Mrs. Henrietta Skelton organized a W. C. T. U. at Ludlow, March 23, of sixty-four members, forty-three active and twenty-one honorary.

A reception was given March 21 at the First Baptist church, by the Covington W. C. T. U. to the Sunday-school workers, four hundred in number, which was a great success.

The Owensboro W. C. T. U. has held one gospel prayer-meeting, and intends holding one each month. The L. T. L. gave an entertainment not long since, which was greatly enjoyed. Sam Jones will begin a meeting there in May.

A moral wave is sweeping over Paducah. The evangelist, W. P. Fife, held a series of meetings there, which resulted in great good. They are to have Mrs. Snell the first of May. They have the hearty coöperation of the ministers and the Christian people of the town.

I am glad to say Kentucky has half of the five hundred new members asked from each state before the 20th of next September.

The Lexington W. C. T. U. has just sent fifty dollars to the state treasurer for the work of the organizer. We were very glad to welcome home a few days ago our local president, Mrs. Frances E. Beauchamp (state organizer), from a seven weeks' trip in Florida and Alabama. She conducted the school of methods at the Florida Chautauqua, De Funiak Springs, and spoke many times in Alabama, adding one hundred to their state membership.

News in a Nutshell.

BRIGHTON, Ill., has a new Loyal Temperance Legion, the result of Miss Wintringer's visit.

OWING to pressure of official business, Mrs. Morrow, the efficient president of West Virginia W. C. T. U., has retired from the editorial staff of The Corner Stone.

ANY reader of this paper who has a copy of THE UNION SIGNAL of June 2, 1892, will confer a great favor on the managing editor by sending it to Room 1105, The Temple, Chicago.

A TOUR west is being arranged by Mrs. Marion B. Baxter, to begin the first of June. The route will be from Chicago to Minneapolis and to Spokane. Unions desiring her will address her at 1115, The Temple, Chicago, Ill., or at Harvey, Ill.

ILLINOIS' superintendent of penal and reformatory work, Miss Lizzie M. Mason, of Joliet, has issued a helpful eight page leaflet with practical suggestions for local workers, which should be a light to the path of the uninformed on this most important work.

AN enthusiastic temperance meeting among the Swedish people of Worcester, Mass., was recently held by Mrs. Princell and Miss Kate Lunden, both National W. C. T. U. workers among Scandinavians. They were aided by Mrs. Cecelia Gondret, a sweet soprano singer who accompanies Mrs. Princell, and whose Swedish temperance songs delight the people. A Swedish union will soon be formed as a result of the well planned effort.

MRS. MARION H. DUNHAM, president Iowa W. C. T. U., writes: "The reason Iowa has not been heard from of late is not because nothing is happening here, but because our state reporter, Mrs. Clara White, has been engaged in the care of her mother. The latter, after a long illness, has just passed away, at the age of eighty-eight. She was a beautiful woman of earnest Christian character whose faith and zeal never wavered. Mrs. White is quite worn out, but after a little will be able to take up her work again. She is one of the 'true and tried.' I will only add that the work in the state is progressing well and we expect to be one of the states having the 'benefit night' at Baltimore."

PRESS WORK.

Dear White-ribboners:—The most conspicuous and universal heralds of the summer season are the advertisements of root beer. Investigations made and published in the National W. C. T. U. Bulletin last summer proved by the testimony of its friends that it is an alcoholic drink, and therefore to be opposed by white-ribboners in every way possible. To aid in the education concerning the real nature of this insidious disguise of our enemy alcohol, it is my desire to publish the last of this month another special Bulletin on the subject. I will be grateful for any well authenticated items which may help warn the people against its enticements. Please send to me by May 25. If any unions desire extra copies for distribution will they please order by that time? Price fifty cents per hundred.

ANNOUNCEMENT.

CONVENTION CALLS.

The twenty-first annual convention of the Michigan W. C. T. U. will be held in Battle Creek, June 4–7. Mrs. Katharine Lente Stevenson will be present, and give one of the evening addresses.

Mrs. A. S. Benjamin, Pres.
Mrs. Julia R. Parrish, Cor. Sec.

The thirteenth annual convention of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union of West Virginia will be held in Fairmont, June 4–6, sessions opening at 2 p. m., June 4. Executive committee meeting Tuesday morning at nine o'clock.

N. R. C. Morrow, Pres.
M. Kate Ebert, Cor. Sec.

The thirteenth annual convention of the Oregon Woman's Christian Temperance Union will be held in the Baptist church of Roseburg, May 15–17, inclusive, the first session opening Wednesday at 9 a. m. The state executive committee will hold a session the preceding day at 7:30 p. m. It is earnestly hoped that each local and county union, especially in Southern Oregon, will have their full quota of delegates present at this convention.

Narcissa W. Kinney, Pres.

Cor. Secy's Notes.

Questions have come from several of the World's delegates and from state corresponding secretaries as to credentials for the World's convention. No instruction has been received from the World's officers as to this matter and therefore, I suppose the plan followed will be that adopted at the National convention, viz.: that each delegate shall carry her individual credentials, signed by her state officers, and the full list will be made out at the convention itself where it will receive the endorsement of the World's officials. Three of the National officers will be present there who can certify to the list if necessary.

It is sad to think that from this third World's convention two of the general officers must be absent. Mrs. Williams' death following so quickly upon Mrs. Woodbridge's is a great blow and it is indeed difficult to realize how the loss can be made good. She was a woman of unusual endowment and rarely fitted for the position she held. The World's loss is Canada's especial loss and all hearts must turn in sympathy to the Dominion union thus suddenly deprived of its leader. If we did not know that the God who removes the workmen will still carry on His own work we might well falter and grow discouraged, but as it is, we may rest our hearts in the thought that the battle is not ours but God's.

Once in a while "Mother Experience" turns over a question to the general officers for their official answer. Such an one has come to me, and is herewith appended. I have not the exact wording, but this is the purport:

When a state union does not believe in suffrage, and a local union does, would you advise it to withdraw from the state and unite directly with the National?

My answer is a most emphatic negative. By no means withdraw from your state union. The widest latitude is allowed for individual opinion throughout the length and breadth of the W. C. T. U. Because a department is adopted in the National it does not follow that it must be adopted in a state, and the fact that a department is not adopted in a state by no means prevents individual unions in that state from taking it up. If you feel that you have received greater light along some lines than has your state union, remember, please, that there is but one thing in this universe to do with light, and that is to let it shine; and surely its shining is needed nowhere so much as in the places which are dark to that particular form of light. Find out the points where you agree with your state union. Emphasize those continually. Come closer and closer together instead of pulling farther and farther apart. Let your light so shine," and verily through such "good works" you will come to see eye to eye, and have fellowship one with another because walking in fullness of light.

It has come to the ears of the general officers—somewhat indirectly, it is true—that great exceptions have been taken by some of our friends to the fact that the words, "prohibition of the liquor traffic," do not occur in our Declaration of Principles. It is, without doubt, a mistake that they do not. The fact that this criticism has been made proves it to have been a mistake, but I am sure that any candid person who reads that declaration cannot fail to see that, though the words themselves are absent, the spirit of the words permeates every other sentence. We believe so fully in the prohibition of the liquor traffic that it never occurred to us as necessary to state the fact. It is a self-evident proposition, bound up in the very fact that the W. C. T. U. exists. It reminds me somewhat of the rather grim joke—if the term can be applied to matters theological—which presiding elders used to play upon applicants for a local preacher's license in asking them to prove, from the Bible, the existence of a God. Of course it cannot be done. The Bible offers no proof text of God's existence; it simply assumes that existence in its first sentence, and from its first beginnings until now the W. C. T. U. has been spelling Prohibition. We could not make a declaration more ironclad than is the white ribbon itself. Of course we believe in prohibition. What else do we stand for? I could have wished those criticisms had come to us directly. It would have seemed more kind, especially as I particularly asked in this column when the Annual Leaflet first appeared that my attention might be called to any omissions.

I am writing from the heart of Tennessee's glorious hill country, and how I wish all tired city dwellers could breathe in this divine air of Harriman! Next week I shall have something to say of my trip Southward, and something of our summer meetings as well.

Treasurer's Corner.

Remember, dear comrades, that the custom is now becoming established in the National W. C. T. U. to ask each member of a local white ribbon society to send on each birthday, in token of her gratitude to God, as many pennies to the National treasury as she has lived years on this earthly ball. Again we say, remember. This little deed faithfully followed out, would, financially speaking, transfer our society from crutches to wings.

Ever yours affectionately,
Frances E. Willard.

If only each friend of the W. C. T. U. would heed the request of our president, what a help it would be to our beloved National, and what a good showing we could make at Baltimore.

In my last Corner I made a plea for the literature fund. Ellen L. Davis, of Iowa, has sent one dollar for that fund, but the calls are so great for leaflets that as yet we have but a drop in the bucket that ought to be running over. The colored fund is exhausted and yet there are demands for that work.

The dues are coming in better than last year. North California, New York, Nebraska, Georgia, Oklahoma, Missouri, Minnesota and Massachusetts have sent in dues since our last report. Mrs. Purington has sent in the regular donation from Dorchester, and Mrs. R. G. Porter, of Pennsylvania, sends $2.50 as self-denial.

It seems difficult for state treasurers to make their state report harmonize with the National report of same state as to payment of dues. This arises from the fact that many of the states hold their conventions in May and June, and their fiscal year ends at that time, while the National gives credit to each state for all dues received from November 1 to November 1, or to such date as National books close. Hence the National fiscal year's report very likely will not agree with the report of each state fiscal as it covers a different period of time. This seems unavoidable as long as the year of state and National do not agree in time.

I trust each treasurer, state and local, will remember that our Convention at Baltimore will be held nearly one month earlier this year, and collections must be pressed a little earlier or we will not get credit for our full membership, which we are especially anxious to do.

The phonograph is set up and several at Headquarters were delighted to listen to one of Mother Stewart's strong speeches. Her voice, strong and clear, each word distinct, with her own happy intonations that make the various passages so telling, were wonderful to listen to. We are waiting for the Willard and Somerset cylinders and trust many of our leaders will send us cylinders upon which have been recorded some of their best thoughts. Then we will be ready to open up lectures at Headquarters where our best speakers can be heard for a nominal sum that we trust may help our treasury.

For terms and date address as above.

My work has not differed materially this year from other years.

I cannot make long journeys that will necessitate my being away from home weeks and months at a time, but most of my engagements are made with reference to county conventions, after which other appointments are made in the county; no-license campaigns have also claimed several series of meetings, while of course there are single lectures. Conventions have always been a specialty with me, and I have felt that the help given in convention by Bible reading, question box, parliamentary drill, school of methods, or children's meetings has often been of more practical help to our own women than the evening public address.

Since the National convention I have attended five county conventions, given forty-eight public addresses, including one address before the Y. M. C. A. of Buffalo, a Parliamentary drill in the New York State Y. W. C. A. convention, two addresses before the food exposition in Albany, all exclusive of many Bible readings and talks and have secured one hundred and fifty new members for the W. C. T. U. May 14, I gave in Chickering Hall, New York city, the address at the commencement of the New York college and hospital for women.

Our work is growing everywhere; we have better audiences than in former years. Churches are opened to us more freely, and if we but take advantage of the fact that all the Protestant denominations but one have passed resolutions in favor of total abstinence and legal prohibition, there are grand opportunities for us to work. But we must keep at it, in season and out of season, ever remembering the purpose for which we were organized. Let us not be diverted from our temperance work, and with us temperance means not only total abstinence but work for the overthrow of the license system.

They tell us of a mine-owner out in Colorado who died some time ago, and as he was very much beloved there was a great funeral. The minister discoursed long and earnestly on the virtues of the deceased. As he finished the supposed dead man rose up in his casket and said, "All that talk and not a word about silver." Dear workers, don't let it ever be said of us in our organization, "All that talk, and all that work, and not a word about temperance."

ELLA A. BOOLE.

ORGANIZING AND RECRUITING.

Owing to illness in our family this winter, it has been impossible for me to accept calls to go into the field, with the exception of a fifteen days' tour in March in the fourth district of Missouri.

The first point visited was Union Star, where the ladies decided to resume work and to foster the anti-cigarette work among the children.

At King City special services were in progress in the Cumberland Presbyterian church, but the ministers were of the opinion that a good temperance meeting would not be a hindrance to a revival, so we had a fine audience. (May heaven send us more such ministers!)

At Ford City we found a faithful remnant and the union was reorganized under the leadership of two bright young women.

The fear of a prevailing disease kept many away from the public meeting at Darlington, but success was according to the faith of these earnest women, and eleven men and five women were enrolled as new members. The presence of the faithful and energetic district president added much to the interest of the occasion.

In Stanberry we met the ladies of the union and discussed ways and means. In Evona a little band of women are endeavoring to arouse a lethargic public sentiment.

In Albany we spoke to the young people on Saturday night, and addressed a general audience on Sunday. The many societies in a college town leave small space for temperance organizations, but we believe these earnest-hearted girls will help to stir the public conscience along these lines. The W. C. T. U. also decided to commence work.

Among the workers in Bethany we met Mrs. Maud Allen, and were entertained in the home of Mrs. Crossan, both longtime advocates of our cause, who purpose keeping it before the people.

A religious meeting of great interest was in progress in Ridgeway but the pastor yielded the evening service, and endorsed the words of the speaker. A large union was organized here.

In Blythedale we had to contend against the attractions of a patent medicine show company and a blizzard, but some brave, true women were found who wished to do temperance work, and a union was organized from which we expect much.

Allendale is a thriving country union which is gradually but surely making its impress upon the community.

In Grant City we found a thriving union. New members are gained at the regular meetings, and several departments of work are vigorously prosecuted.

A wide awake union was organized at Redding, Iowa, "just over the line."

On this trip thirteen towns were visited and twenty-six addresses given, five unions organized, and two unions which had been asleep aroused, one hundred and ten new members gained, exclusive of fifty others who gave their names, but were not present when the organizations were completed.

This trip has impressed me with the need of our officers keeping in touch with the unions, and if they cannot visit them a typewritten or mimeographed letter once a quarter would do much toward keeping the unions en rapport with the work.

POLYGLOT PETITION.

Honored Rulers, Representatives and Brothers:

We, your Petitioners, although belonging to the physically weaker sex, are strong of heart to love our homes, our native land, and the world's family of nations.

We know that clear brains and pure hearts make honest lives and happy homes, and that by these the nations prosper, and the time is brought nearer when the world shall be at peace.

We know that indulgence in Alcohol and Opium, and in other vices which disgrace our social life, makes misery for all the world, and most of all for us and for our children.

We know that stimulants and opiates are sold under legal guarantees which make the Governments partners in the traffic, by accepting as revenue a portion of the profits, and we know with shame that they are often forced by treaty upon populations, either ignorant or unwilling.

We know that the law might do much, now left undone, to raise the moral tone of society and render vice difficult.

We have no power to prevent these great iniquities beneath which the whole world groans, but you have power to redeem the honor of the nations from an indefensible complicity.

We therefore come to you with the united voices of representative women of every land, beseeching you to raise the standard of the law to that of Christian morals, to strip away the safeguards and sanctions of the state from the drink traffic and the opium trade, and to protect our homes by the total prohibition of these curses of civilization throughout all the territory over which your government extends.

Our Library Table.

AMONG THE MAGAZINES.

"Some Curiosities of Scottish Literature" is the title of a bright and witty article in the May number of The Chautauquan, by William Wye Smith.

The May issue of Scribner's contains the first instalment of a novelette by Mrs. Humphry Ward, entitled, "The Story of Bessie Costrell."

Among the good things in the May St. Nicholas is to be noted "What the Lights Tell," by Ensign John M. Ellicott, descriptive of the code of lantern-signals used at sea.

Two valuable papers in the current number of the Quarterly Journal of Inebriety are "Tea and Its Effects," by Dr. James Wood, and "Unwholesome Workshops and Drink," by David Walsh, M. B.

The leading article in the Homiletic Review for May is ably contributed by Rev. George Cross, Carlton Place, Ontario, Canada. It is upon "Jesus' Thought of Himself," being ably and profoundly written.

Demorest's Family Magazine for May contains a column article on "The Crime of Liquor Selling," written by the late W. Jennings Demorest. The article was doubtless in type when the hand that penned it lay still in its last long rest.

The Preacher's Magazine contains much that is suggestively helpful for the special workers it aims to reach. With sermon outlines, homiletics, hints for children's services, notes on the International Sunday-school Lessons, and prayer-meeting talks, the little periodical is a very encyclopedia of help.

The Atlantic Monthly is giving to its readers a story that is attracting well-deserved attention. The author is Elizabeth Stuart Phelps, and the name of the story, "A Singular Life." The hero is one Emanuel Bayard, a young man born and bred in the refinement of wealth. Educated for a minister in the sect of "Congregationalism of New England," he was called to appear before the council to meet the crossfire of examination concerning his theology. But his "religion" was deeper and higher and wider than his theology, his word of testimony broke over narrow restraint and he was "refused ordination to the Christian ministry by a majority of five." But there is an "ordination" higher than that upon which men vote, and whom God calls to preach will preach, if he obey God, though all councils deny him. Thus, Emanuel Bayard. The scene is laid in a seaport town; his "church" was once "the worst hell in Angel Alley"; its name, "The Church of the Love of Christ"; his people, the fishermen and their families, rough, unwashen, unlearned, drinking, drunk, degraded. Only Elizabeth Stuart Phelps can so mingle fire and tenderness, pathos and humor, the depictions of the dignity of the "council," the hero-beauty of Bayard, the glimmer of the rough diamond soul of the fisherman, and the innocent white life of a little child.

Institutes of the Christian Religion. By Emanuel V. Gerhart, D. D. LL. D. Completed in two octavo volumes, 1,744 pages; per volume, $3.

Funk & Wagnalls Company, New York.

This is a new work on systematic theology. The author is professor of systematic and practical theology in Theological Seminary of the Reformed Church, Lancaster, Pa. The central doctrine of the "Institutes" is the divine-human personality of Jesus Christ; the author's aim being to construct all doctrines, not from God's sovereign will, nor from the freedom of man as the point of observation, but from the vital union of both as realized in the life and work of the Mediator. The method is positive rather than controversial or polemical, and historical rather than analytic or synthetic. The first volume appeared at an earlier date and was warmly received with much favorable comment. The first volume treats of: I. Sources of Theological Knowledge. II. The Christ Idea: Principle of Christian Doctrine. III. Theology: The Doctrine of God. IV. Cosmology: Doctrine in Creation and Providence. The second volume: I. Anthropology; Doctrine on the Adamic Race. II. Christology: Doctrine on Jesus Christ. III. Pneumatology: Doctrine on the Holy Spirit. IV. Soteriology: Doctrine on Personal Salvation. V. Eschatology: Doctrine on the Last Things.

The complete work, now ready, will doubtless receive favorable consideration from a large majority of theologians.

Keep the Baby Fat.

"Cave Spring, Ga., May 21, 1894.

"My baby was a living skeleton. The doctors said he was dying of Marasmus, Indigestion, etc. The various foods I tried seemed to keep him alive, but did not strengthen or fatten him. At thirteen months old he weighed exactly what he did at birth—seven pounds. I began using "Scott's Emulsion," sometimes putting a few drops in his bottle, then again feeding it with a spoon; then again by the absorption method of rubbing it into his body. The effect was marvelous. Baby began to stouten and fatten, and became a beautiful dimpled boy, a wonder to all. Scott's Emulsion supplied the one thing needful.

"Mrs. Kennon Williams."

is especially useful for sickly, delicate children when their other food fails to nourish them. It supplies in a concentrated, easily digestible form, just the nourishment they need to build them up and give them health and strength. It is Cod-liver Oil made palatable and easy to assimilate, combined with the Hypophosphites, both of which are most remarkable nutrients.

GLIMPSES OF FIFTY YEARS.

The story of Miss Willard's life has been brought out in England under the title, "My Happy Half Century." An English reviewer says of the work:

"The reader of Miss Frances Willard's delightful autobiography involuntarily wonders how much of what is noble and lovely in her ideal of womanhood may be indirectly due to that affectionate companionship with flowers and birds and other lowly creatures which she learnt from her father, in the patriarchal simplicity and freedom of her early outdoor life.

"We confess for our own part that it is the story of her early home rather than of her later career as a public lecturer and propagandist, which seems to us to give the book its unique charm.

"In these days in which unwise daughters publish from the housetops their household grievances, it is refreshing to read the story of this daughter for whom revolt would have been inconceivable, since her mother was, as she herself perceived, the very revelation of the divine to her, through whom came the best inspiration and happiness of her girlhood and youth. So bewitchingly human and guilelessly good is that mother, as seen through the eyes of the daughter, that it is difficult to refrain from quoting page after page lighted by that sweet and gracious presence, certainly one of the most 'taking' presentments of 'das ewig Weibliche' in modern literature.

"Unlike that of the disagreeable and aggressive type of new woman, Miss Willard's ideal is essentially womanly, and never lacking in the true dignity which comes of self-discipline, and the clear-minded moral fastidiousness which charms by the delicacy of strength not weakness.

"Her story cannot but recall Ruskin's lovely vision of what the quality of woman's work should be as he prophesied of it long ago in 'Sesame and Lilies':

"'And in like manner, what the woman is to be within her gates, as the center of order, the balm of distress, and the mirror of beauty; that she is also to be without her gates, where order is more difficult, distress more imminent, loveliness more rare.'"

A Wheel Within a Whee

HOW I LEARNED TO RIDE THE BICYCLE

BY

Frances E. Willard

In her inimitable style Miss Willard tells in this dainty little volume her experience in learning to master a "steel steed," and as she graphically portrays the various situations leading from many failures to ultimate success, she has interwoven in delightful "side-talks" some exceedingly helpful and practical suggestions as to how failures and discouragements may be turned to success in life, never losing opportunity, as is her wont, to say that which ennobles and uplifts. It is really a fascinating little volume, appealing strongly to all that is best in physical and moral development.

FRUITS AND HOW TO USE THEM.

BY HESTER M. POOLE.

Mrs. Poole claims that grains and fruits afford every element needed for the nourishment of the human frame, and that wheat, apples, berries, peaches, etc., furnish rich, pure blood, which is sustenance for strong muscles and sound physical economy.

The subject of food has an ethical significance, as the diet has its effect on the temperament, and also a refining or debasing influence, and in reading this book one thinks not only of the ethics of food but also of the poetry, as fruit, in its bloom and fragrance, is certainly the most ideal sustenance of which it is possible to conceive. In reading this little volume, one wonders why man ever thought of slaying a living creature to sustain his own life, with all else that nature affords for that purpose.

This book has a poetical charm, as it idealizes the real, and turns, with an alchemy of the author's own, the necessary tasks of the preparation of food to an art of ethical import and beauty in daily life.

FROM THE MICHIGAN CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE.

BRIGHT EYES. Pleasure and Profit for Sunday Afternoon. Boards; 32 pages; 7x8½; 50 cents. Chicago: Woman's Temperance Publishing Association.

The book is largely a blank book to be filled out by children whose interest in the work gives them "bright eyes." Each page is divided into three squares. At the head of each square is a Biblical picture, e. g., a "balance," "fruit," "shield." These three are on one page. Under the first is given the name of the book of Proverbs, under the second Zechariah, the third Genesis. By this the child knows that in the book of Proverbs is a statement about a "balance," in Zechariah one about "fruit," and in Genesis one about a "shield." The interest consists in finding the place and writing it neatly in the blank square.

HEALTHFUL WOMANHOOD AND CHILDHOOD.

BY HENRY BIXBY HEMENWAY, A. M., M. D.,

is a book containing plain talks to non-professional readers, and is the outcome, as the author himself states, of requests for a book which should tell in plain language those things that every woman should know about her physical being and the care of children. Dr. Hemenway believes that "the proper study of womankind is woman"; that purity will result from light, truth and knowledge, and that impurity, with its consequent suffering, is largely the outgrowth of ignorance upon questions concerning the physical organism and its relations. This very necessary knowledge the author aims to convey, and to convey in such a manner as shall give to the reader a more exalted conception of the bodily functions. He emphasizes the importance for both mother and child of the study of creative life; points out the prominent part a woman's dress plays in the production of disease and unhappiness; discusses marriage from the standpoint of a physician rather than that of a moralist or poet, and gives invaluable advice in the bringing up of children.

This book in the hands of an intelligent mother would, we think, prevent much needless sickness for herself and her children. It has been Dr. Hemenway's wish "to write a book which might be profitably read by all classes of society, and that, being read, it would help each to lead a more perfect life." And we think his wish finds its consummation in this volume of nearly 300 pages.

COLUMBUS AND WHAT HE FOUND.

In this most delightful book an unapproachable opportunity is given to teachers and to mothers to acquaint their charges with the wanderings and wonderings of this modern Ulysses. How one mother has interested and captivated her children and their friends is set out in "Columbus, and What He Found," by Mary H. Hull. She idealizes her hero, and for the purposes of instruction this may be not only justifiable, but commendable. All that needs to be said about the immoralities of Columbus can be compressed into a foot-note. A character is never to be estimated in terms of its faults. The author of "Columbus, and What He Found" has the American spirit in this matter. For the youngest of our readers her book is an excellent one.

A GREAT MOTHER.

The biography of Madam Willard has already found its way into many homes of prominence in this country and Great Britain. Prof. Drummond has given to Mrs. Dr. Simpson, a leading literary lady of Edinburgh, Scotland, a copy of the life of Saint Courageous inscribing it to "The daughter of a Great Mother."

THE culmination of the precepts and example of so great a mother in the life and career of so great a daughter, establishes a point of connection which renders the volume additionally valuable.—Bertha Honore Palmer.

THE JUNIOR PARTNER.

BY ABEL RAWSON.

"The Junior Partner" is a love story, a medical treatise and a temperance argument, all in one. While it handles certain social questions very straightforwardly, yet it does so in such a manner as to win the approval of every wife and mother. The story proper could be dramatized with telling effect. The book should have a place in every public library, and in every home where there are young men and women.—The Daily Register, Mobile, Ala.

MONTHLY READINGS.

The Bible Reading for May is by Mrs. Mollie McGee Snell, and the subject is

THE LORD'S PRAYER.

All Bible students have tasted of the rich spiritual food which is so abundant in this, the "universal prayer," and Mrs. Snell's exposition of it impresses us more than ever with its illimitable heights and depths, and will help us to comprehend more fully the heart significance of a prayer that is so often upon our lips.

The Responsive Reading for May deals with

and is prepared by the W. C. T. U. specialist in this department, Mrs. E. B. Ingalls, than whom no one is better qualified for the task. It is a valuable contribution to the literature of that important department, and every local superintendent should see to it that her union uses this reading. Unions that are not regular subscribers to the monthly Responsive Readings should send for a supply of these and send soon.

CAMPAIGN ECHOES,

by Mrs. Letitia Youmans, the heroic pioneer of the white-ribbon movement in Canada, and to-day the honorary president of the Dominion W. C. T. U., was written at the earnest request of white-ribboners on both sides of the border. Besides being an autobiography, a record of eighteen years of unremitting toil in the service of God and humanity, it is valuable as authentic history of the temperance reform in Canada.

It is a work of 312 pages, dictated from a bed of sickness and constant pain, and breathes from beginning to end a spirit of Christian service and unwavering faith in God. The book is dedicated to the author's "white ribbon sisters in this and other lands." The introduction is by Frances E. Willard, and the price is (cloth bound, with portrait of Mrs. Youmans) $1.

TO MOTHERS.

Never has there been so much interest manifested among mothers of all classes concerning the proper care and culture of children as now. The work of the W. C. T. U. along purity lines has in a marked degree awakened parents to a sense of their responsibilities in the training of children in such knowledge as shall be a preventive to the impurity which is largely the result of ignorance.

As valuable helps to mothers who have experienced this arrest of thought we commend the little books by Dr. Mary Wood Allen, National lecturer for the purity department.

TEACHING TRUTH

aims to answer in chaste and scientific language, the queries of children as to the origin of life, and is wonderfully adapted to meet the needs of mothers. Miss Willard says: "I cannot keep a copy over night; it is an evangel to every young person in whose hands it might be placed. I would invite the public school-teachers to examine this rare little book."

Price 25c.

CHILD CONFIDENCE REWARDED

Is a little pamphlet of nineteen pages, emphasizing the importance of mutual confidence between mother and child—a confidence which should possess the element of such absolute truth as to always merit the little girl's somewhat paradoxical statement, "If my mamma says it's so, it's so, even if it isn't so."

A suitable book for general distribution at mothers' meetings.

Price 10c.

ALMOST A MAN

will be found a most helpful booklet to put into the hands of boys upon the threshold of manhood, or, better still, for mother or father to read with the son who is "almost a man." Dr. Allen has a wonderful gift of presenting this most difficult and misunderstood subject in such manner as will both warn and uplift.

SIX hundred and twenty-five lives were saved last year by the Royal English Life-boat Association.

BASLE, Switzerland, will be the scene of the fifth annual International Temperance Congress, August 20-22.

EQUAL suffrage will be presented by Susan B. Anthony and Dr. Anna Shaw at the Women's Council of the Pacific Slope, which opens in San Francisco, May 20, and lasts one week.

THE published facts in the Armenian massacres are so substantiated that prominent English journals are urging the Powers to insist upon Armenian self-government with a Christian governor.

ALL but fifteen of the three hundred and eighty-five clothing manufacturers in New York city have their goods made up in sweat shops, and the goods generally lie for some time in the rooms occupied night and day by the sweaters.

THE Mansfield House, London, of which Mr. Percy Alden is warden, is the leading social settlement in the work accomplished and plans promulgated. During the cold snap last winter, from six to eight thousand people a day were fed.

JUDGE GOFF of the United States Circuit Court has handed down a decision adverse to the South Carolina dispensary law. He has enjoined the state from seizing liquor shipped from outside. Governor Evans, however, declares that all liquors will continue to be seized as heretofore.

IN this column some weeks ago, Mr. Michael Fanning, the chairman of the state central prohibition committee for Michigan, was erroneously referred to as an "Irish Catholic" prohibition orator. As a matter of fact Mr. Fanning, though of Roman Catholic antecedents, is a member of the Baptist church in Jackson, Mich., his home.

CHICAGO Commons, the social settlement of the Chicago Theological Seminary, located at 140 North Union street, held a school of social economics recently, participated in by Mr. Percy Alden, warden of Mansfield College (Oxford) House, East London; Rev. A. Holden Byles, of Hanley, England, George Dana Boardman, D. D., of Philadelphia, and others.

REV. DR. NEWMAN SMYTH, who has been actively engaged in campaigning against policy and poolrooms in New Haven, Conn., calls attention in a timely article in the April Forum to the use of the telegraph in the debasing business. Were the telegraph incorporated under the same powers as the post-office, such abuse of its privileges would not long be continued.

THAT there is a class of men (hopefully small!) who will eat but not work was demonstrated by an experiment made by the Camberwell guardians at the Salvation Army's farm colony at Hadleigh, where the conditions of work were favorable. Of one hundred and ten chronic men paupers, only thirty remained. Nearly all the others returned to the poorhouse, because they objected to work.

THREE legislative acts in favor of equal suffrage were effected on April 18. The Constitutional Convention ratified its previous action by refusing to reconsider. The Rhode Island senate committee reported a bill for town, ward and district suffrage and the New York senate sustained the action of the lower house on a resolution submitting the question to a vote of the people in November, 1896. This act must be endorsed, however, by a second session of the assembly.

THE thirty-first international convention of the Y. M. C. A. met in Springfield, Mass., May 8-12; following this meeting the twenty-fifth annual conference of general secretaries took place at Hartford. According to the recent statements of its principal, Mrs. Lucy Rider Meyer, eighty-seven Deaconesses have gone from the Chicago Training School to foreign lands, and one hundred sixty others have been distributed in nearly all the large cities of the United States. Plans are being made to increase the capacity of this worthy school which will no doubt receive cordial support from its church friends.

Gentlemen: While gathering pecans during the fall of 1892, I had the misfortune to fall a distance of sixty feet, out of a pecan tree. Was terribly bruised and my hip dislocated. A physician set the dislocated hip and prescribed some medicine for external application. A WOMAN'S EVANGEL. By Eva Kinney Griffith. Published by the Woman's Temperance Publishing Association, The Temple, Chicago. Price $1.25.

This is a temperance story of unusual interest. The general reader will recognize its life-likeness and the evident familiarity of the author with the scenes she depicts, while his interest in the story, with its golden thread of love and devotion, will hold him steadily to its perusal. The student of reforms in general, and drink-cures in particular, will read the story of Dr. McCullough with thoughtful interest. The plans and methods of the W. C. T. U. are made prominent, and thus it becomes a sort of hand-book for the workers in this great field.—Exchange.

SINCE OUR LAST ISSUE.

Wesley Day was celebrated by Methodists, May 9.

The bill to increase the territory of New York city has failed in the state senate.

Only four votes were lacking to carry equal suffrage in the lower house of Michigan.

A riot accompanied the strike at the Illinois Steel Works in South Chicago; more than three thousand employés are idle.

The Southern Baptist convention, with more than a thousand delegates, met at Washington, May 10. Women were allowed to speak but not to vote!

President Seth Low, of Columbia College, New York, will build the new million dollar college library as a memorial of his father, the late Apsel Abbott Low.

The trustees of Western Presbyterian Theological seminary at Allegheny, Pa., Thursday, declined to give the Presbyterian General Assembly control of the institution.

The Honduras Lottery Company has begun proceedings in the United States circuit court to test the constitutionality of the Hoar Anti-lottery bill passed by the last Congress.

Cincinnati has entertained the sixth annual convention of the International Association of Machinists. One of the main questions brought up was the elimination of the word "white" from the constitution.

Dr. N. S. Davis, of Chicago, and other prominent members of the American Medical Temperance Association, read papers on alcoholic stimulants at the American Medical Association's annual gathering in Baltimore.

Japan has given up part of her territorial claims from China owing to pressure brought to bear by Russia, Germany and France. In consideration of this an additional indemnity has been granted by China of $50,000,000.

TWO MILLION FOR THE GREAT PETITION.

Keep on getting signatures for the Polyglot Petition! Although the names may not be on the Petition when it sails on the Berlin, the number will be cabled at the last moment. Send to Mrs. Rebecca C. Shuman, 2130 Sherman Ave., Evanston, Ill., who will keep on pasting.

Ho, for two million!

THE sixth annual convention of the Indiana Union of Literary Clubs is in session at Huntington, Ind. This federation is unique in the history of clubs in that it includes both men's and women's clubs of that state, and by reason of its non-sextarian policy this body claims to be just a step in advance of the National Federation of Women's Clubs. Its president is a woman, Mrs. Virginia C. Meredith, of Cambridge City.

AN interesting series of lectures will be delivered by Rev. Wilbur F. Crafts in Willard Hall noon meetings, May 20 to 24. He will discuss social problems from the standpoint of the church, family and education, capital and labor and citizenship. Mr. Crafts is not less known as a lecturer than an author. Since his retirement from the Christian Statesman, he has devoted his time and talents largely to the National Bureau of Reforms, of which he is superintendent, and as lecturer on Christian sociology before theological seminaries and city audiences. Earnest men and women in the vicinity of Chicago should make a note of the above dates and attend these valuable lectures.

THE forces are already gathering in London for the World's W. C. T. U. Convention. Mrs. Edith Archibald, president of Maritime provinces of Canada, is in England, and Madame Layah Barakat, of Syria, is expected soon. A delegate has been chosen in Shanghai, China, another in South Australia, another in Trondhjem, Norway, and every mail carries to the World's officers the credentials of new delegates from all parts of Christendom. Mrs. Rounds, president of Illinois, sails May 22, and Mrs. Burt, the Empire state's president, starts May 29, but by far the largest party will be companions in Dr. Lunn's contingent, sailing on the Berlin, June 5. Every indication points to a merry company and a happy voyage.

ONE of the most cheering indications of the working of the prohibition leaven is the fact that labor leaders are manifesting a disposition to break away from saloon influence. The custom which has largely prevailed in our cities of having labor union headquarters in saloons, and which temperance reformers have naturally deplored, has proved to be one of the seeming evils which brings forth good. For having experienced the damaging effects of such connection, the leaders are awakening to a "realizing sense" of the great stumbling block which the liquor traffic is to every effort for the improvement of the condition of the wage-worker. New York walking delegates, recently interviewed by The Voice, express themselves willing to discuss remedies for the drink evil with a readiness which has hitherto been conspicuously lacking among labor agitators. While few of them, probably, would favor prohibition, still it is a great step forward to recognize, as they do, that the liquor problem is one that the industrial reformer, like the civic reformer, the financial reformer and every other kind of reformer, must meet and deal with. In applying restrictive measures they will learn that to "cripple" the evil is not enough, and will eventually come to see that total destruction is the only effective remedy. We believe that whenever the day comes—and it is coming—that the working man refuses to be politically led and financially bled by the rum power, it will throw light upon many a problem which now appears so difficult of solution.

Two mammoth tents, each with a seating capacity of ten thousand, a grand chorus of three thousand voices, a reception committee of eight hundred—these are some of the features of the fourteenth international convention of Christian Endeavorers, which meets in Boston, July 10 to 15, and which will doubtless be the largest and most notable gathering of young people the world has ever seen. Preparations on a most extensive scale are going forward, and Bostonians will spare no pains to make the occasion a memorable one in the annals of the Y. P. S. C. E. and of their city.

PREPARATIONS for the great farewell meeting to World's Convention delegates and fellow tourists, June 4, at Prohibition Park, S. I., are progressing nicely, and a large number of delegates are expected to be present. The invitation is a general one and is extended to all white-ribboners and their friends. Mrs. Boole writes: "Entertainment will be provided for those who are to go to London, provided notice of their intention to be present is sent by May 25. The Park hotel and boarding houses will make a rate of one dollar for dinner, lodging and breakfast. Tickets for the W. C. T. U. luncheon to be followed by toasts, etc., fifty cents. Please order (beforehand if possible) of Mrs. DeEtte Haskell, West New Brighton, S. I., N. Y., because we can only accommodate about three hundred. Take Staten Island Rapid Transit boat at South Ferry, New York city, thence by train to Port Richmond, trolley cars to the Park. The services at the Park will continue from 11 a. m. to 9 p. m., but all who can do so are invited to remain over night and go up to see the party on board the Berlin, June 5." For any other information write to Mrs. Ella A. Boole, West New Brighton, S. I., N. Y.

FIFTIETH wedding anniversaries are always events of unique interest and congratulation, but it is doubtful if one of more national importance and spontaneous celebration was ever celebrated than that of Dr. Daniel P. and Mrs. Mary A. Livermore, in Melrose, Mass., on Monday afternoon, May 6. Not wishing to make any distinction among their hosts of friends, Dr. and Mrs. Livermore made the occasion a strictly informal one, inviting "all the people of the United States who care to come." The entire town of Melrose united to honor the event, the schoolhouses, town hall and all public buildings being draped with the Stars and Stripes. But the center of all interest was, naturally, the Livermore homestead, where the revered couple, still in the strength of their mental and physical powers, received hundreds of their friends. The little folks had large share in the celebration, presenting floral and jeweled presents of rare value and beauty. The teachers and pupils of the high school, represented by a committee, manifested their love and esteem for one who had "done so much for humanity," by presenting fifty American Beauty roses, Mrs. Livermore being especially touched by these remembrances from the younger generation. One of the most significant events of the day was a battalion of boys from the public schools, representing the anti-tobacco league, under the direction of the local W. C. T. U., marching through the streets and through the Livermore mansion, each one being addressed by the worthy couple. The white-ribboners of the state and city remembered Mrs. Livermore handsomely. Cablegrams came from Miss Willard and Lady Henry Somerset, and telegrams from all over the land. Committees from a large number of Grand Army posts called to pay their respects, and indeed every one seemed happy to share in the distinction of knowing and revering this honored man and woman. Mrs. Livermore's record during the war was not more noble than the one she has since made, and THE UNION SIGNAL wishes her many years of health, happiness and good works.

ROBIN'S MATE.

BY ELLA GILBERT IVES.

Everybody praises Robin,
Singing early, singing late;
But who ever thinks of saying
A good word for Robin's mate?

Yet she's everything to Robin,
Silent partner though she be;
Source and theme and inspiration
Of each madrigal and glee.

For as she with mute devotion
Shapes and curves the plastic nest,
Fashioning a little cradle
With the pressure of her breast,

So the love in that soft bosom
Moulds his being as 'twere clay,
Prints upon his heart the music
Of his most impassioned lay.

Ah! when next you praise the Robin,
Flinging wide the tuneful gate,
To his eager brood of love notes,
Don't forget the Robin's mate!

REVEREND BALAAM BULL'S NIGHTMARE.

In Five Chapters.

BY JEAN CALVIN.

CHAPTER V.

"Now that women have the power to rule in a marvelous degree, nobody has ever disputed," said Theodora Parker, "although in the Dark Ages up to the twentieth century it was declared she ruled by 'Beelzebub, the prince of devils.' But there are an infinite number of cases that would disprove this statement. Are Deborah and Huldah to be accused of exercising their powers through wrong relations with those of the other sex? Take even the case of Jezebel. No one is likely to accuse Elijah of unrighteousness. Yet such was her natural gift in ruling that although the prophet could defy King Ahab and slay all the false prophets, yet when he learned that Jezebel was after him—"

"Oh! you are a wicked Jezebel yourself, you teacher of false doctrines!" roared Balaam Bull in a towering rage, for he could endure no more. "How dare you teach women to seek for power?"

Theodora Parker adjusted her eyeglasses leisurely, and scanned the sea of faces before her, but not being able to locate the source whence the voice came, proceeded after a moment's pause.

"I know there remain yet a few silly ambitious males—and what true woman can respect them!—who are constantly threatening to study Hebrew and Greek so as to be able to point out the fallacies in the theology of women. Poor things! they might as well spare themselves the trouble, for they will only earn the contempt of all high-minded women, who find the society of blue-stocking, strong-minded males simply insufferable! Who wants to argue with an illogical male! How infinitely better it would be for the peace of our homes and our too much neglected children if the fathers of our offspring would cease their prating about their 'rights' and like all true males find those rights in the sacred duties of fatherhood, 'for after this manner in the old time the holy men also' conducted themselves; as Abraham 'hearkened' to the voice of Sarah calling her 'prince'; as Moses, meekest of all men, magnified his office of 'nursing father.'

"What the world needs to-day," said the preacher, with wonderful animation, "is learned women and faithful fathers! Oh! think, my brother, I beseech you, of the glory of having been the father of Jane Buckley, who brought such blessing to this poor old earth by showing the proper method and spirit of interpretation! Or of having been the father of Honeydear Ann Howson, whose name has been a household word among us ever since she discovered that Paul was a woman. Contemplate that holy ideal lifted on high! Abraham, father of all believers, his ambitions centered wholly on the glory of fatherhood! And how much more real happiness and contentment there is to be found in the sheltered life of the male engrossed wholly in the enjoyment of the innocent prattle of children, than in the life of the woman who, like myself, is doomed to be burdened with 'the care of all the churches!' Why are our husbands sometimes so foolish as to vex their dear souls for those unsatisfactory public callings concerning which we are fully able to inform them by experience, and to tell them there is no satisfaction in such pursuits? And besides, the male could never endure the unnatural strain of long conventions, exciting debates and unseemly wrangles such as we women must indulge in."

"Booh!" said Balaam Bull so loud the stranger looked at him sternly.

"But many, yea, all true fathers do already magnify their office. It is from these homes, presided over by faithful, self-denying fathers, that you and I have come. And the very mention of dear old father and his tender love for us in childhood days will bring tears to the face of the hardest sinner! For we have all learned to lisp in early babyhood:

"'Who taught my little feet to walk,
And trained my little tongue to talk?
My father.
Who fed me from my little cup
Of milk and sugar warmed up?
My father.'

"Ah! What is home without a father?"

"Madam," shouted Balaam Bull at the top of his voice, "have you ever heard the commandment, 'honor thy FATHER'? If you have, it seems to me your talk betrays the fact that you have forgotten its meaning. Do you think your sophistry will take the place of reason in the minds of intelligent human beings?"

Theodora Parker turned her piercing black eyes and fixed them steadily upon Balaam Bull, making no answer whatever. For some strange reason, he could not have told what it was, Balaam sat down overcome with embarrassment. Said the stranger in a whisper, "You'll have the seven deacons after you if you say another word; you'd better be careful!"

"Let the father, then, seek contentment in the sphere to which he has been fitted by nature," continued the speaker. "I doubt not there is a great reward for all males who will emulate the example of 'faithful father Abraham'—a reward in this present life in gratified father-love, even if there should be nothing in the world to come. Besides there are, among the theologians of our day, those who believe in heaven as a place for males also. You know, dear brothers and sisters, the bitter persecution I have been subjected to by our more orthodox sisters in the ministry. Much as they have made me suffer, yet the mental anguish of uncertainty and perplexity has been even more severe. I have been openly accused more than once of Universalism because I have spoken of the possible preservation of the male saints as well as the women. But I have not—could not have the hardness of heart to consign the whole male sex thoughtlessly, to eternal gloom! I know the difficulties in the way of any other belief, however. What is one to do, for instance, with that first prophecy of the Word, 'I will put enmity between thee and the woman, and between her seed and thy seed.' Is it, indeed, true then that there is no prospect of males becoming really the enemies of Satan? Alas! only woman and her seed—Jesus—are mentioned here, and there is a mournful silence concerning the ultimate position of males. Will they remain eternally the friends of Satan? It is not prophesied that they as a class will become his enemies. Then again, if it is the work of the woman to leaven the whole lump, what is left for the male to do in the direction of leavening? And further, when we turn to the book of Revelations are we not bound to confess that the whole body of the redeemed ones is summed up in the feminine gender—the bride?"

"Trash!" exclaimed Balaam Bull.

"These are in a sense pathetic facts. That the word should begin with a prophecy of the woman's war on Satan and should end with a picture of the warfare accomplished, and woman—the bride—arrayed to go into the marriage feast. I have spent many hours trying to solve the perplexing problem, and others of our most famous theologians have now joined with me. Our poor, dear overburdened husbands who have little time apart from the care of crying babies—(my dear old father reared twenty-five of them, bless him!) need not fear lest their interests shall be neglected. They may be sure of one thing: our love for them in their faithful devotion to our comfort and offspring, makes it quite impossible for us to neglect their interests, and in due time we shall ascertain whether males have souls or not. They need not fear that we shall keep them, as they did us, ignorant of the fact that we had souls for thousands of years after they might have known the truth by a little careful inquiry."

"Alas! alas!" cried Balaam Bull, "have the women reduced us to this?"

"Some of us," continued the speaker not noticing the interruption, "would not find heaven half so sweet with all the males left out, although as to many of them I am inclined to think—"

"I should like to know by what authority you teach these extraordinary doctrines?" shouted Balaam Bull determined to attract attention from the pulpit. All turned about in their pews and stared. Again Balaam Bull repeated his question, and then the preacher not deigning to reply, waved her hand to a row of plainly-dressed women who occupied a prominent seat beside the platform, and uttered impressively the single sentence, "Let the women keep silence in the churches." Immediately they arose—the largest women Balaam Bull ever saw—and with military precision marched noiselessly down the middle aisle toward the pew where he was sitting. The stranger arose and met them in the aisle saying in a distinct whisper which Balaam Bull caught:

"Don't be too hard on him! I think he must be drunk. He has been sitting out on the curbstone all the morning. I felt sorry for him and asked him in, thinking the sermon might sober him up."

Meanwhile Balaam Bull had repeated his question fully expecting an answer until one of the women seized him.

"But it is wicked to silence a person simply because of his sex," he shouted. The next instant a pocket handkerchief was thrust into his mouth and he was lifted bodily out of the pew. Poor Balaam Bull made a desperate attempt to rescue himself from his humiliating position, but hands and feet seemed pinioned by some invincible power.

"Balaam! BALAAM!! BALAAM!!!" said Mrs. Bull. "Wake up! WAKE UP!! You are in a most dreadful nightmare!"

"Oh-h!" said Balaam Bull, with a groan. "Oh! what a relief for you to touch me, for I could not move hand or foot!"

"What was the matter, dear, what were you dreaming?"

After a thoughtful pause Balaam Bull said, "Why, I was contending with some one who was preaching heresy from the pulpit."

ALCOHOL AND CRIME.

I.

BY F. L. OSWALD, M. D.

The British philosopher, Bentham, in his essay on the Ethics of Government, admits that the loss of the American colonies was due chiefly to the specified indictment of despotism and its unavoidable evils in the manifesto known as the Declaration of Independence.

A periodical bulletin of the crimes caused by alcohol might have a similar effect on the curse of the liquor traffic. It is true that only a small percentage of those crimes are permitted to be published, but even a partial list, with a clear analysis of cause and effect, would suffice to convince every unprejudiced reader that the baneful tendency of intoxicating drinks embraces the entire catalogue of transgressions against the laws of nature and civilized society, in the palaces of wealth as well as in the hovels of poverty; and the evidence of results might thus help to enforce a conclusion which à priori reasoners have repeatedly based upon the fact that alcohol, in its normal effects upon the human brain, weakens the moral and intellectual faculties and stimulates the activity of the animal passions.

The habitual use of alcoholic beverages tends to blunt the sense of shame, while it excites combativeness and the amatory instinct, and those facts alone furnish a key to thousands of otherwise inexplicable aberrations, recklessly ruinous follies and apparently unprovoked crimes. Alcohol also paralyzes ambition, weakens the instinct of gratitude and the sense of honor, rouses vindictive passions and begets a hankering after a constant increase of the stimulating dose. Many of the following characteristic cases will also illustrate the not less important fact that, after years of repentant abstinence, the least concession to the promptings of the tempter may re-awaken the dormant passion and fan the smouldering fire into devouring flames.

I. THE LEXINGTON HORROR.

The most atrocious crime recorded in the hundred years' history of Lexington, Kentucky, was committed a month ago by a man who, according to the testimony of one of his neighbors, had "no enemy in the world," but who now will find few friends to defend him against the triple charge of brutal assault, murder and attempted incest. William Henry Shipp cannot even plead emotional insanity to explain his aberrations. His ancestors were neither criminals nor lunatics, and few of his countrymen had enjoyed better educational advantages. He is the son of a prosperous banker, who for twenty years has been superintendent of a Christian Sunday-school, and who has lately been nominated mayor of his native town and elected by an almost unanimous vote. Willie's mother is known as a leader of every charitable movement, and never ceased in her endeavors to reclaim her favorite son from his wayward passions, which many of his friends considered mere manifestations of a love of adventure, natural to a youth of his years. A year ago the mother's prayers seemed to have been answered. Her son experienced a change of heart, and one night awakened his father with the request to summon a preacher and let him seal his conversion with the rite of baptism. His request was granted, and there is no reason to doubt that the young convert's professions were sincere. The list of his faults (mere foibles, most of them) never included a hint at a penchant for hypocrisy. "Like many other boys he was given to wild freaks," says the editor of the Catlettsburg Democrat, "but a kinder, better natured one, or one of a more amiable disposition never lived. Willie Shipp was not loved only by his most worthy parents, but by every one who had the pleasure of his acquaintance."

As an offset against so many bright qualities, most of his friends would have deemed it a mere trifle that Willie was fond of liquor; but on a day—a Sunday—when he had taken his mother to attend the revival meetings of the Evangelist Mills, he indulged that foible with the following results: Instead of returning to the meeting hall, he made the rounds of the Lexington saloons (open on Sunday for such patrons), forced an entrance into the house of a colored family, announced the purpose of his visit in terms that caused the female members of the household to flee with shrieks of horror, and wound up his frolic by shooting and killing an unarmed man who had hastened to the assistance of his wife. It is probable enough that after the first dram the relapsing toper could not restrain his rage for liquor and that he continued to drink till he really did not know what he was doing, but the logical sequence of events from that first drink to the commission of an atrocious crime was as inevitable as the explosion of a powder-magazine following the application of a burning match. Total effects of a glass of "wholesome, exhilarating," licensed and law-protected liquor: murder of an inoffensive man resisting a brutal attack upon his family; ruin of the murdered man's relatives, disgrace and despair of the murderer's parents, and a breach of the peace menacing a whole city with the prospect of vendettas and rake-feuds.

The principle that intoxication ought to be considered an aggravating, rather than extenuating, factor of crime, is only beginning to be recognized in a state that derives a large part of its revenues from the sale of brain-inflaming beverages, and the public defenders of the young assassin laid themselves open to numerous sarcastic replies by the correspondents of the opposition press, including a prohibition paper, whose editor sums up those rather justified retorts as follows: "There is no doubt that Shipp fired into Brown and blew all his brains out, killing him immediately. I mention this effect because the lack of brains is not always an obstacle to a man's prosperity in this town. Nevertheless, the editor of the Leader states that there is great sympathy felt for Shipp. Our contemporary is a very kind man, and hasn't any of that prejudice against rich folks that some people have. He generally has a kind word for a rich friend in need. As for the nigger, he ought to have been killed. He had no right to be around when a white gentleman, full of legalized liquor, wanted to see his wife," or words to that effect, the conclusion of the indignant protest being partly unquotable.

It is but fair to add that the view of the temperance journal was indorsed by several other influential papers of the state, though they held that young Shipp, in his normal condition, would have shrunk from the mere thought of his crime. The murderer justified that opinion by surrendering himself on the morning after his flight.

REFORM PROGRESS FOR FIRST THIRD OF 1895.

III.

BY REV. WILBUR F. CRAFTS.

LABOR REFORM.

The most important news in the labor world is the disinterment of the dead and stinking laissez faire in the decision of the Illinois supreme court that all eight-hour laws are unconstitutional as interfering with "freedom of contract," a decision which has been characterized truly as a decision for Dives with the pretense that it is for Lazarus. Even that part of the decision which seems to defend the industrial rights of adult women to the same privileges (?) as men, such as long hours of work, is contrary to the legal current of the century, which recognizes both physical and moral reasons why woman's work should have special regulations; but surely the judge's plea for the mythical "freedom of contract" as against eight-hour laws in general, will not stand.

The whole structure of this century's labor legislation, since the first Factory Act of 1802, rests upon the sound principle that employer and employé do not meet on terms of equality in the alleged "freedom of contract" and that the employé must be protected against excessive hours as well as other unsanitary conditions. This decision is a battering-ram, which, if it is not broken, will break down all labor legislation. We do not believe it will be accepted by the supreme courts, whether state or national.

The Brooklyn strike of street car employés, provoked by great injustice on the part of the companies, was nevertheless unjustifiable, in that it was an attempt at mob punishment on the part of men who had courts and ballots at hand for legal remedies. In fact, the battle has at last gone to the courts and the legislature, where it should have gone at first. Judge Gaynor has ruled that public corporations must regard public interests as paramount to private ones, and are not justified in sacrificing their duties to the public as common carriers, in order to maintain petty contentions as to wages. There is a bill before the New York legislature also, influentially supported, to allow New York, Brooklyn and Buffalo to own and operate street car lines. In the very midst of the strike appeared, opportunely, Albert Shaw's valuable book on "Municipalism in Great Britain," showing the practicability of cities owning and operating their own street car lines, as in Glasgow, Liverpool and Birmingham. The arbitration bill, which passed the last House of Representatives, though it did not pass the Senate, is a report of progress and indicates a growth of the feeling that arbitration is better than war among producers as well as among nations, which is the meaning also of the recent success of the council of Conciliation and Mediation of which Bishop Potter is president, in settling the strike in New York of the Electrical Workers' Union.

The decisions and divisions of the National supreme court on the income tax will cause widespread agitation. England has found no legal obstacle to similar income taxes. The most generally approved principle as to taxation is that it should be upon luxuries rather than necessaries. This principle is the very foundation of this battered, if not shattered, law. A large income is surely a "luxury," a small one a "necessity." Another principle of ever increasing favor is that taxes should fall most heavily on unearned incomes. The law also accorded with this. The opposers of the law of Congress urged against the law, as others now urge in its favor, that this tax all fell on the richest two per cent of our population. We shall now hear more than ever of "the proprietary class judge," of the friendliness of courts for corporations, of the danger of written constitutions as weapons by which courts can defeat the people and their legislators.

In this connection it is pertinent to note that the New Jersey legislature passed, over the governor's veto, a law to make judgeship elective instead of appointive offices, which was due to the popular feeling that judges show too much partiality to corporations in their decisions.

The mysterious upward movement of oil and beefsteak in April, which the people firmly believe was due not to nature but to the hidden hand of monopoly, serves to correspondingly advance the anti-monopoly sentiment of the people which is fast growing to resistless strength, as was shown by the unexpected majority of seventy to three in the New York Assembly in favor of submitting the question of municipal ownership to the voters of New York, Brooklyn and Buffalo.

THE LIQUOR PROBLEM.

The recently-expired Congress, more generally condemned than any of its predecessors, nevertheless enacted the most important temperance measure of them all—the provision that the United States department of labor should investigate the economic aspects of the liquor problem, which is better than the liquor investigating commission which friends of temperance have asked for in vain for a quarter of a century, in that the Bureau will be more expert and more impartial than a commission appointed for the purpose could have been expected to be, as is suggested by the anti-prohibition report of an anti-prohibition commission in Canada appointed by the government on request of temperance men, but so arranged as to defeat their desire. The next best thing in temperance work is the recent enactment in New Jersey, South Carolina and Indiana of temperance education laws, with improvements of imperfect laws on the same subject passed in one house and likely to pass the other in New York.

The beginning of the world-around march of the great W. C. T. U. petition to the governments of the world for prohibition, by its presentation at Washington, was a most impressive voicing of the bitter cry of womanhood everywhere against its worst foe. The concerted effort for resubmission in nearly all the prohibition states failed in Maine, New Hampshire, Kansas and South Dakota, and succeeded only in North Dakota, but the very fact that such a movement could have rallied such minorities as it did makes the news significant, not of hope only but of danger as well.

The Nicholson local option law of Indiana is an important temperance victory. A majority in any local community in that state may now prevent the sale of liquors without the expense of an election, by remonstrance. This puts the burden on the wrong side. Arkansas, if we are rightly informed, puts upon those who wish to sell the burden of getting the majority petition, but the law is next best to state prohibition, and should be worked to the utmost. Similar laws are pending in Pennsylvania and New York, but with small chance of passing, as we judge from recent visits at capitals of both states, because, for one sufficient reason, there is no adequate demand for them in the way of petitions and letters. The blame of the failure of these laws belongs as much to lazy citizens who do not ask for them as to the legislators.

The movement led by Dr. I. K. Funk and Mr. E. J. Wheeler, of the Voice, to unite the Prohibition and Populist forces in 1896—as, indeed, both interests are finding able championship in that paper—encounters its chief hindrance in the Gothenburg craze.

The liquor committee of the lower house of the Massachusetts legislature having reported unanimously against the Norwegian bill, it was defeated by a vote of 128 to 65. But in town elections in Massachusetts, Ohio and Minnesota, "unprecedented majorities," says The Outlook, "were polled for license."

In the writer's opinion the shortest road to successful coalition is the road of temperance education. We must go to labor's hosts with lectures and literature in behalf of total abstinence and prohibition before they can even be expected to meet us half way at the negative doctrine that government should have nothing to do with the liquor traffic in the way of permission, and should speak as fast and far as public sentiment expressed in ballots will allow in the language of prohibition for one day per week, or for seven, for minors or for all. Staunch Prohibitionists will never consent to state sale except for medicine and the arts.

THE GREAT LONDON CONVENTION IN JUNE.

A Chat with Lady Henry Somerset and Miss Willard.

BY AN ENGLISH FRIEND.

One day last week I had the opportunity of an hour's conversation with Lady Henry Somerset and Miss Willard at the Priory, Reigate, and was able to talk over all their wonderful plans for the great convention of the World's Woman's Christian Temperance Union, which is to be held in London next June.

The conversation opened, not perhaps unnaturally, with a reference to the horrors of seasickness which so many of our American delegates are dreading. Every one has his specific for this particular trouble, but I found Miss Willard's experience agreed with mine in the matter, and she said moreover that Dr. Lunn strongly agreed with her, that the best remedy for seasickness is to take a ten grain dose of bromide of potassium three times a day for, say, a couple of days before going on board, dissolving the medicine in half a glass of water.

"This is," I remarked, "a great gathering of the World's Woman's Christian Temperance Union?"

"It is," said Miss Willard. "But you must please understand definitely that the World's Woman's Christian Temperance Union and the British Women's Temperance Association are working in the strictest harmony and are intermingling their programs. The full strength of both societies will be in play right through the whole program."

Having heard something of the eloquence of other American women besides the splendid representative of her nation with whom I was then talking, I asked if we were likely to be privileged to hear any of the great American women preachers during their visit to London.

"Certainly," said Miss Willard. "It has already been arranged that two hundred pulpits and platforms are to be occupied by women preachers and reformers on Sunday, June 16. Among the representative women who are coming from all parts of the world I mention Miss Ackermann, who founded the Australasian Woman's Christian Temperance Union, Mrs. Edith Archibald of Halifax, Nova Scotia, daughter of Sir Edward Archibald, the British consul in New York city, who was entrusted with the task of carrying the Alabama money from New York to Washington. Unfortunately, Mrs. Williams, of Montreal, our great leader in Canada, has recently died. We shall also have eminent representatives of the woman's temperance movement from India and South Africa and the United States."

"And what is to be your program, Miss Willard?" At this point Lady Henry Somerset came into the room, and rapidly gave me the plans on which the local committee are working.

"On Monday and Tuesday," said Lady Somerset, "there will be meetings of the British Women's Temperance Council. Tuesday there will be a great meeting in Queen's Hall, with a choir of four hundred women in white ribbon uniforms. The uniform consists of pale blue jackets, broad white ribbons and black skirts. They will sing a selection of beautiful hymns from the "White Ribbon Hymnal," prepared by Miss Anna Gordon, who has edited our hymn books for years. At this meeting in Queen's Hall we hope to have some of the foremost temperance speakers in England. Wednesday we shall have meetings all day at Queen's Hall, when fraternal delegates, representing all the great philanthropic bodies, will be received, and will welcome the representatives of all nations gathered together in our assembly. The great demonstration of the week will, however, take place on Thursday in the Albert Hall, which will seat from eight to ten thousand people. The monster Polyglot Petition will be banked and massed in the hall, and will be presented to representatives of the British government. It is impossible to present it to Parliament, because, as was the case at Washington, none but subjects of the realm can sign any petition presented to the English legislature. President Cleveland received the petition in Washington, and we hope to have an opportunity of presenting it in like manner here. We want it to be understood that this Polyglot Petition is a popular presentation of the world-wide plea of women for the abolition of the hateful traffic in opium and alcohol wherever that traffic exists, and for equal social and moral justice for men and women.

"In addition to the great feature of the presentation of the Polyglot Petition at this meeting, we hope to have a number of representatives of each country in which our society exists, in the costume of their own nation, and they will march on to the platform as the national anthem of their own country is being played, and a verse of it will be thrown by a magic lantern on to a screen. As the British contingent enters the hall, they will be preceded by a large Union Jack, and each woman will carry a small Union Jack, and "God save the Queen" will be played. When the American section enters they will be preceded by the Stars and Stripes, and each will carry their own national flag, while a verse of the "Star-Spangled Banner" will be thrown on the screen and the tune will be played. The French women will enter to the tune of the "Marseillaise," and so on with the other nations. We shall probably have as beautiful singing as has ever been heard at a public meeting. In addition to the choir of four hundred women I have just referred to, there will be another choir of five hundred children, making a choir of nine hundred in all, which will be conducted by Mr. Cowley, director of music for the school board of London.

"We shall then have thrown on the screen, pictures of the principal persons and speakers connected with the woman's temperance movement, and a few remarkable statements, such as the statement that every state, with three exceptions only, has scientific temperance education for the young. We shall also describe, on the screen, the marvelous organization of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union, with its forty departments, and its strength in all these fifty states, and an officer at the head of each department."

"Does that finish the program?"

Lady Henry Somerset replied that the only other feature in the program would be that on the next day she hoped to have the pleasure of welcoming to the Priory, Reigate, all the delegates of this immense gathering.

"What is this that I hear about a gathering in Switzerland after the London Convention is over?"

"Dr. Lunn, who is organizing the American contingent, and is chartering the steamship, Berlin, of the American line for that purpose, is arranging a most interesting series of meetings in the lovely Swiss valley of Grindelwald, for the week following our Convention. Miss Willard and I hope to be there, if possible, and among others who will be there and take part in the meetings and discussions, will be Miss Anna Gordon, Mrs. Barker, Miss Belle Kearney, Miss Hallie Q. Brown, and it is hoped also that Mrs. Price Hughes and Mrs. Josephine Butler, La Marechale, and others will be present."

"What is this Grindelwald gathering?"

"It is the European Chautauqua, and the most notable and successful effort ever made to bring about a unity between evangelical churches. The growth of this great enterprise is the best indication of the foresight that has planned and the skill that has carried out, an undertaking as difficult in the moral as in the material aspect."

It only remains to add that any who intend to join this interesting party, and to be present on what will be an almost historic occasion, should write to Dr. Lunn's secretary, Review of Reviews, Astor Place, New York. The cruise is open, not only to members, but also to their friends of both sexes, and the opportunity is one which will not speedily recur.

WILLARD HALL, NOONTIDE LINKS.

Willard Hall never looked more beautiful than on the day of the unveiling of Willard fountain, and many eyes were moist with tears when three hundred children sang, "Tremble, King Alcohol, we shall grow up," and when they marched out from that consecrated place, one woman, at least, heard as in a dream the echo of their footsteps, "around the world, around the world."

. . . . . .

Truly, the white ribbon is a blessed tie, a leveler of creed barriers, prophetic of the days yet to be. So thought I while listening to our honored Catholic sister, Leonora Barry-Lake. It was a masterly talk, a plea for Christly love and charity—under the spell of it we forgot for a time our self-narrowness, and longed for nothing so much as to stand on the heights of God.

She was on her way from the far east to the Pacific slope, and during her four hours' stay in the city found her way to the Temple Beautiful. She stood to speak. It was the same old, old story. Her love for Jesus and His work, and when the noon worship was ended she walked slowly around the room reading the inscription on the wall. Pausing before the New York column she said, indicating the line, "Would you know my name, find it here." We looked at the inscription and then at her, and said, "Blessed are they that love—"

. . . . . .

After all, what are we but children a little older grown, and some of us love stories quite as well now as in the daffodil days too quickly gone. All of which was proven by Mrs. M. M. Weeks, of Michigan, who came with pictured chart, to tell us how she talked to little people. From the chart she showed us the fate of a tender vine trained wrong; and while she talked one man cried out, "I am the vine gone wrong." Oh, the pity of it!

"Our Father who art in heaven." So said we all, standing with bowed head and reverent, and as the words fell from lips unaccustomed to them, a strange light stole in the room, crept up and down the stately columns, lingered for an instant, and was gone, and some said, "It's the glory of the Lord filling the place."

. . . . . .

Requests for prayer should be sent as below.

Marion B. Baxter,
Leader of the Noonday Meetings.

NEWS FROM THE CAPITAL.

Dear Union Signal:—I want the white-ribbon sisterhood to know that the W. C. T. U. of the District of Columbia has been greatly strengthened by the splendid convocation, and the visit of our World's and National officers in February. During, and immediately following the convocation, we received one hundred new members, and we gain more at almost every meeting held. The work of the various departments is being prosecuted with unusual vigor and efficiency. The general officers are making official visitations to every local union, and at each one we are greatly encouraged by the reports of local superintendents and the very evident consecration of the women to the work. Two enthusiastic Y's have lately been organized, and the District union of Y's, under the efficient leadership of Mrs. S. D. La Fetra, District superintendent of young women's work, will soon give a very unique and interesting entertainment called the "Merchants' Carnival and Tradesmen's Jubilee."

We have just had a five days' visit from our first round-the-world missionary, Mrs. Mary Clement Leavitt. She is certainly the most wonderful woman of her age whom I have ever met. At almost sixty-five years she can speak thirteen times a week with great clearness of expression, giving out great thoughts, and relating facts in the history of nations too seldom searched out or remembered by others. Her voice is strong and clear and her logic irresistible. Having heard her at each of her meetings in Washington I can testify that she has very rarely repeated herself, and never given the same lecture twice, and I enjoyed her last one more than any preceding. I hope we may have her again next year, as our people are always glad to hear her.

Your sister, in a ceaseless warfare for the right against a traffic which makes all it touches wrong,

Mary E. Griffith,
President W. C. T. U. of D. C.

ENGLISH MATTERS.

Dear Union Signal:—A "welcome" of surpassing beauty was given to Lady Henry Somerset at one of the first public meetings she attended on her return from America. It was in the form of an original poem, written by Mrs. Parker, the wife of Dr. Joseph Parker (herself president of one of the London B. W. T. A. branches), and was recited by her at a great meeting held in the City Temple on March 28. The meeting was arranged by the Speakers' Bureau of Political Departments, and was the first of a series held in support of the government direct veto bill. The vast audience listened entranced as Mrs. Parker recited her poem to the subdued strains on the organ of "Home, Sweet Home." Lady Somerset modestly "passed on" to the great band of women for whom she speaks, the words of welcome so fittingly spoken. Held on the eve of the introduction of the government bill, the meeting was of no small importance, and its resolution sent to the sixty London members of Parliament will not be without effect.

Anticipations are rising high with regard to the approaching Convention in London of the World's Woman's Christian Temperance Union, accompanied as the gathering will be by the nineteenth annual council of the National British Women's Temperance Association. The expectation of the presence at these meetings of the large contingent from America and numerous delegates from other countries throughout the world tends greatly to add to the interest which must attach to such an occasion. Extensive preparations are in course of making to render the gatherings worthy at once of the organizations, of the cause and of this country, and there are many indications that the events of the week will mark a memorable era in the history of temperance reform.

The buildings which have been pressed into the service, will of themselves, cause the gatherings to stand out prominently in the public view, including as they do the City Temple, one of the most celebrated of church buildings in London, and well known as the scene for many years past of the labors of Dr. Joseph Parker; the Queen's Hall, one of our newest and best public assembly halls, which has already been used again and again for great temperance demonstrations under the auspices of the white ribbon women; and the Royal Albert Hall, Kensington, which has a world-wide celebrity, and is capable of seating no less than ten thousand people. To attempt a continuous series of great meetings during the days of one week in three such auditoriums might easily be deemed beyond the possibility of successful accomplishment, but there is, nevertheless, no fear whatever that the results will fail to justify the confidence and the courage of those responsible for the proceedings. The City Temple will be the scene during two days of the National Council, composed of many hundreds of delegates and members of the association, drawn from every quarter of the country, besides the visitors from other lands whose presence will constitute a feature of exceptional interest. Ample provision is also being made for the general public, large bodies of whom will no doubt take advantage of the opportunity to see the great gathering of white ribbon women in business session.

The annual public meeting of the British Women's Temperance Association will occupy Queen's Hall on Tuesday evening, June 18. It is to be addressed by many of the leading speakers in the movement, and will no doubt equal, both for numbers and enthusiasm, the similar gatherings which have been held in the same Hall in the past. The next day, Wednesday, the third biennial convention of the World's W. C. T. U. will assemble in the same building, morning and afternoon, while on the evening of the same day it is probable that sectional meetings devoted to some of the principal departments of the work will also be held there.

The principal demonstration of the series will, however, take place on Thursday evening, June 20, in the Royal Albert Hall, and it is to take the form of a great public assemblage which will be unique in character, unprecedented in dimensions and unparalleled for interest. This gathering is to be of a threefold character—constituting a welcome to the World's W. C. T. U., on the part of the united temperance forces of this country, a great spectacular display of the many-sided and far-reaching character of our reform, and an emphatic and picturesque demand on the part of women for the power of prohibition. The latter point has specially in view the bill at present before our Parliament, at the instance of the National government, which proposes to give the people including women voters, the right to veto the common sale of intoxicating liquor. That bill has no more thorough, determined, or well organized supporters, than the temperance women so ably led by Lady Henry Somerset. The limelight lantern will be utilized in connection with one leading part of the Albert Hall program. The great Polyglot Petition is intended to be festooned around the vast hall—the only auditorium in England whose dimensions will allow of justice being done to the imposing proportions of the unique roll. In many respects, therefore, the meeting will be one such as has never before been attempted in the temperance world.

It is not the province of this letter to give specially detailed information, but the outline already given will sufficiently indicate the extent and scope of the preparations which are being made; while a great many other plans will also be carried into execution, all of them aiming at making the forthcoming meetings a series of brilliant successes. No doubt further information will be available for your readers before the date of the sailing of the Berlin, but in any case all who propose to visit London at the time in question may be sure of receiving a most hearty welcome, and of finding when they arrive here that the functions to which they are coming are such as to be worth the journey. Very many English workers are looking forward with real pleasure to meeting some whose names are already well known, and who for their works' sake are most highly regarded.

London, England. HENRY J. OSBORN.

A VOICE FROM SOUTH AFRICA.

DEAR UNION SIGNAL:—You will not be surprised to hear from me after reading what the Independent of October 4, 1894, has to say on the Bible wine question. It would seem that there is no longer any room for question. "Modern scholarship" has settled the controversy. We are "required" to accept it as a fact that our Divine Lord sanctioned by His own example the use of alcoholic drinks. But at the same time no one will deny that as God He must have been fully cognizant of all the misery and ruin and soul-destruction which the use of alcohol would bring upon mankind. He who cannot be tempted of evil neither tempteth any man. He who has taught His people to pray, "Lead us not into temptation," has by His own example led the way for indulgence in this most seductive of all evils, by which thousands upon thousands yearly in every land are beguiled on in the road to overwhelming ruin and endless woe. Our Divine Master is charged with partaking of that against which in other parts of His Word He utters the most solemn warnings and even pronounces a woe upon those who indulge in it or give it to their neighbor.

We are required to discard the evidence furnished by such men as Prof. Moses Stuart, Taylor Lewis, Andrew Baxter, Ph. D., Rev. Canon Hopkins, Dr. Norman Kerr, Dr. F. R. Lees, Prof. Henry Drummond, Dr. Adam Clark, Rev. Dawson Burns, Dr. Valpy French and a host of others.

We had supposed the above list contained some names worthy of being ranked among "respectable scholars." Of Dr. Lees, for instance, we notice that Professor Douglas says in his Imperial Bible Dictionary, "No writer with whom we are acquainted has devoted so much time and research to the subject as Dr. F. R. Lees, and we believe his principal positions have not yet been successfully assailed." Dr. Kerr says of him: "His industry, scholarship and acuteness of reasoning merit the warmest thanks of every lover of truth and the Bible." Professor Drummond, in his "Pax Vobiscum," says: "The expressed juice of the grape was the common drink at every peasant's board," (refering to Palestine in time of Christ).

Dr. Kerr, in his "Wines, Scriptural and Ecclesiastical," fills page after page with the testimony of writers, ancient and modern, such as Pliny, Homer, Hippocrates, Lyttleton, Longmuir, Gobat, Missionary Van Lennep, Smith, Thompson, etc., also quotations from Oriental dictionaries and from encyclopedias, showing that unfermented grape juice called wine has for centuries been used and is still used in the East. Are we to ignore all these statements? Surely this is requiring quite too much. We see no necessity for accepting such conclusions. We will not believe nor teach that our Saviour set the example of using alcoholic drink. We have yet to learn of a single earnest temperance worker who does believe this. The line must be drawn between alcoholic and non-alcoholic drinks. If Christ partook of the former how can we enforce the duty of abstaining from them? Moderate drinking becomes the one right ground, and, as many will contend, a necessary virtue.

Some say, if we cannot teach Christ's example we must teach Paul's precepts. We believe Christ and Paul are one in their teachings. Christ knew that drink would make millions and millions to offend, and therefore He would not touch it, not even when offered Him in His dying agonies upon the cross.

It is appalling to think of the multitudes that will gladly avail themselves of the excuse furnished them by such reasoning (as Dr. Chambers gives) to indulge in wine drinking, and thus be made to offend. We notice that Dr. Chambers is quoted by the religious papers and are well aware that such views will be eagerly grasped by immense numbers. As for his statement which ranks the desire for alcoholic drink among the "natural appetites," it much surprises us. Such an appetite is always acquired or inherited, never natural. LAURA B. BRIDGMAN.

DEAR SISTERS:—From an account of a "White Ribbon Tea" held in Louisiana, I cull this bit of encouragement: "The population in this section of country is very much mixed, foreigners predominating. When we win this element for total abstinence and Prohibition, the final victory will be near at hand. It made one's heart bound with joy to see the white ribbon gleaming on the coats and dresses of Jews, French, Germans, Italians and creoles, and to note the zest with which they gave their very best of musical and histrionic talent to make the evening a success. A dark-skinned Italian Catholic girl came to the tea with a fair-haired Saxon, the daughter of a Methodist minister, both wearing our badge. A young Jewess was overheard saying to her escort, 'The lips that touch wine shall never touch mine,' while near her a banker from the West was fiercely defending the justice of woman's political enfranchisement."

A practical sister gives us an answer to this question, which appeared in THE UNION SIGNAL some time ago: "If a white-ribboner is able to take only one paper, which shall it be, the National or state organ?" The reply is as follows: "As a local and county worker, claiming a degree of intelligence, I would offer a very practical solution to the question, viz.: That all membership dues should be one dollar (instead of sixty-five cents), and this should include a year's subscription to the state paper. This would leave them free to subscribe for our UNION SIGNAL, and we could bend our energies for this one paper. Again, we have a large number who subscribe for neither, and the collection of one dollar dues would put the state paper in the hands of each member, and leave us an extra dime for county work, the need of which is very great. Department work is always crippled for lack of funds. I hope this will meet the approval of all white-ribboners from the greatest officer of the National Union down to the timid little woman of the Local Union, who does not know much about the working of the grand organization of which she is a member."

This impresses Mother Experience and all the Grandmother Experiences who have been consulted as a very wise solution. What state will be the first to adopt the suggestion?

There are still a few answers to "What is the best thing you have accomplished in your union?"

The president of New Douglas, Ill., W. C. T. U., writes: "The best thing we have done this year—because it has reached most people, and was continuous—has been to keep up a 'column' in the local newspaper. The paragraphs were fresh and original, and have served as a means of communication with members; have referred to phases of the subject as they appeared here, with an occasional bit of the most important general news.

"As a rule, the local paper is read by everybody in the community, and all of it read, so it happens that some, otherwise out of the reach of its influence and knowing nothing or little of the W. C. T. U., come by this means to be quite familiar with its aims and methods, and talk as glibly as anybody about the white ribbon.

"The next best thing was a couple of trials. Members of the W. C. T. U. visited two saloons after the legal hour of closing, found one open, and the other, having got wind of the affair, closed. The keeper of the latter had the visitors arrested for 'disturbing his peace.' At the trial both sides had able lawyers, the prosecution gave in their testimony, and the case was dismissed.

"A member of the union then prosecuted saloon-keeper No. 1; the individuals who had visited, and the persons found in the saloon being witnesses. The ruling of the jury was the strangest on record; the saloon lawyer accepting none who did not answer in the negative to his question: 'Are you morally opposed to the saloon?' Yet this jury found the defendant guilty. Many were present at these trials. The difference in the two elements was strikingly displayed. One, looking at the faces on the other side, said, 'Nothing had made him so much think of the rabble that cried, "Crucify Him."' They were excellent object lessons. This saloon soon closed."

May I not say in closing, "Though I may not be able to inform men more than they know, yet I may give them the occasion to consider"?

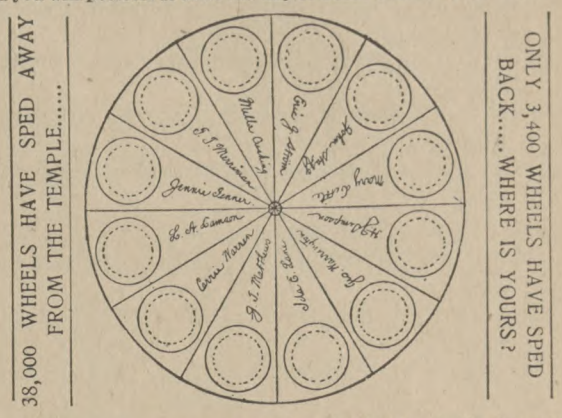
PRAYER.—Strengthen, O God, that which thou hast wrought for us.—Psalm 68:28.

PROMISE.—He which hath begun a good work in you will perform it until the day of Jesus Christ.—Phil. 1:6.



All honor to conservative New York; she is the banner city in regard to filling Wheels, and Central No. 1, New York city, is the banner union. This union has filled one hundred Wheels and two over. Dr. Phebe J. B. Wait, its wide-awake president, has sent $122.50 receipts from Wheels. This union has the honor of first acceding to Miss Willard's request that each union in the country should fill one hundred Wheels. We notice among those who filled the above Wheels, the bright little granddaughter of our late lamented friend, Mr. Demorest, of New York, Alice L. Demorest, filled five.

The Moline, Ill., W. C. T. U. is one of the model unions of the country. It carries on a great many departments of work. Its members, led by its noble and able president, Mrs. M. E. Metzgar, are a unit in every good work, and because of their "fearlessness and faithfulness" as one expressed it, bequests amounting to $1,800 have been given the society. Mrs. Metzgar writes: "A little thing happened at our union the other day that I know will encourage your heart. The question was asked, 'What are we doing for the Temple?' The answer was, 'Nothing, just now; we have already paid over $200, which seems our share.' One of the women replied, 'Let us forget all we have done and go to work as if we had done nothing'; and immediately a superintendent was appointed, one hundred Wheels ordered, and the women are at the work as enthusiastically as if nothing had been done before, and as if the whole thing depended on us." Why can't all unions go and do likewise? Misses Lora and Dora Allen, Fancher, Ill., have filled two Wheels. They are very enthusiastic over the little device, and have written some verses on the subject, to the tune of "John Brown." The first stanza runs as follows:

The Temple Wheel is rolling fast and gathering as it goes,
The many little silver dimes that into dollars grow.
From ocean unto ocean it is traveling to and fro,

We have made a little change in the Wheel, and the axle is now formed of a silver dime, so the one who sends for it can start it if they so desire, by placing their own dime in the center. This gives us thirteen dimes to each Wheel. We very much desire to clear one dollar for the Temple on each Wheel. We found in order to do this we must get out of it an additional dime, and we are sure no one will object on account of the change. Mrs. Lizzie B. Noyes, Pittsfield, Ill., writes: "I have filled four Wheels. I filled two in one day and I am an old woman and do my own work. It is very fascinating work when one takes hold of it." She also suggests that we give a certain number of the Temple number of THE UNION SIGNAL to persons filling Wheels, so as to interest other friends in the Temple. We will do better than that. We will send free of charge for distribution any number that any of our friends send for, if they will drop us a postal stating how many they desire. We have quite a large edition of the Temple number of THE UNION SIGNAL set aside for this purpose.

A president of a union writes to know how much of a hundred dollars when sent to place a name on a tablet in Willard Hall is spent for mere ornamentation. Only about three dollars; this is for cutting the name on the marble. Willard Hall is entirely lined with marble so there is no addition of tablets to be made. Of every hundred dollars sent about ninety-seven of it is clear profit for the Temple. Mrs. E. T. Ivy, Newport News, Va., asks a question a great many others have done. Her two little nieces have filled two Wheels and want more. She asks, "If they get a premium each time they fill a Wheel, and when they have filled four will they get the silver spoon besides?" No. The spoon is only given to those who fill four Wheels without having received any other premium. Mrs. Fannie S. Wilcox, of Plattsburg, New York, has sent $40.25, completing $100 to place the name of Mrs. Williams, the beloved president of the W. C. T. U. of Plattsburg, on a tablet in Willard Hall.

All orders for Temple Wheels and mite-boxes and everything pertaining to the Temple should be addressed to Mrs. Matilda B. Carse, The Temple, Chicago. Send two cent stamp for either the Temple Wheel or mite-box. Money orders and checks should be made out in the name of Mr. G. B. Shaw, treasurer, and sent to our financial secretary, Miss Sara G. Johnson, Room 1111, The Temple, Chicago.

IN BLOSSOM TIME.

Who would have thought, awhile ago, when bitter winds were raging,
And all the wintry world was chill, that deep beneath the snow
The heart of summer life and heat a victor's strife was waging,
Till in the trees that gave no sign the sap began to flow?

Before a single tiny leaf had shown the bud's increasing,
Before a glimmer of the spring had brightened twig or spray,
The bloom and beauty all were pledged; a loving hand unceasing
Was working in the winter time to bring the summer's day.

And now the fields are like the sea, with foamy ripples tossing,
And o'er the blushing crests of May the bluebird glances free;
The sunshine and the diamond shower like shuttles swift are crossing,
And the gladness of our childish days comes back to you and me.

For God has brought the blossoms, and the fruit in time will follow;
The seed within the furrow dropped, and then the golden grain;
The patient work and waiting still, and then o'er hill and hollow
The happy songs of harvest and the overflowing wain.

Ah! never when the winter about our way is beating,
In sorrow's breath or burden of the toil that we must share,
Should our trustful souls grow timorous, or falter to retreating,
For the blossoms of the springtime are in our Father's care.

VOTES AND THEIR FRUIT.

BY ANNIE A. PRESTON.

"I shall vote for license," said Superintendent Deming. "There is no such a thing as controlling the drinking of liquor; any one who wants it will have it, license or no license. The city needs the money, and although I am a temperance man, that is the way I shall vote."

"I wonder at your talking in that way when you have boys growing up," some one replied.

"Oh, I keep my boys off the streets; they are either in school or at work, and evenings wife looks out for them. My boys will never fall into the drink habit. It is the home teaching that makes a good or a bad man."

A great deal of this kind of talk by a great many good citizens had its influence, and the pretty little Connecticut city voted for license by a large majority.

"Now," said Superintendent Deming exultantly, "there will be money for city improvements."

The city improvements were not begun, for in three months the hard times came. All the mills were shut down, many places of business were closed and it was remarked continually that only the liquor saloons remained in full blast.

Superintendent Deming being out of work made the best of the enforced vacation by going to California to visit relatives. Jamie, the twelve year old boy, was at school, but for Jack, who was eighteen, active and fond of company, there was nowhere to go outside of home but on the streets.

License had made liquor drinking respectable, and it was sold at drug stores, restaurants and groceries, as well as at saloons and hotels. The results were everywhere visible; men and boys, and even women and girls, were seen the worse for liquor.

In upon this state of affairs Superintendent Deming, the enthusiastic advocate for license, came unexpectedly one September morning. The street leading from the railway station to Main street swarmed with idlers, and, as he passed a foul alleyway, he heard a familiar voice saying in a pleading tone, "Come on, now, Jacky; let's go home. Mother is worried. She don't like to have us boys out over night."

"Shut up! I won't go home," replied a thick, unrecognizable voice. "I'm hungry; I'm going to Luke's."

"Oh, Jacky, come home with me. Mother has breakfast all ready for you. Come right along, now," and the brave little pleader took the arm of his brother and guided his uncertain steps up the street.

At a public meeting a few evenings later the father said: "I thought I should die of shame. Then the thought came to me like a flash, 'I ought to be no more ashamed of the legitimate fruit of my ballot for license than of the ballot itself,' and I stepped forward and took my poor son's arm. I am cured. I want no more license. As long as it was somebody's else boy who was tempted I could stand it. When my boy was caught in the net my eyes were opened, and now I will fight against license as hard as I fought for it a year ago. But the evil wrought in a year can never be undone, and the sights every day on the streets of this little city should teach every voter to be wise in time."

A PSYCHOLOGICAL VIEW OF POCKETS.

BY AMOS R. WELLS.

Women do not appreciate the profound effect of pockets on character. If they did, they would have more of them.

I am writing this on the cars. With my overcoat, I glory in sixteen pockets. If I had fewer, I should now be engaged, as is every woman in the car, in gazing stupidly through the raindashed windows and yawning. A sudden ictus scribendi has seized me. One pocket forthwith has furnished a convenient pencil tablet, another a lead pencil, a third a knife to sharpen it, a fourth my note-book of ideas for articles, and here we are!

You may have heard of people that carry their brains in their pockets. Possibly there's some truth in that sneer.

For instance, note-books. Note-books are simply indispensable to any thinker, any student, any observer. They are the hooks of literature, and they need no baiting. They coin the odd moments into golden hours. (Mixed metaphor.) They concentrate and perpetuate experiences. Wayside ideas, choice quotations, a comical sign-board, the address of a friend, the price of your new hat, subjects for essays—all is fish that approaches their catholic net. A fine sentence in a sermon—out comes a man's note-book. A new word to be investigated in the dictionary—out it comes again. Now women can't do that.

What would men do if, like their sisters, they were confined for mental comradeship to their unassisted brains? Besides the aforesaid note-books, men's pockets contain newspapers, magazines, books. If a woman should buy a newspaper on the train she would be obliged to throw it away at the end of the route—and she is too economical for that—or carry it in her hand, which is already burdened with the contents of six of my pockets. Therefore she gets her news at second hand, or, usually, not at all.

The masculine Sunday-school teacher carries a New Testament and his Sunday-school quarterly, and gets his lesson at odd minutes. (Pockets, by the way, are the best things in the world to impress the value of odd minutes, and make it possible to utilize them.) Every man, moreover, is a clerk accoutred for instant service. One pocket carries, in a neat holder, a fountain pen, a black lead pencil and a red and blue crayon pencil. Another pocket furnishes an eraser and a pencil sharpener. A third pocket completes the outfit with a supply of paper. It is safe to say that most men, sooner than part with these portable clerical privileges, would resign the right to vote.

A man's business life is reflected in his pockets. Search a man's pockets and you need not ask him his trade. "Shrouds have no pockets;" says the fine old proverb; and if fashion should (or could) obliterate a business man's pockets, he would consider himself in a veritable shroud. Fancy a man carrying his pocketbook in his hand—with his handkerchief—all through a day's work! Yes, and his postage stamps, and his rubber bands, and his business cards in a dainty card-case, and his scissors, and his account book, and his letters, and his memoranda, and—how could a man do business with his watch dungeoned in the limbo to which women condemn theirs, when they carry any at all?

I pause in awe. How much in man's character depends on his watch! How pregnant with consequence is even the difference between an open face and a hunting case! The punctuality! The regularity! The exactness! The knowledge of the value of five minutes! And if it required five minutes for a man to get at his watch—

Moreover, how could a man get on in the world without the pound of coppers, nickels, dimes and quarters he carries in one pocket? Besides its convenience, think what a drill in mental arithmetic this implies. Doubtless if a man had room about his apparel for nothing but a single wadded-up greenback, he would be obliged to use his fingers to determine the proper change in the case of thirty-seven cents from a dollar.

When a man goes on errands it is as easy for him to buy twenty things as one. He checks them off on his memorandum book. But a woman, if she has a list on a scrap of paper it is at the bottom of her shopping-bag, and might as well be in Cochin China. Therefore, a woman has to go back the next day for the things she forgot, whereas, if she had had a memorandum pocket—

A man also knows just what he has spent—that is, some men do. This is because they carry an account book, and put things down as they buy them. If a man's account book were in the lefthand corner of the bureau drawer under the handkerchief box he wouldn't make an entry oftener than every other week, either.

I hesitate to broach the subject of keys, it involves so much. I really believe that man's carrying of the keys of the world has done more to give him his lord-of-creation-open-sesame air than anything else. By virtue of his key pocket a man feels as masterful as the warden of a penitentiary or the janitor of a public school. There is his night latchkey, his office door key, his desk key, his safe deposit vault key, his post-office box key, his outside door key, his home secretary key, his valise key and a dozen more. A woman must hide the key under the mat.

The relation of pockets to bodily comfort is no slight matter, either. I refrain from mentioning the handkerchief, because I understand that women are sensitive on that point. I know men would be if they had to go through life with one hand, or their one lonely pocket practically mortgaged to that implement of cleanliness, their nose being thus their best advertised feature. Maintaining, however, an inoffensive silence regarding handkerchiefs, I may mention the comb, wherewith a man may always make himself presentable; the toothpick, man's joy and consolation; the knife and scissors (and I have known men to carry needles and thread); the button hook, ready for gallant attentions; and the pocket mirror! In winter a man carries a neckcloth ready for emergencies. He has a smoking cap for draughts. He has his gloves and usually two pairs. On a journey his pockets are equal to a second valise.

A man's pockets make him resourceful, ingenious, helpful. They are magazines of playthings for fretful babies, of tools when handles break or accidents occur, of amusement and occupation for unexpected delays and waiting. They are the real Mother Robinson's bag.

A man's pockets give him assurance and positiveness. Woman, carrying her possessions in her hand, labors much of the time under an uneasy sense of having lost something. Man is sure he has lost nothing. It is in one of his pockets. And he finds it there. Pockets are safer than banks.

A man's pockets make him analytical; they teach him to classify. He apportions his life out among his pockets according to a regular system. Everything is in its place, and there is certainly a place for everything.

A man's pockets make him methodical. All through his life change goes in this direction, rubber bands in that, business cards in the other, in one regular, undeviating order. If he wants his letters, there is the immemorial spot; or his watch, his hands move automatically as the hands of the chronometer. And from youth, through courtship, through the honeymoon, yes, "until death do us part," there is the nook consecrated to a certain photograph case—the pocket nearest the heart. Now, women can't do that.

A man's pockets make him self-sufficient. He is a little universe; with his overcoat, a big one. He has his time-table, his watch and his pocketbook, and is ready on the instant for Europe or Cathay. With his hands in his pockets (most comfortable of positions!), jingling his change (most delightful of sensations!), he can confront the world in arms.

But why not equalize them the other way? Give woman the pocket—and this without any reference to "pocket boroughs." The pocket gains I have hinted at—convenience, comfort, method, regularity, promptness, resourcefulness, helpfulness, self-sufficiency, system and the like—these surely are not unfeminine. In some of them already women excel their brothers; in others, they are inferior. Why should they not be glad to obtain them all—out of pockets?

Just think what pockets a woman might have, with her voluminous and multiform attire! Why, it would be a new science. And think what woman would have to put into them! Her powers of individualizing would extend to her pockets, and the poets could write sonnets to Lesbia's pocket, and entirely different sonnets to Sylvia's pocket, and still have a-plenty left to say about Fulvia's pocket. A new branch of literature!—Jenness-Miller Monthly.

"If thou art blest,
Then let the sunshine of thy gladness rest
On the dark edges of each cloud that lies
Black in thy brothers' skies.
If thou art sad,
Still be thou in thy brothers' gladness glad."

ARTHUR.

BY LILLIAN L. TROTT.

(Concluded.)

His teacher had both his hands now, and all at once he realized how sweet it was of her to stay here bothering with him when she might have given him his feruling long ago, and gone out on the sunny hills with Miss Haleigh.

"He will be all the more likely to listen to one who realizes it. He will feel that you value these tough sinews too highly to rashly waste them."

The shaft was aptly worded and she saw it go home.

"I'll do it!" doubling both fists and emphasizing his decision with an indentation on the desk: "he doesn't think I'm a coward, 'n' you shan't!"

"Now you had better go; your cows will be waiting."

"Good night, then," and he started away.

"What did Miss Norton say to you? the boys said you'd get it good." Eddie was not above gloating over the victor's punishment. "Did she make you cry for quarter?"

"Yes."

It was Eddie's turn now to whistle. "I didn't think you would take a flogging from a little bit of a woman like that!" looking him over wonderingly, and half inclined to be contemptuous. Arthur's set teeth warned him not to push inquiries. "Got a light?" he changed the subject.

"No. I've knocked off!"

"You haven't! What's that for?"

"I don't want to be so small and dwindlin' 'n' puny 't any little girl c'n lick me."

Eddie looked into his flashing eyes and his own dropped. If Arthur had asked his pardon for whipping him he couldn't have hurt him worse.

"I'll tell you, Ned," his voice sank to a shamed whisper: "You know what my father is? I don't want to be like that."

Eddie will never know what effort it cost his aforetime rival to speak so of his father. "He began with that, I s'pose," pointing to Eddie's pipe; "most boys do."

Together they followed the cows down the road, Eddie forgetting his pipe in the contemplation of weightier matters. Miss Norton saw them pass her boarding house and thought smilingly, "What else did I teach to-night, besides a history lesson and a scientific temperance lesson? —a lesson in 'Peace-on-earth-good-will-to-men.'"

It was late in the autumn when Arthur again referred to the subject. The arithmetic lesson had been difficult, and he had requested her to assist him after school hours.

"What is it?" she asked, as he lingered.

"Nothing much, only—I wanted to tell you't Ned doesn't smoke now."

"Oh, I'm so glad!"

"I dunno's 'twill last. Ned's one o'them feller's is just like whoever he's with. When he'n'I chum he doesn't 'cause I don't. 'Fhe gets with th'roughs, like Tom Dean-'n'Seld'n Lork he'll do whatever they tell 'im to."

Arthur now knew that brothers and sisters and a widowed mother depended on the successful teaching of this Ethel Norton just as surely as his father's family looked for the earnings of his strong young arms. But he realized more fully than she how doubtful was her chance of reappointment to this position for the following year. The thorough teaching of hygiene, though legalized by the state, had won for her more foes than friends.

"She might hear the lessons jist ez they air in the book, stidder lengthenin' 'em out with them everlastin' anechdotes," one old sot had said; "'n then the way she wears that ribbon, so pesky proud on't, is a caution." It was not pleasant to hear his source of revenue spoken of thus lightly, and by a slip of a girl, at that!

Arthur pondered these things within himself as he went into the night air, whistling softly when he came to the nearest cider mill, and trying to fit the tune to the names of the drinkers of his knowledge.

A week later was "town meeting day," and men and boys were at the polls.

"Call for me, will yer? I'm goin' over after dinner." The boys separated at the mill door, Tom Dean to turn down a side street, Seldon Lork to go on up the hill to the tumble down shanty which he called home. The midday meal over Sel returned, taking in the side street on his way to the town hall. With him came a boy several years younger whom we will call Ned, for his acquaintances are fast dropping the effeminate "Eddie," as their respect for him increases. In appearance he has changed but little; only those who know him best observe the firm lines forming around the mouth and the steadier look in his eyes.

They were not yet voters, Tom and Seldon, but they could be of some service. Armed with ballots for their patron they stationed themselves at the doorway and assailed every man, eminent or otherwise, with the self-same salutation. Ned saw, and fired with enthusiasm, went and did likewise.

"See the puppy!" exclaimed Tom; "jist 'cause we did! 'N' he ain't workin' on our side, either. He don't know; call him back'n' tell 'im better."

"Dunno 'bout that. Somebody else got holt 'f 'im ahead 'f us. He ain't like he uster be."

"He'll do jist ez yer tell 'im to."

"He stopped for me on the way over 'n' I tried t' git 'im ter take some cider. He wouldn't tech it no more'n so much pizen."

The tramp, tramp of many feet drowned their voices and they searched for new victims, their one object being to defeat Mr. Hall, the school superintendent who had employed Miss Norton. To forestall them Ned slipped outside to offer his wares first. Mr. French, the rival candidate, drove into the yard late. Friends had gone home to dine with him, and they had taken a longer nooning than needful, confident that their interests were in safe hands at the polls. He drove alone to the rear of the building and tied his horse.

"Mr. French!"

"Well?" said that gentleman turning to the boy.

"They're drugging a man in there," Ned pointed to one end of the row of stalls.

"They're what?"

"He's for Hall, 'n' his brother 'n' some more are for you, 'n' they're getting him so befuddled that he won't know whether it's you or Hall or who he's voting for." Ned delivered the information all in a breath, lest his courage should be exhausted and he should fail to show the great man the corruption of his party.

Mr. French visited that stall immediately, and then went within doors to ventilate his disgust. How could small boys be expected to respect the authority of schools of instruction instituted by such a community? So thought Mr. French, and so said he, and withdrew his name from the list.

"If it hadn't been for that, Hall would have lost, 'n' we would 've lost Miss Norton. French was taking everything before him," said Ned to Arthur afterwards.

Two years more did Ethel Norton teach in this little village school. Then she was called to a higher position. Arthur was prepared for the next room, and so the parting was less hard. On the eve of her departure they had a long talk, and Arthur gave her an account of that "town-meeting day."

"It was all the result of that 'flogging' you gave me," he said, merrily.

"I was looking forward to your future that night," his teacher answered. "I shuddered to think what it might be; I knew you would make a good man or a bad one. You did nothing by halves."

That expression, half-awed, half-frightened, that she had seen but once before, came over his face, and she said: "In saving Ned, Arthur, you have saved yourself."

AN HISTORICAL MEETING.

The W. C. T. U. sent out invitations for a (general and president of the United States) tea at the (English general who suffered defeat and was mortally wounded by the Indians) farm. This we gladly accepted. When we were going up the (general in the Confederate army), on the (general in the civil war), a general in the Revolutionary war, noted for riding down a street where none dared follow) on his wheel wanted to (a murdered president of the United States) with his (general in the Union army who came near being captured at Chancellorsville). But not getting the right (English commanner at Breed's Hill), he went on ahead. Soon he shouted, "The (general appointed by Congress to succeed General Lincoln) have a (English writer of essays), (a general superseded as commander-in-chief by Sir H. Clinton) shall we get in?" (An orator noted for his speech condemning the stamp act), came with a (writer of national hymn while prisoner of war). After we passed through, we almost upset in a (British prime minister). We found there was no (general in the civil war) of admission. Being (a noted general of the confederacy) we found few there but soon (an English poet) came. For refreshments we had (what the Bostonians threw in the harbor in 1773) and a (island in the Pacific). We spent a very enjoyable and instructive evening and made some (litigant in the courts of New Orleans for the greater part of her life, who only got her rights a short time before her death) to our membership. Could we have (a governor of Virginia who burnt Norfolk in revenge)?

DEAR BOYS AND GIRLS:—Let me see, we were to have had something more last week about the new Liberty Bell. But the dedication account of our Willard Fountain took up all our space. Now for the benefit of those who do not know or have forgotten about how the bell came to be, I will tell the story very briefly.

The plan originated with Mr. William O. McDowell, of Newark, N. J., who thought it would be a splendid idea to have a new Liberty Bell, copied after the old one, which is so carefully guarded at Philadelphia. (Now look up the history of the old one!)

So committees were formed in every state to gather historical metal (medals, coins, sword heads, etc., of gold, silver, bronze, copper and nickel). More than two hundred thousand children each contributed a cent, as did many patriotic organizations, and all these things were melted and cast into a bell at Troy, N. Y., on June 8, 1893.

I said the bell was like the old one and so it is with one exception—the new Liberty Bell has an additional motto, than which none could be more appropriate: "A new commandment I give unto you, that you love one another." There was enough of overflow metal left to make a great number of souvenir bells, one of which is given to every person who rings the bell and to every school, society or family that has contributed ten dollars to the bell fund.

I saw one of these souvenir bells recently. It hung from a bit of red, white and blue ribbon and was attached by its engraved pin to the coat lapel of a philanthropic gentleman who wore it very proudly and told how he had rung the bell on the anniversary and upon the very site of the beginning of Chicago—old Fort Dearborn.

Those who have the new Liberty Bell in charge intend to ring it on the morning of days marking great events in the world's progress toward liberty, and anniversaries of great patriots.

These plans came near being entirely marred, May 2, by a great danger which menaced the beloved bell. A fire took place in the building next to that in which the bell is stored, 19 Peck Court, Chicago. The flames spread rapidly and threatened to burn the entire block. The chief sent a dozen firemen to get the bell from its dangerous position, when to their great distress it was found that nobody present knew how to use the hydraulic jacks, by which the heavy truck and its precious freight, weighing thirteen tons, could be moved. Water splashed in the rear of it and flames licked the thin roof as the men were attempting to move it. Fortunately the fire was put out and the messenger of liberty was saved.

As soon as its special car is ready the bell will start on its travels which include Christmas morning of the year 1900 in Bethlehem. All the governments of the world will be asked to send delegates to represent them at that memorable ringing. Would you not like to be there?

PRIZE ESSAYS.

The essays telling what the young writers had learned about the Great Petition came dropping into Cozy Corner very rapidly the last week in April. Some of them will be published on our Children's page during the coming weeks. To B. Viola Prouse, of Kenton, Del., the prize of the Illustrated Authors is awarded for the best written and most correct essay. She and all the others have the warm thanks and appreciation of

THE BUSINESS OUTLOOK.

A grateful man, shut fast within prison walls for crime committed, writes: "Your kind letter and bundle of papers came duly to hand; to say I am thankful puts it very tame. I read with pleasure, and will hand to others. They are very interesting. I never read anything of the kind till I got your package." We shall be glad to give the address of this poor prisoner to any one desiring to write him a word of cheer.

"Find two more names, making eighteen in all I've sent in lately." This from one of our oldest and most prominent state presidents, a grand, self-sacrificing woman, who leads a busy life and yet finds an opportune moment to do effective work for THE UNION SIGNAL.

From the same state comes a bit of testimony which may prove suggestive and helpful: "I have felt moved to tell you how I secured three subscriptions, in the hope that it will encourage others to do likewise. I have been a subscriber and great friend of your paper for many years.

"When I left home for a two weeks' stay at a prominent hotel in Kentucky, I had THE UNION SIGNAL forwarded to me there. After reading, I took pains to circulate it among the guests of the hotel, asking friends to subscribe for it. Have been visiting in and around Cincinnati, where I secured a subscriber, who has become greatly interested in our work.

"I am particularly pleased over securing No. 2, as this is a restaurant which has been run by three young women of Scotch descent on strictly temperance principles.

"It was predicted that without liquors the restaurant would be a failure, but four years' trial has proved it a complete success, so that the lease has been renewed for five years more. THE UNION SIGNAL will now find a place on their 'literature table,' and will henceforth be accessible to a large number of persons.

"On the train I met a W. C. T. U. woman, who informed me she did not take THE UNION SIGNAL, and when I expressed amazement that she could do without it, saying that I considered it 'the cheapest and best paper on earth,' she took the address and promised to send for it as soon as she reached home."

Give to us coöperation like that of these two earnest workers and THE UNION SIGNAL will speedily double its subscription list. Systematic effort and an intelligent canvass of your local unions, with the determined purpose to place the paper in the home of each member will produce astonishing results. One thought should be ever borne in mind, that if you are a W. C. T. U. woman this is your official organ, your paper, and that its future depends largely upon the continuance of present efforts that new life may be thrown into the canvass, thereby increasing not alone its circulation, but that of our other publications and the varied literature which is now upon the shelves of our stockroom awaiting your orders.

THE PUBLIC SCHOOL EVIL.

We have heard much about the tenement house evil, but not until we turned the covers of The Forum, for May, 1895, have we read such strong statistical articles on the dangers of our public school buildings.

One of these articles is a compilation, by James H. Penniman, of recent reports of the school boards of twelve large cities and is truly a tale of horrors. Multiply these twelve typical reports by one thousand, and we have some idea of the physical, mental and moral perils which greet every child that crosses the threshold of a crowded public school.

The second article, "Crowded Schools as Promoters of Disease," is written by Dr. Henry Dwight Chapin, a New York physician who has made a specialty of the sanitary condition of the schools of the metropolis.

It is as a friend and not an enemy of the public school system that we heartily endorse these Forum articles and warn an innocent and trusting public to examine into the physical conditions of the rooms in which their children spend one-third or one-fourth of their time. If the real state of things were fully known to thoughtful parents, many would hesitate to send their children to school at all, but we are far from advising them to keep their little ones at home; on the contrary, we desire to help agitate the question until there will be a decided improvement. We believe no more important and appropriate subject could be discussed in our mothers' meetings than this, and since the majority of our readers live in towns of moderate size, the remedy is within their reach.

We find from these reports that, as a rule, school-rooms are illy ventilated, poorly lighted and overcrowded. All this has been said before, but never have the serious consequences of this upon the sensitive, growing child been as clearly shown, as in these articles.

All teachers and parents will admit that not more than forty children can be instructed with advantage in one class, but it is the common practice, in the primary grades, to give one teacher sixty and eighty pupils, and two classes in Brooklyn reached the enormous total of one hundred and fifty and one hundred and fifty-eight each. Then, too, these little men and women are often crowded into dark cellars or in rooms on the ground floor shaded by tall buildings. We do not wonder that the author says: "For one person to teach one hundred and fifty children is an impossible task, and that the city of Brooklyn requires some poor woman to attempt it, shows an ignorance of human powers and an indifference to human suffering that would be incredible of the Dark Ages. If a parent were offered the alternative of having his child go to school in a cellar, or of sharing in the one hundred and fiftieth part of the time of a tired, overworked teacher, he well might hesitate before he decided."

When classes are thus overcrowded, there are not only many children who learn positively nothing worth while, but many others who learn habits of inattention and idleness which seriously cripple their success in after life.

Many schools show more teachers than class rooms, which means the hearing of recitations in hallways and dark cloak rooms. These cloak rooms, even when not used as class rooms, are shown to be sources of disease breeders. Many of them have no means of ventilation and light, and on rainy days wet overgarments are hung over each other, occasioning not only an unpleasant and unhealthful atmosphere in the room itself, but one which spreads to every part of the building. Even in the "literary hub" of Boston this condition of overcrowding and deficient ventilation exists to an alarming extent. In the capital of our Republic a wretched condition is described—floors laid on the bare ground, and soil gases constantly rising through the worn boards.

That the school accommodations of this country are appallingly inadequate is shown not only by this injurious overcrowding, but by the fact that thousands of children in every large city are refused admission for lack of room. This has grown to be a national calamity, and it is time that every thoughtful citizen, as well as every anxious parent, should agitate the question of enlarged and improved school buildings.

The vitiated air is in itself a source of constant danger to pupil and teacher. Not only is there an abundance of carbonic acid gas, but the decomposing organic matters are fearfully deleterious to health in a crowded room. The problem of proper ventilation is not one of mere sentiment; it is of the gravest importance. No intellect can be bright when the blood is charged with poisonous gas and the retroactive effect upon the moral nature is inevitable.

What shall be done to alleviate these distressing conditions? Place women and physicians upon boards of education and insist upon parents visiting the schools of their children at least once a year. The apathy of the majority of parents to the welfare of their children in the place where they spend more waking hours than in their homes, is unaccountable. We make no complaint of the patient, conscientious, overworked teacher. No other class of public benefactors deserves more sympathy and gratitude. The primary trouble, we believe, lies in the indifference or unwarranted feeling of security on the part of the parents, and it is within their power to remedy the serious evil in all moderate sized cities, at least. In the largest cities philanthropists and scientists must take in hand the problem of proper accommodations for the education of our children.

THE MARRIAGE QUESTION.

Recent correspondence which has appeared in our columns concerning marriage vows, has called forth vigorous protests from some of our friends who fear that THE UNION SIGNAL may be giving too free expression to "advanced views" of marriage and divorce. Now, as we are very desirous that neither friends nor foes should misunderstand our position upon this most vital question, we feel called to have an editorial "say" upon the subject.

It should hardly be necessary to state that the Woman's Christian Temperance Union as an organization, and THE UNION SIGNAL as its mouthpiece, upholds the Christian law of marriage, that is, the law of Christ in both the letter and the spirit. We regard the sanctity of the marriage relation as one of the bulwarks of our national life, one of the chief elements of human happiness, one of the prime factors in the evolution of the race, and, in order to preserve this sanctity, to conserve the highest interests of humanity, the idea of the indissolubility of the marriage bond must be assiduously cultivated. We believe with our sister who wrote in our last issue of "Christ's Law Concerning Marriage," that "no true friends of the real advancement of woman will attempt to loosen the bond of marriage."

As for Mrs. Avery's "views," we feel sure that she would be the last to advocate a marriage tie so loose that the ease with which husband or wife might slip out of it would depend entirely upon an individual definition of the words, "worthy of trust." To Mrs. Avery, whose account of "Olive Schreiner's Dream Realized," started this discussion, doubtless these words mean—as they do to us—the separation of husband and wife only under the provocation which Christ Himself assigns as sufficient ground for divorce, the one crime which, as our correspondent says, "by its very nature vitiates the relation." But it can not be denied that there are persons—men and women whose conception of the sacredness of the bond is not so well developed, not so Christian—who would interpret those words differently; many doubtless who would apply the term "unworthy" not simply to an unfaithful marriage relation but to any they might happen to regard as "unfortunate."

We do not say there are no cases where a separation is desirable upon other ground than that of infidelity—though we think the circumstances are rare which justify such breaking up of a home—but a separation of this kind is not "divorce" and does not necessarily "loosen the marriage bond." Indeed, a legal separation which forbids the marrying again of either party during the lifetime of the other, tends rather to emphasize its indissolubility.

It is quite natural that this question of marriage should be one of the first to be discussed by the awakening woman, and it is hardly any wonder that extreme views should find place among those eager to bring "freedom" to their sex. A certain amount of iconoclasm is a feature of every revolution that is evolution and need cause no real alarm, being only on the surface. Woman's place in the world was for ages one of such utter dependence that when the new order was inaugurated it is not surprising that in her haste to take possession of her heritage she should be overzealous in her own cause.

The most we have to regret in this connection is that the popular mind seems to have taken hold of the idea that the "advanced woman" holds loose views upon the marriage question. Now the W. C. T. U. is as advanced in its ideas and its methods as any other type of the "new woman"—as a glance at the aims of its forty different departments will testify, yet the watchword of our organization is Home Protection, and the very foundation of the preservation and upbuilding of the home rests upon the divine law—which is Christ's law—of marriage.

One of the basic laws of being pertains to the relationship of man and woman, when, in the unfolding and developing of human nature on its journey from God to God, the male and the female become two distinct personalities. Throughout the Old Testament record we find many customs "permitted" which are instinctively revolting to the human mind of larger growth, as many of the manners and customs of the present generation will be wondered at and condemned by men and women of a later age.

The one thing needful is to have the law of Christ "written in our hearts." Then the gospel spirit will be manifest in all we do; we shall walk so circumspectly as not to cause the weakest brother to stumble, and in the marriage relation as well as in every other relation of life, we shall be "living epistles," bearing His name.

AN OPEN LETTER TO REV. DR. CHARLES H. PARKHURST, OF NEW YORK CITY.

Eastnor Castle, Ledbury, Eng., April 20, 1895.

Honored Friend:—You have won the confidence and good will of all men and women interested in the purity of home life by your dauntless defiance of the Tammany ring. In the great contest at the polls you called women to your aid and they rallied around you with consummate loyalty and did a work that was the admiration of our whole country. By the united efforts of men and women under your leadership a new order of things was begun in the prime city of pestiferous politics. Soon after, you wrote a series of articles for a leading woman's paper, on "The True Mission" of the gentler sex. Several of these I missed, but those that I have seen frankly conceded the right of every woman to be and to become all that her capacities permitted so long as her activities were helpful to the world. She might have as good an education as the schools could furnish; she might enter any of the learned professions or occupy herself with any of the industrial arts, but you, like any other man of sense (or woman either, for that matter) regarded the work of the wife, the mother, the home-maker as supreme; as a vocation to which all avocations should be tributary. Indeed, it is my impression that you ranked these sacred offices as the highest known to humanity. So far, you, a Presbyterian Doctor of Divinity, and I, a Methodist maiden of mature years, whose life has been devoted to the temperance reform and the uplift of woman, are perfectly agreed; but in one of your articles that has recently come under my observation, there are statements which seem to me to be based on a complete misapprehension of the convictions that we women who are called "progressive" sacredly cherish and steadily proclaim by pen and voice.

For this is what you say:

"But whatever certain adventurous women may think about it, it is sufficiently clear that Nature has certain pretty decided opinions of its own on the matter, and that Nature has so wrought its opinions into the tissue of woman's physical constitution and function that any feminine attempt to mutiny against wifehood, motherhood and domestic 'limitations' is a hopeless and rather imbecile attempt to escape the inevitable. All the female congresses in the world might combine in colossal mass-meeting and vote with passionate show of hands that woman's sphere is coincident with the spherity of the globe or even of all the heavens; but the very idiosyncrasy of her physical build and the limitations essentially bound up in it will sponge out her mass-meeting resolutions as fast as she can pass them."

I cannot tell you, honored friend, with what pain I read these lines. Surely there were "adventurous women" who held mass-meetings, circulated petitions, enrolled voters and by every honorable means became living factors in the public working out of your problem when you fought against Tammany. Neither wifehood, motherhood nor domestic "limitations" prevented them from putting forth organized, united efforts on the political plane, and you attended their meetings, approved, applauded and led them on.

I was present at the "Female Congress" in Washington when noble and devoted women rehearsed that heroic story and rejoiced that a pulpit leader like yourself perceived the value of woman's active help, not her "silent influence" in the political arena. I can assure you that the "Female Congresses" exalt the home and seek its protection above all things else; they only desire that a more intelligent comradeship should be developed between men and women and that each should help the other to the utmost nobility, purity and strength of which they are capable. They think, as you do, that to participate as a co-worker in municipal affairs does not conflict with the highest loyalty of woman to her home and duty, as mother and wife. May I also say, speaking for the "adventurous woman," with whom I have been long associated, that I have never heard one say that "she wished she were a man." As a matter of fact, why should she?

If we are to take the testimony of men themselves, the beauty of the world, its gentleness and purity, belong in great part to women; all that they ask for is that which you conceded, if I read aright the opening article of the series you have furnished. They do not wish to be men, but in proportion as they are thoughtful and intelligent they do desire to wear a costume as comfortable and hygienic as that worn by men, and they know that if they had this the advantage would be even greater to their children than to themselves. They would like to have an open path before them to such intellectual development as is enjoyed by men, to such artistic opportunities, to such individual rights and protection as can only come to those who have a voice in making the laws by which they are governed.

Believe me, Dr. Parkhurst, we women so sincerely honor you, and our gratitude for the gallant defense you have conducted against vile politics, vile houses and base men and women has been so helpful and heroic, that no matter how you may misapprehend us, certain "adventurous women" will always hold you in the highest honor, but one of them, at least, is grieved beyond expression that we should have been so totally misapprehended as to our aims in life as we fear we have been by you.

Pardon any word I have here written that seems to you in any wise ill considered or unwarrantable. I have meant only good to you and to women, to the home and the state. Believe me, dear friend,

Yours with every good wish,

Frances E. Willard.

"A WHEEL WITHIN A WHEEL."

That is a fine science by which the visible things of this life are translated to the thoughtful observer as bearing correspondence to spiritual truths, the "outward and visible sign"—to quote from the Liturgy—of invisible, i. e., spiritually discerned facts. That man or woman never lacks food for thought who can thus step from matter to mind, from sense to spirit, in a never-ending chain of beautiful "correspondences."

A little book has lately appeared in the world of literature that is an exponent of just such scientific philosophizing. Its sub-title is its significant one,—"A Wheel Within a Wheel," but the book is better known as "How I Learned to Ride the Bicycle"; its author, our absent editor-in-chief, Frances E. Willard.

It may be fitting here to introduce this wheel, whose revolutions have been emulated and far outrun by the flying mind-wheels of her rider. "Gladys" is the musical cognomen. A gift from Lady Henry Somerset to Miss Willard, the wheel was named "having in view the bright spirit of the donor, the exhilarating effect of its acquaintance and use on my health and disposition."

Little by little, through boats and carts, steamers and trains, trolleys and balloons, velocipedes, tricycles, bicycles, our feet are being lifted from mother earth and our spirits delighted with the new freedom that puts a girdle round the globe in less time, doubtless, than it took old Shakespeare to create the renowned Puck.

Our brothers may enjoy the wheel, but never so much as we. Never in our lives have we been so truly free. Never before has our contact with earth been reduced to a point, and that a flying one!

"Gladys" had to be conquered, and while the process was going on, the conqueror mused, and while she mused the fire burned.

"Learn on a low machine," says this rider, "but 'fly high' when once you have mastered it, as you have much more power over the wheel and get up better speed with a less expenditure of force when you are above the instrument than when you are at the back of it. And remember this is as true of the world as of the wheel."

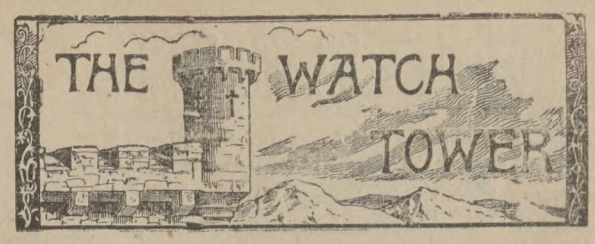
So do we gain all goals,—rising by the things that are under our feet, not pushing our "wheels" before us to the "homing." It is only as woman has risen above—flown high—her hindrances that they themselves have hurried her to her desired haven.

Note this bit of golden wisdom and comfort. Shall we credit Gladys or the philosopher?—"Once when I grew somewhat discouraged and said that I had made no progress for a day or two, my teacher told me that it was just so when she learned: there were growing days and stationary days, and she had always noticed that just after one of these last dull, depressing and dubious intervals she seemed to get an uplift and went ahead better than ever. It was like a spurt in rowing. This seems to be the law of progress in everything we do; it moves along a spiral rather than a perpendicular; we seem to be actually going out of the way, and yet it turns out that we were really moving upward all the time."

Surely our Chieftain knew this truth long ago when woman's cause and the temperance cause had their "stationary days;" she ever kept her courage, and her faith always sang cheerily and strongly, "It is better farther on."

Gladys and her guide had tilts and tests and trials, but victory came, and this is the testimony: "Gladys was no more a mystery; I had learned all her kinks, had put a bridle in her teeth and touched her smartly with the whip of victory. . . . Moral: Go thou and do likewise!"

There is a touch of prophecy in the picture; a leader among men and women, one whose years have climbed past the golden fifty, one whose brain has been attuned to highest keynotes of thought and work, has, in appropriate costume—buy the book and read!—made herself "master of the most remarkable, ingenious and inspiring motor ever yet devised upon this planet!" Does this not prefigure woman, even in these later days of her history, casting aside trammels of conventionality, ignorance and a false "womanliness," seizing upon the latest advancements and privileges and sharing them equally and honorably with her brother man?



This "certain preventative of sea-sickness" is kindly sent by Mrs. S. V. U. Brown, St. Louis, Mo.:

"One dessert spoon of willow charcoal, well pulverized; one dessert spoon of magnesia; the juice of one lemon, with water sufficient to make easy to swallow. Take every night upon going to bed for a week before embarking. Friends who have crossed the ocean several times escaped even unpleasant sensations of sickness, and three or four of our missionaries went to Japan free from sickness, in using this remedy."

At a recent important public ceremony, of which the Duke and Duchess of Teck were the central figures, it was notable that at least three ladies of the aristocracy—one of whom had been maid of honor to the Queen—drank her Majesty's health in cold water. Ten years ago this would not have occurred; and the good humor manifested by all concerned would not have been so apparent as it was on this occasion. It is no exaggeration to say that the total abstinence cause is gaining ground more rapidly than any other branch of reform work.

Here is a new and curious way for measuring distance in traveling. When you are riding on the cars you may be curious to know how fast you are going. Step out on the rear platform and watch the track underneath intently till you can distinguish when one rail joins another. Then count the joints as you go by, and as many as you pass in twenty-one seconds is the number of miles an hour the train is going. If there is a double track you need only watch one of the opposite rails out of the window and count the joints.

Amy Gregory, a wretched young woman sentenced to death recently in London for the murder of her infant child, uttered a protest on hearing the verdict, "in an incoherent speech broken with sobs that has touched the people's heart." While opinions differ as to capital punishment, if ever the mitigation of a sentence was merited it is in the case of these miserable young wifeless mothers, who must bear in their own bodies, and if the law is carried out, expiate at a rope's end, that which is really the crime of two. In the French legislature an attempt was lately made to amend the barbarous law imposed on France by that man of "blood and iron," the first Napoleon, under which no inquiry as to the paternity of a child born out of wedlock is permitted, but the chivalric Frenchmen declined so much as to take a vote on the subject; they like the law too well! The laws of England and America are less inhuman but the meshes of the net of legislation are still far too loosely knitted to catch that most illusive of all live creatures, namely, "the father of the child."

The tendency towards union among the scattered fragments of the universal church of Christ is so great and growing that I feel sure if our white ribbon women would endeavor to get every religious, philanthropic and reform association, local, county, district, state and National, over whom they can exercise any influence, to agree that they will adopt the noontide hour of prayer we shall have gone a long way toward bringing about Christian unity. I hope every one who reads these lines which are written as the result of much reflection, may resolve that he or she will do all that one person can to secure the adoption of such a resolution as I suggest. The marches onward and upward toward God are by slow and steady steps. Let us help humanity to take one of these. The Christian Endeavor Society, the Salvation Army, the Evangelical Alliance and the Christian workers are all in hearty sympathy with this movement, the purpose of which is, that all who pray shall endeavor to fall into the habit of the uplift of the heart for the unity of "all who live in the service of all who suffer" even as Christ Himself has taught us. This uplift of the heart can come on the street, in the shop, in the home as well as in the church. It can be an instantaneous aspiration or a petition fervent and long. But in it let us all unite and through all the hours of the day may our lives be such as shall tend towards drawing all whom we may meet into a closer tie of brotherly and sisterly good will and a truer love and loyalty to God.

On Duty.

TEMPERANCE WORK IN CHINKIANG.

I was appointed to write you a few words about our temperance society in Chinkiang. You have heard from us before, and we thank you very much for the gracious reception you gave our first communication.

Last spring we had the privilege of meeting Mrs. Andrew and Dr. Bushnell. We enjoyed them and their interesting talks very much, and were so sorry they could not stay longer. We know that they are now in England lecturing on the evils of opium. They have seen what a curse it is to our country, and are telling it to the people of that country who do not know much about opium. We are glad our country has such good friends in them, Lady Henry Somerset, Mr. Dyer and others. We also had the pleasure of seeing Mrs. Ninde and her party last autumn. She gave an excellent talk at our school on temperance.

At our last annual meeting it was decided to hold temperance mass-meetings along the Yangtze River just before the Chinese New Year. The Chinkiang meeting was led by our pastor, Mr. Kupfer. Miss White made an entertaining speech, and then ended by asking for signers to the pledge. Five or six put down their names. We also had a union temperance meeting in remembrance of the twenty-first anniversary of the Crusade. We are going to have another union meeting this month. Our pastor is a very earnest temperance man, and helps in every way the good cause.

There was a temperance society organized a few days ago on board the United States gunboat, Concord, and he was invited to give them a talk. Fourteen sailors signed the pledge. They also had a Christian Endeavor Society organized a short time ago, with eight active and a few associate members. One of them said since he stopped drinking and became a Christian Endeavorer, it was like being in heaven.

A Young Men's Temperance Society was organized last year, and consists of thirty-eight members among the Chinese of our mission.

At our last meeting we learned more about the Polyglot Petition, and traced the route Miss Willard and Lady Somerset are going to take if they follow the plan that was last seen printed in the paper. We think it is a grand scheme for binding together temperance workers of all lands. We deeply hope we can have the pleasure of seeing them in Chinkiang. Two days before the presentation of the Petition at Washington we remembered them at our noontide prayer hour.

Our society is gradually gaining in numbers. Nine new members were added to our list last year, but we lost one of our little members, who has lately gone to heaven. We shall miss her and her bright little temperance speeches. The sailors of whom I have spoken wishing to do something for her, begged to buy her gravestone, and they have done so.

We were very sorry to hear of the death of those zealous and able temperance leaders, Mrs. Lathrap and Mrs. Woodbridge. We have seen their pictures, and have read the many tributes of honor that were given them in THE UNION SIGNAL.

NATIVE TEMPERANCE WORKERS IN THE TRANSKIE.

This association was founded at Main, Zembuland, on August 12, 1886; twenty-eight women joined that day. It grew in numbers and influence for good. Though undenominational in its constitution, from the first only women belonging to the Free church congregation at Main became members. Many women belonging to other congregations, however, showed their approval of it by attendance at the meetings. They nevertheless hesitated to become members till they should get leave from their missionaries.

The year 1892 will be memorable for having seen this barrier removed. First, on the invitation of the Rev. Mr. Thomson, the committee went and formed a branch at Idutywa, when forty-two women joined on the first day. Then, at the request of Rev. Mr. Caldecott, a third branch was formed at Tromo with over fifty members to start with. Both of these branches, like the parent branch, show signs of vitality, and the twenty-eight have in six years grown to between two and three hundred. This year, too, has seen the formation of a native Young Women's Christian Association as a branch of the parent association. It has already a roll of eighty-five.

The constitution of the association is this:

1. The development of one's own moral and spiritual life.
2. The improvement of the home and home life.
3. The moral and spiritual improvement of young people.
4. The devising of means for the ingathering into the kingdom of Christ of heathen women and children.
5. The putting down of intemperance and all anti-Christian customs and habits and the removal of every hindrance to the cause of Christ.

The association is open to every native Christian woman who undertakes to carry out these objects; only total abstainers are enrolled as members. In connection with the temperance side of the work, two facts may be mentioned.

A member of the committee was told by her heathen husband to prepare a large quantity of beer on the occasion of the first marriage in their family. This she gently but firmly refused to do, urging as the reason that this was contrary to the rules of their association. He kept urging her for a fortnight; but she maintained her ground. At last he gave in, but said: "Well, if we are to have no beer, we must have dances all night." She said all right. Before the marriage day she requested two native preachers to come to the marriage, and to preach and pray and sing all night. This they did, and the wonder was seen of no beer and no dancing at a heathen man's kraal on the marriage of his eldest child.

Another interesting case of this kind happened at Idutywa since the formation of the association there. A woman told her heathen husband that she could neither make nor take beer any more, as she was a member of the association now. He went away to a shop and bought some meal, coffee and sugar, brought them to his wife, saying: "I will not let you eat hard mealies while I am taking soft food" (beer).

At present one of the chief subjects under discussion is, how to overcome the native superstitions and anti-Christian customs. It has been found out through these discussions that many native young men while at Kimberley come under the influence of the Malays, and so introduce new superstitions and customs of a very pernicious character among their friends on their return home.

WORLD'S WAVE CRESTS.

THE Natal Witness, published at Pietermaritzburg, gives considerable space to the Woman's Christian Temperance Union of the Colony which has an exceptionally well conducted department of local and world-wide temperance news.

THE India National W. C. T. Union is now a well organized body with seven presidents for the chief divisions of India and some for the subdivisions. The work is progressing far beyond the expectations of the devoted leader, Mrs. Mary R. Phillips.

"ALL Round the World," the white-ribbon song written by Mrs. K. L. Stevenson, National W. C. T. U. corresponding secretary, has been translated into Japanese and has been sung by the girls in missionary schools. There is no quicker way to touch a responsive chord, than by the simple power of attractive song.

THE Transkie, South Africa, Native Woman's Christian Associations, of which an interesting account is given in another column, have been affiliated with the W. C. T. U. of Cape Colony for two years and a half. There are now seven or more associations numbering nearly four hundred Kaffir women in the Transkie alone. A great work has since been begun in Pondoland.

THE English papers have published an item to the following effect, which will interest many UNION SIGNAL readers: "Miss Jessie Ackermann, of California, 'second round-the-world missionary' of the W. C. T. U., arrived in England by the steamship Paris, April 3, and is the guest of Lady Henry Somerset. Miss Ackermann was in England a year ago at which time extensive accounts were printed relative to her seven years of travel and organization of the white ribbon movement. Her journeyings have covered a distance equal to three times around the globe. Miss Ackermann will spend several weeks at Eastnor Castle, where she will rest and recuperate after her long and difficult task. She founded the Australasian National W. C. T. U., and was its president until last autumn, when she returned to America, since which time she has been lecturing and traveling in her own country. Miss Ackermann will be a prominent figure at the World's W. C. T. U. Conference to be held in Queen's Hall, London, in June next.

LOUISIANA.

IN ANNUAL CONVENTION.

The thirteenth annual convention of the Louisiana W. C. T. U. was called to order by the president, Mrs. M. R. Goodale, at Alexandria, April 18 to 21 inclusive, with quite a large number of delegates in attendance, including four National workers as follows: Mrs. A. S. Benjamin, of Michigan, Mrs. S. V. Tomlinson, of North Carolina, Mrs. M. M. Snell and Miss Belle Kearney, of Mississippi.

Addresses of welcome on behalf of the clergy, the bar, the press and school board were made by distinguished gentlemen. These were responded to by Mrs. M. H. Crouch, on behalf of the W's, and Miss Juliet Enders on behalf of the Y's.

The able address of the president, Mrs. Mary Read Goodale, was listened to with great interest. Miss Kearney pronounced it the best she had ever heard from any state president; it was at once resolved that the address be printed in pamphlet form and scattered all over the state.

The reports from district presidents showed marked increase in interest and numbers, notably the third district, to whom was awarded the state banner for the largest increase in membership during the past year. The reports of the corresponding secretary and treasurer were equally encouraging, notwithstanding the great financial pressure of the last year.

Of the seventeen superintendents reporting all showed a healthy condition and an ability to press forward their various departments. The officers of last year were unanimously reëlected. The convention was blessed by the labors of our evangelist, Mrs. M. M. Snell. The spiritual blessing received at the noontide hour under the ministration of this handmaid of the Lord will long be remembered.

As an outcome of the sessions of this convention, a good Citizens' League was organized with twenty-five active members; the distinct object of this league is the enforcement of all laws pertaining to the prohibition of the liquor traffic and the selling of liquor to minors. Mr. R. W. Bringhurst, one of Alexandria's most progressive and able citizens, is the president of the league. This convention was indeed a blessing to the town of Alexandria, for it awakened an interest in the W. C. T. U. among men, women and children. Miss Kearney organized a large Y. W. C. T. U. We know these young women will keep things moving in their town.

After singing our farewell song, "Blest be the tie that binds," and the benediction, the thirteenth annual convention of Louisiana stood adjourned.

ANNUAL COUNTY CONVENTIONS.

The New Castle county convention was held on Wednesday, April 10, at Hockessin. Mrs. George S. Capelle, of Wilmington, was in the chair, owing to the fact that the president, Mrs. M. S. Cranston, was not able to be present.

Devotional services were conducted by Mrs. Roberta Matlack, state superintendent of evangelistic work. The address of welcome, by Miss Mary Pyle, of Landenburg, was responded to by Mrs. K. C. Southard, Newark.

Mrs. Mary B. Donnell's report as secretary for the county epitomized the work for the year, mentioning many interesting and encouraging items regarding the eleven W. C. T. Unions in the county and six Y's. The number of UNION SIGNALS taken is eighty-three.

The reports of the different unions were heard with interest. Mrs. Martha S. Cranston was reëlected president. Mrs. Elizabeth C. Marks spoke with heartfelt interest upon the Girls' Industrial school, and Mrs. Mary Heald Way, of Oxford, gave a fine address on "Purity."

In the evening an enthusiastic audience was interestingly addressed by Mrs. M. B. Ellis, of New Jersey.

The eighth annual convention of the W. C. T. U. of Sussex county met at White's Chapel, Nassau, April 12. The church was beautifully decorated for the occasion with potted plants in full bloom and cut flowers, with pictures of Neal Dow and Miss Willard hanging beside the beautiful county banner. Mrs. Abbie L. Fisher, president of the county, conducted the devotional exercises, and the Rev. Mr. Neese, pastor of the church, led in prayer. Miss Margaret Hilles, the state president, and Mrs. Ellis, of New Jersey, were in attendance. There were very large and enthusiastic audiences at the afternoon and evening sessions.

Dr. Grise, on being introduced, spoke earnestly of the necessity of the proper formation of character in youth, and also of the duty of the women of the county to insist that their husbands, sons and brothers shall vote for the protection of the home and society, first seeing at the primaries that temperance men are placed on the ticket.

The county president read her annual address, which was full of good things. One of them was the sentence, "If we cannot legislate we can remonstrate." Her address was followed by encouraging reports from the different unions. The honorary members of Nassau and the prohibition men of that section who were present were introduced, and the ladies received them by rising and giving the Chautauqua salute. In a most excellent paper on "Scientific Temperance Instruction," by Mrs. Slaymaker, she made the statement that nine-tenths of the crime committed in this country is due to the drink habit. Miss Emma White, of Milton, read a paper on "Young Women's Temperance Work," which elicited much applause.

A memorial service was held in honor of Mrs. Euphemia Hitch, of Laurel, and Miss Mary E. White, of Nassau. The officers were reëlected.

At the evening session the Nassau union, for having the largest increase of membership in the county, was presented with the county banner by Miss Hilles. Mrs. M. B. Ellis made an able address, and the Loyal Temperance Legion gave thrilling temperance songs.

The union at Nassau has had quite an interesting origin. About five years ago Mrs. M. B. Ellis being on a train in our state one day noticed a careworn mother sitting near, as the sole companion of her own sex. Her attention was attracted to Mrs. Ellis by the latter's white ribbon, and a conversation on the theme of temperance followed. Mrs. Ellis asked her if she could not be the means of forming a W. C. T. U. at her home town. She said it was a farming community and not a very propitious outlook for workers, but she would see what could be done. She proved to be Mrs. J. T. Prouse, wife of the M. E. minister who was then stationed at Nassau. As a result a union was formed at Nassau which now numbers more than forty members, has a flourishing L. T. L., a circulating library of temperance books, which carries out, as far as is expedient for the community, the different lines of work; our last Prohibition candidate for governor, Hon. T. J. Perry, lives in the vicinity, and the Sussex county W. C. T. U. president, Mrs. Annie Fisher, is one of the most efficient and energetic workers. All this the outgrowth of only five years of temperance work, which had their origin in the conversation of two devoted Christian women on a train, followed by the faithful, zealous work of one of them.

W. C. T. U. MOVEMENTS.

District No. 6.—The Redwood Falls union finds their mothers' meetings held once a month very helpful. Their superintendent is an able leader and wise in her selection and presentation of subjects. The press superintendent finds in these meetings much material for her column, gathering up the best things and passing them on through the paper to other mothers who do not attend. The superintendent of literature reports much interest shown in the reading matter provided for the racks in public places. One boarding house proprietor, whose customers are from the working classes, came to the superintendent asking for more religious and temperance papers, saying THE UNION SIGNAL, especially, was often called for. Yet he is not himself a temperance man. Lumber camps have been well supplied with papers and scrapbooks made by the ladies and the senior L. T. L's. The recent death of the superintendent of this department, Miss Mamie Houck, has left a sad vacancy in the union. In her last conscious moments she spoke of the work and of the men in whose spiritual welfare she had become greatly interested.

Sabbath-school temperance work has been vigorously pushed, and March 24 was made a memorable day. The pastors of the various churches preached rousing sermons, the temperance lesson was taught in all the schools, the young men held a wide awake temperance meeting at the Y. M. C. A. rooms in the afternoon; at 6:30 the young people of all churches (except the Episcopal, and they took the same topic at the same hour) held a union service, their topic, "Pure Thoughts, Words, Deeds." Then the crowning triumph of the day was the Sabbath-school rally later in the evening. The little ones with their sweet voices created an interest that must surely be abiding. The pledge was circulated and obtained many signatures.

District No. 7.—Oxford union with eighteen members and one honorary, holds monthly meetings, having temperance teas therewith. At one recent meeting Rev. Geo. F. Wells was present and spoke on the attitude of the church to temperance work, causing some little commotion among some of the good brethren present, but the president writes, "We are glad he gave us the truth to think over." The union has held a very successful medal contest, each contestant doing remarkably well, Miss Jennie DeLine winning the medal. Papers have been sent to the lumber camps, a box of supplies sent to the National Temperance Hospital and ten dollars to the fire sufferers last fall.

A delightful report from the Red Wing union assures us that the work is going on vigorously under Mrs. Hobart's fostering care. The weekly meetings have been kept up, except during the gracious revival which blessed the town, at which time some of the regular meetings were omitted, though the women met together in their accustomed places for prayer. The study of the book of Revelation has been a regular part of the year's work and has proved very profitable indeed. The union has done its full share in circulating all petitions addressed to our state legislature, three in number, viz.: for municipal suffrage for women; for raising the age of consent to eighteen years, and for making it a penal offense to sell liquor in any form in a no-license town. The last bill has been passed, so that now no-license towns will be able to protect themselves where so disposed. This union has ordered a supply of the scientific temperance instruction cards for the twenty-eight school rooms of the town. The mothers' meetings are an unfailing source of encouragement and interest. There are four wards in the town and a mothers' meeting held regularly in each ward. Lately a portion of the time has been given to reading and discussing, "How John and I brought up the child." Surely good results will follow such faithful seed sowing among the mothers.

District No. 9.—Champlin union observed the memorial day for Mrs. Lathrap. The Crusade psalm was read and an essay by the president. A song, "Rest, Weary One, Rest," was sung and a temperance dialogue given by five girls. The L. T. L. of the union is closed for the winter for want of a leader, but it is hoped to reopen the work in the spring.

Lucy Hayes union of Minneapolis rejoices in a larger attendance this spring. A mothers' meeting recently held at the home of the M. E. pastor's wife, Mrs. F. Doran, was very largely attended. Mrs. Neal gave an excellent talk to mothers, based on the story of Manoah and his wife (Judges 13). The duties of mothers to little children and also to the half grown sons and daughters was faithfully set forth by the speaker who has had experience and opportunities for wide observation.

District No. 11.—Sauk Rapids union thinks "it has nothing to report," and then the writer goes on to say that the members present at their last meeting all paid their dues. Isn't that something? Sickness prevents one member from working actively, but the W. C. T. U. knows full well the value of our "shut-ins." Not until the great day of revelation shall we ever know how much their prayers and loving sympathies have accomplished.

Royalton voted for license. The No License club had their annual supper, "and what a nice supper it was! We trimmed the opera hall with flags, and the tables with blooming plants and flags, but no use." The license men imported about thirty young men who were willing to stay ten days for small pay and cast their votes for whisky. Liquor license can only be legally granted the first of January and July. But the enterprising new council has allowed an application to be published, asking for the right to sell liquor, April 5.

District No. 12.—Tintah union was organized last September with three members and only two of them present, the other being unavoidably detained. At the next meeting four attended and they decided to take up gospel temperance work until the way opened for something else. Beginning thus, on the "sure foundation stone" of all work, they have steadily increased in membership to twelve with six honoraries, and have taken up press work and have decided to put a wall pocket in the station. The members are growing more and more interested and the way opens up for more and more work.

District No. 13.—Wadena sends a cheering report of faithful work done for the woodsmen. The superintendent of this department told the union she knew of many families destitute of good reading who would be very glad to receive such, and asked the union to appropriate money for postage that she might send it to them. Six Demorest medal contests have been held in Wadena, and on a recent Sabbath an excellent sermon on temperance was preached by the M. E. pastor, Rev. Mr. Davis.

Hawley union held a dime social not long ago which filled the house of the president, Mrs. A. Glasgow, and all apparently enjoyed the event, particularly the songs fromthe "White Ribbon Hymnal" given by the children. At the next meeting of the union it was decided to send three dollars of the receipts from the social to the National Temperance Hospital, and one dollar was used to send The White-Ribboner to two subscribers. Hawley went no-license at the recent election, thus again banishing the saloon from the town. The members of the union feel greatly encouraged thereat and stimulated to greater efforts.

District No. 14.—Argyle union numbers twenty members, though some live too far from town to attend often. Since the holidays they have held one gospel temperance meeting, one temperance tea, one public franchise meeting and one silver medal contest, and have a class preparing for the second contest soon. There are superintendents of nine departments, all doing something. A barrel of ice water was kept on a prominent street corner all last summer, at a cost of thirty dollars, and the women have the assurance that their efforts in this direction were much appreciated. License carried at the late election, voters had such a dreadful fear of "blind pigs."

District No. 16.—Mrs. Merrit, president of this district, after writing of Mrs. Fry's visit to them, as noted in my last letter, goes on to speak of the district as a whole. The unions are working along such lines as seem best suited to the local interests. There is but one reading room in the district, but probably every union has sent literature to the lumber camps. L. T. L's are growing, and medal contests gotten up in every possible place. The unions are falling into the habit of tarrying awhile after the usual subject and business discussions are over, to partake of light refreshments and talk over and lay plans for further work.

Lakeside union mourns the death of an honorary, Ernest Hawksworth, a young man of only twenty years. Six years ago he took the triple pledge in the L. T. L. When the Legion was given up he exchanged the badge for the white ribbon, becoming an honorary of the W. C. T. U. and working for temperance steadily and earnestly. The white ribbon, which he had constantly worn in life, was tied in his buttonhole as he lay in the casket.

ARKANSAS.

EIGHTEENTH YEARLY MEETING.

The Arkansas W. C. T. U. held its eighteenth annual convention at Clarksville, April 16–19, Mrs. Fannie L. Chunn, presiding.

Addresses of welcome.—Mrs. C. B. Rhodes in behalf of the W. C. T. U. of Clarksville; Miss Scottie Jameson in behalf of the Y's, and Rev. C. B. Stokes in behalf of the churches.

Especial thanks are due the ministers of Clarksville for their kindly presence and assistance.

The W. C. T. U. of Arkansas have been very fortunate this year in securing the passage of a bill in the legislature, providing that all cities of the class in the state shall be provided with a police matron. There are seven cities in the state who will be entitled to a police matron. The department of police matron was added to our work and a superintendent was appointed for that department.

The young people of Clarksville furnished excellent music for the convention. Business sessions were held morning and afternoon, at which reports and letters were read.

The following officers were elected: Mrs. Fannie L. Chunn, of Cotton Plant, president; Mrs. T. A. Dunlap, Little Rock, corresponding secretary; Mrs. Julia A. Clark, Bebee, recording secretary; Mrs. L. A. Markwell, Little Rock, treasurer.

The convention was very much honored by having with them Mrs. Helen L. Bullock, of Elmira, N. Y., who has done such excellent service in this state for the past few months, organizing unions, and Mrs. Meriwether, of Memphis, Tenn., state president of the W. C. T. U. and also president of the Woman's Suffrage Association. She spoke to a crowded house on Friday night and received good attention to the close. Her subject was "Woman Suffrage." We also had with us the Arkansas state president of the Woman's Suffrage Association, Mrs. McDermit, of Little Rock, who presided at the suffrage meeting on Friday night.

Especial credit is due the good people of Clarksville by whom we were so royally entertained.

The next meeting of the convention will be held at Rogers, Benton county.

MRS. G. A. GAMBLE.

GEORGIA.

THE STATE CONVENTION.

The annual convention of the Georgia state W. C. T. U. was held in Savannah, April 25 to 28. Though hard times and the fact that Savannah is far to one side of the state prevented as large an attendance as could have been desired, the convention was, on the whole, a very successful one. We had with us Miss Belle Kearney and Mrs. Mary McGee Snell, of Mississippi, both of whom added greatly to the success and interest of the convention. The convention was held in the Sabbath-school room of Trinity Methodist Episcopal church South.

The reports of the corresponding secretary and of the superintendents of departments showed that much good work had been done during the year, but they also showed that Georgia has made a serious mistake in not sending out through the state, organizers and speakers, and one of the most important decisions of the convention was that next year, at whatever cost, we must have the best speakers that can be obtained.

As the papers over the country have reported our stand on the suffrage question, it seems necessary to make a statement on the matter. It was the intention to have a full discussion of the suffrage question, but most unfortunately the local committee had bound the convention by promising, as a condition of getting the church, that this subject should not be discussed. All that was done, therefore, was to listen to the memorial of the fifth district on the subject and order the memorial spread upon the minutes. It is unfortunate that the question was not settled before we start out on an aggressive campaign, for it is sure to come up and will not be quieted until a full and free discussion has been had, and it would be better that we know certainly the platform on which we are to stand before aggressive measures are taken in spreading the organization.

The convention indorsed what is known as the anti-bar-room bill, which is to be presented at the next legislature and which has been called by some of the papers a dispensary bill. Let no white-ribbon sister take alarm. The W. C. T. U. of Georgia stands squarely for prohibition and will make no compromises. The question of indorsing the bill provoked a long discussion which elicited the fact that our women were woefully afraid of being led into indorsing a compromise measure through ignorance of the real meaning of the bill. The constitution of Georgia makes a dispensary bill unconstitutional, for the state cannot enter into any kind of a business. The particular bill in question is absolute and unqualified prohibition. It forbids without any reservation the sale of liquors of any kind for beverage purposes, but makes provision for their sale for medicinal, chemical and scientific purposes on condition that the person so selling shall make no profit from the sale. It also contains the provision that the law shall not affect the counties which already have prohibition under the present local option law. Severe penalties are attached to any violation of the law. That the law is likely to be evaded, especially in large cities, it is true, but it makes it possible for Prohibitionists to arrest a violator at any moment and, with even partial enforcement, it will be a thorn in the flesh to liquor dealers, as prohibitory laws always are.

Subscriptions to the amount of one hundred and twenty dollars were pledged for various local unions by their delegates to help defray the expenses of Mrs. Hunt, whose services we hope to secure this next fall in the interests of a temperance instruction bill.

The evening meetings were devoted to speeches, mostly by Miss Belle Kearney and Mrs. Snell. The former sustained her reputation as one of the most brilliant and convincing speakers the W. C. T. U. has in the field. Mrs. Snell's spiritual power with an audience is such as can come only from the Spirit of God. On Sunday she spoke in three different churches and each time many came forward to express their desire for a deeper spiritual life, or to ask for prayers. At one church twenty-six women joined the W. C. T. U. and fifteen boys the Loyal Temperance Legion.

Such women as Miss Kearney and Mrs. Snell are fast pulverizing the senseless prejudice against women's speaking in public. The most conserative cannot listen to either of them many times without admitting,

"She who did this thing was born to do it, Claims her license in her work."

MISSISSIPPI.

FIRST DISTRICT CONVENTION.

The first W. C. T. U. district convention of the first congressional district of the state of Mississippi, convened in the Methodist church, South Corinth, April 4, Mrs. S. E. Dean, district president in the chair. Mrs. V. M. Bass, recording secretary, Iuka. W's and Y's were present, besides the Corinth union. An entertaining and instructive session ensued. Mrs. E. Norine Law assisted with her many and varied powers, rendering the meeting far more interesting.

STATE CONVENTION.

The Mississippi W. C. T. U. convention begins its session on May 5, in Natchez. From present outlook an attractive and useful season is anticipated.

News in a Nutshell.

Bourbon and Argos, Ind., each entertain May county conventions.

Plymouth, Ind., has lost a devoted and valuable member by the recent death of Mrs. Fannie P. Work.

Mrs. Sophie F. Grubb is to be the speaker at the Wisconsin W. C. T. U. convention. We congratulate the Badger white-ribboners.

The corresponding secretary of Indian Territory W. C. T. U., Mrs. Allmette Cook, writes appreciatively thus: "Miss Clara C. Parrish, of Paris, Ill., who is now working in Kansas, gave the Indian Territory ten days of good efficient work, organizing Y's and building up W. C. T. U's. About one hundred and eighty-five workers were added to our list. She is a sincere, capable young woman."

Mrs. Narcissa White Kinney, president of the Oregon W. C. T. U., and whose home is in Astoria, recently received a request from the Astoria Ministerial Association cordially and earnestly requesting her to occupy each of the city pulpits in rotation in the interest of temperance and reform. Other ministerial associations might go and do likewise when active white-ribboners are residents of their cities.

An inviting and varied program was that of the second district Michigan W. C. T. U., Mrs. Julia Stannard, president, which met at Reading, May 8–10, in nineteenth annual convention.

With continued effort, and the use of every legitimate means, the W. C. T. U. of Fort Ann, N. Y., have fought the liquor traffic. The result of the last town meeting, which was another victory for temperance with increased majority, is largely due to the W. C. T. U., making the fifth year the town has gone no-license. It has, in the name of principle, grasped the strong arm of the law, and driven those who wholly ignored public opinion, and defied any and all means to have the no-license law respected, to acknowledge and declare that the law can be made effective.

Among Southern women who have recently been brought out by the white ribbon work is Mrs. Virginia D. Young, of South Carolina, whose genial presence, bright pen and earnest devotion have endeared her to white-ribboners. If every one had the untiring zeal and gentle manner with which Mrs. Young is endowed, it would be greatly to the advantage of the cause. Her most recent work has been to bring out a book entitled, "Beholding as in a Glass." This is an attractive little volume in the Copley Square series by the Arena Publishing Co., Boston. In it Mrs. Young has embodied those high and noble views of life which she illustrates in character and conversation. It is most interesting to get the angle of vision of an intellectual Southern woman, and the environment of the South in a story so earnest and thoughtful. The Union Signal wishes every success to this first literary venture of this gifted W. C. T. U. comrade.

WORK AMONG MINERS.

Dear Superintendents:—I am glad to know that so many of you are faithfully pushing the work in this department. To every state superintendent whose address has been forwarded me, I have sent printed instructions and leaflets in sufficient quantities that every local union in each of your states may have one or more copies. I have also mailed you programs for an afternoon with local unions and trust that the same has been forwarded to the local unions and that through this medium good interest has been awakened. All indications thus far are assurances that the department is prosperous and doing good work. If any state president knows otherwise of the work in her state we would take it kindly to be so informed; we want the work pushed to success.

As you know the National meeting is much earlier this year and it will be necessary for you to have your reports all in to me by the first of September. Please do not neglect this.

We now have our department well organized with an earnest, efficient associate, Mrs. Mary L. Meredith, Montrose, Col., and two able, well qualified lecturers, ready to go into the field. This is official notice of their appointment. Mrs. Ellen K. Denny, Vincennes, Ind., will go into any state. Mrs. Delle H. Cox, Ellensburg, Wash., will go into Washington and Idaho. Now will not every state superintendent write to Mrs. Denny and to Mrs. Cox, get their terms and arrange to have them go into the mining districts? Please do so at once so that they may know how to arrange their work to good advantage. We must take the gospel to the miners in their homes.

Please send me notes of progress along the way. Do not forget about the reports coming earlier this year. Yours for the work among miners,

Mrs. W. F. English,

FOREIGN WORK.

A CORRECTION.

In the notice of the giving out of literature free in the department of work among foreigners a mistake was made by the printer in saying, "The only condition of this is that such 'destitution' shall be reported, instead of 'such distribution.'" I wish to know that the leaflets are distributed, and do not believe that any of our unions are "destitute." Sophie F. Grubb.
Kirkwood, Mo.

ANNOUNCEMENT.

CONVENTION CALL.

The eighth annual convention of the Indian Territory W. C. T. U. will be held in Claremore, Ind. Ter., May 15–17. An excellent program is being prepared. We hope to have a good attendance.

Mrs. Eva Ratcliff, Pres.

Cor. Secy's Notes.

The shadow of the death-angel has again fallen upon the heart and home of one of our leaders, and all our hearts are aching with her own. So swift and sudden has been the blow that it is almost impossible for me to realize that she whom I left so happy in her family life, so blessed in the fact that her three children were all about her, has been so sorely bereft. May God comfort our dear National treasurer, and each member of that sorrow-stricken household. Let us uphold them all with our prayers and by our tender sympathy.

The season of the summer meeting in all its fullness, will soon be upon us. We are becoming a nation of summer camps, Chautauquas and the like, and it is especially important that the W. C. T. U. be represented at these gatherings wherever practicable. Already this line of work has developed its own specialists and they are numbered by scores and hundreds. There is hardly a state which has not its summer school of methods; its day at camp-meeting, Chautauqua, or state and county fair. I trust this may be pushed more energetically than ever before during the coming summer. In no other way can we so easily build up public sentiment or push our practical lines of work.

In addition to the states which will hold their own meetings the National organization is to have charge of our work at two summer camps, Mountain Lake Park and Chautauqua, while the corresponding secretary has been invited to conduct the W. C. T. U. Institute at Bay View, Mich., July 18–24. Mrs. Rounds made such a magnificent success of that meeting last year that it is not strange she was made permanent conductor, but as she is to be in attendance upon the World's Convention at that time, I have consented, not without some inward compunctions of doubt, to take her place. The program will appear in this column in due season, and I bespeak earnestly the attendance and coöperation of the Michigan sisters. Bay View is said to be one of the most charming of summer resorts. Come and help me make the meeting a success.

The Mountain Lake Park Association extended its invitation to the National W. C. T. U. to hold there a school of methods, before the Cleveland Convention. The invitation was accepted, but as some unforeseen complications have arisen, it was at one time decided to abandon the idea. These, however, have been removed, and the way now seems clear for us to hold the five days' school of methods originally planned, beginning July 26. The vice-president-at-large and corresponding secretary are to be in charge of this school, and we are earnestly hoping that this spot so near heaven, in the heart of the Alleghenies, may be a veritable heaven on earth to those who shall gather there. We are planning for a comprehensive program, with some of our most representative speakers. John G. Woolley will be among the number and Eva Shontz will give one of her incomparable recitals. Mrs. Benjamin will conduct the parliamentary drills and Alice Palmer will tell of the work in Africa, with other workers yet to be announced. A full program of this will also be given, and we earnestly ask the coöperation of adjacent states.

At Chautauqua our special work is to be presented in connection with the Women's Club, August 14 to 19. I am planning a series of addresses upon its most salient features to be followed by discussion. We shall also have the noontide prayer hour observed throughout the entire assembly at the room set aside for our headquarters, and hope to have some competent person in charge, with literature to distribute and all the accessories to a genuine Bureau of Information. The white-ribboners of New York, and especially those in the vicinity of Chautauqua, are asked to take this meeting upon their hearts as never before, for where should the W. C. T. U. be so strongly represented as in the place of its birth? Let us see to it that this is not an occasion in which a prophet shall fail of honor in her own country.

Treasurer's Corner.

Remember, dear comrades, that the custom is now becoming established in the National W. C. T. U. to ask each member of a local white ribbon society to send on each birthday, in token of her gratitude to God, as many pennies to the National treasury as she has lived years on this earthly ball. Again we say, remember. This little deed faithfully followed out, would, financially speaking, transfer our society from crutches to wings.

Ever yours affectionately,
Frances E. Willard.

Dues have been received from Ohio and Kansas since last letter. Mrs. Ella M. Thacher sends $37.44 for the Isabel Gibson fund from the Y's of America. This was sent direct to Miss Gordon, who acts as secretary and treasurer of the World's until the convention in London shall elect officers to fill the vacancies so sadly made vacant. How great our official losses this last year! Not only the World's and National, but so many states have lost leaders.

Then into so many of our homes has the reaper entered and taken away our loved ones. May I be permitted a personal word in this week's letter? Many friends have sent messages of sympathy and tokens of love. Believe me, dear friends, one and all, these words of sympathy are sweet to our stricken hearts, and are treasured as precious gifts. We cannot answer them all, but desire every one to know that they have fulfilled their mission of comfort and love. My son was thirty years of age and was a true temperance man. For many years an officer and worker with the Good Templars, and for ten years he has been an honorary member of the Y's, sympathizing with me in all my work. He leaves a young wife and baby boy. It is difficult to refrain from asking, Why? What we know not now, we shall know hereafter. How small the world with all its absorbing interests and cares looks amid the shadow of a great sorrow. Yet work is a blessing and duty becomes often a messenger of love and benediction. "He doeth all things well." I thank you all for the tender sympathy and the loving words, and pray that others may minister to you in your sorrowful hours as you have done by me in this trying hour.

NON-ALCOHOLIC TREATMENT OF TYPHOID FEVER.

BY DR. ROBERT DODDS.

Typhoid fever, a disease of the glands in the small intestines, originates from a poison often found in wells, rivers and reservoirs; unsanitary environment of exposed persons helps it along. Discharges from the bowels of typhoid fever patients is also a means of spreading the disease.

Between twelve and thirty years of age is the most susceptible period, children under twelve years come next and elderly people are rarely attacked.

The fever comes on gradually, attains its maximum in ten to fourteen days and then decreases; of course, there are many variations. When fever is 102 or over, ice bags should be kept on throat and forehead and removed when near 101. A temperature of 103 demands sponging with cool water every hour or oftener: hot water may be used if cold is objected to; the body should be kept moist after sponging. Cold or hot packs can also be used.

When temperature remains above 103 in spite of ice bags and persistent sponging for three hours, give acetanlid or phenacetine, three grains, and repeat in two hours if necessary. Medicines to reduce fever should be used only in emergency, and this will oftenest be at onset. Antipyretic medicines weaken the heart.

As there is great exhaustion during the disease, stimulation is necessary. Early commence with strychnia sulphate, one sixtieth grain every four hours, should it become extreme, increase the dose to one-fortieth of a grain for a time.

The greatest depression is between two and seven o'clock a. m., during which time give two ounces of hot coffee every two hours, and if at any time additional stimulation is needed, give ten drops of aromatic spirits of ammonia in water often as necessary. The strychnia and ammonia may be given hypodermically when quick result is wanted. Digitalis fluid extract in doses two to five drops can also be used as an efficient stimulant. Following the use of alcohol as a stimulant there is more or less cardiac depression, but the most positive tonic results follow the use of strychnia, ammonia, digitalis and coffee.

In cases where the heart becomes very feeble and beating 125 to 140 per minute, fluid extract veratrum viride in one drop doses in water every hour may be given to the exclusion of all other medicines except strychnia, the result being a slowing up of the heart and an increase in its volume. Nausea is an indication for stopping this drug.

When fever has not begun to abate by eighteenth to twenty-first day hemorrhage from the bowels may be expected, symptoms of which are great restlessness, sudden paleness, exhaustion and a temperature below normal. Elevate the foot of bed at once, put light ice-bag to abdomen, give powdered opium one grain and lead acetah gr. ½ every hour until bowels are quieted. Keep them so by the careful use of opium for three days, stimulate very gently with medicine already mentioned as any extraordinary stimulation may start the bleeding afresh. Three days after hemorrhage irrigate the bowels to remove all old blood.

Accumulation of gas in bowels is dangerous and can be reduced by hot applications to abdomen and careful daily enemata of glycerine and water. Turpentine, ten drops in emulsion every four hours, is also very efficacious.

Daily, during the disease, the bowels should be evacuated by using glycerine two ounces and water sufficient to make a pint. Salol in two grain doses should be given every four hours while fever is high, decrease to one grain every eight hours as it abates. This drug is a good disinfectant, changing into carbolic acid in the intestines.

When fever is high there is danger of pneumonia, and in order to prevent this complication patient should be turned from side to side every hour or two, thus preventing the accumulation of fluid in the lower portions of the lungs.

When the disease is violent, for the first three days none, or very little food, should be given. A cupful of hot water every two hours is very beneficial. Water should be given freely during the disease.

Peptonized milk, four ounces every three hours, for food, as long as acceptable to patient. Strained gruels, beef tea, soups, broths and fruit juices may be substituted for the milk, and occasionally given in addition.

Acids should be given at different time than milk.

Four days after all fever has gone begin giving a very light, easily digested diet, and patient may safely sit up one week thereafter.

The mouth and nose should be cleansed thoroughly daily, and lips moistened with water and glycerine.

The bladder should be carefully examined, and if patient is unable to empty it, a catheter should be used.

All excitement should be kept from patient, and visitors rigorously excluded.

By the conservative use of the medicines mentioned, with careful nursing and feeding night and day, and the complete exclusion of alcohol as a therapeutic agent, the mortality in the writer's practice is three per cent.

Should we use alcohol as a stimulant in the treatment of this disease, the following conditions would arise:

The brain, the center of the nervous system, would become less active from the anesthetic effects of the drug, consequently the function of every organ in the body would be less active; the stomach, which is in a very delicate condition, would be very much irritated and digestion impaired; the kidneys would be hindered in draining off poison and much unnecessarily left in the body; depression of the heart, which is so often the cause of death, is caused by the use of alcohol, and the lungs are hindered decidedly in supplying oxygen to the blood as well as the elimination of carbon-dioxide. Consequently we say, avoid alcoholic stimulation in the treatment of typhoid fever.

Dr. Robert Dodds, for years a member of our hospital staff, though at present not connected with us, at my earnest solicitation, has written the above article on the treatment of typhoid fever according to the methods and rules of the National Temperance Hospital. I have investigated the records of the Chicago hospitals where alcohol is used and find that the mortality is from ten to twelve per cent. These articles that I have had written by the different temperance physicians, I hope will prove of great value to our temperance friends as well as instructive to doctors whose education has been in another line.

Here and There.

"What are the last teeth that come?" asked a teacher of her class in physiology. "False teeth, mum," replied a boy who had just waked up on the back seat.

Done Brown—"Mamma," said a little boy, who had been sent to dry a towel before the fire, "is it done when it's brown?"

When the double tulips began to bloom, little Harry ran to his mother and exclaimed, "O ma, do come and see the flowers! The four lips have blossomed."

A little boy was taken down to the harbor by his father, and saw for the first time a large steamer towed by a puffing little tug, with an immense hawser connecting the two. "Oh, papa, papa!" he shouted in excitement. "See! The big boat has the little one by the tail, and he's a-squealing!"

"It is one of the surest signs of rain when you hear it on the shingles." So said one New Hampshire prophet. Another was less careful. He was at work in the hay-field with a companion. "I tell you what," he said, "if the sun sets clear of a Friday night it is sure to rain before Monday night." The second man could not see the reasonableness of this rule, and so expressed himself. "Well, it's so, whether you believe it or not," cried the prophet. "I've noticed it more than a hundred times this summer."

Some beautiful and perfect camellias were displayed in a florist's window, and two old ladies stood looking at them in manifest delight.

"Ain't that a handsome sight?" said one, at length.

"I guess 'tis!" was the reply. "I ain't seen nothin' like it afore sence we left home. I can't think of nothin' to compare 'em to."

"Nor I neither. Why, they're every mite as handsome as wax ones!"

Counsel for Defendant—Would it be contempt of court to say that Your Honor has presided over this case in a manner which is a disgrace to the court? Judge—Certainly it would. I should commit you at once. Counsel—Then I shall not say it.

It is still true that bodily exercise of some kinds is not profitable. But things otherwise unprofitable may be mildly amusing.

"I am trying to learn to ride a bicycle," remarked an elderly bachelor who walked somewhat stiffly, to a friend whom he encountered on the street. "I'm just going home from my lesson now. I've had more tumbles than usual this afternoon, and that's saying a good deal."

"How long are your lessons?"

"Half an hour," responded the bicyclist with a rueful countenance: "twenty-five minutes on the floor and five in the air is my usual proportion!"

New Dining Car Service.

It is a pleasure to note the addition of another important feature to the already competent train service of the Nickel Plate Road. The Dining Car service of this popular low-rate line has recently been augmented, by which dinner will be served on train No. 6, leaving Chicago at 2 p. m. daily, and breakfast and dinner on train No. 2, leaving Chicago daily at 9: 20 p. m., with direct connections for New York and Boston. Breakfast and dinner will be served on train No. 5, arriving in Chicago at 9: 35 p. m. from New York and Boston.

What could a small boy have been thinking of when he spelled the word "slippers" s-l-a-p-p-e-r-s?

Travers—Look here, those shoes you made for me squeak.

Shoemaker—They always squeak at the end of thirty days, sir, if the bill isn't paid.

"Don't you think that was a finished address?" said a conceited orator to an opponent. "Yes, I do," was the reply. "But at one time I thought it never would be."

"What She Could," is the name of a story by Ian Maclaren, in McClure's Magazine for May. It is a simple sketch of how an unappreciative husband found out his wife's beauty and worth of character fourteen days after he had laid her away forever. The author's closing words are, "It had dawned at last upon him that Christ had lived with him for more than ten years and his eyes had been holden." The sketch contains a deep lesson.

HEALTHFUL WOMANHOOD AND CHILDHOOD.

BY HENRY BIXBY HEMENWAY, A. M., M. D.,

is a book containing plain talks to non-professional readers, and is the outcome, as the author himself states, of requests for a book which should tell in plain language those things that every woman should know about her physical being and the care of children. Dr. Hemenway believes that "the proper study of womankind is woman"; that purity will result from light, truth and knowledge, and that impurity, with its consequent suffering, is largely the outgrowth of ignorance upon questions concerning the physical organism and its relations. This very necessary knowledge the author aims to convey, and to convey in such a manner as shall give to the reader a more exalted conception of the bodily functions. He emphasizes the importance for both mother and child of the study of creative life; points out the prominent part a woman's dress plays in the production of disease and unhappiness; discusses marriage from the standpoint of a physician rather than that of a moralist or poet, and gives invaluable advice in the bringing up of children.

This book in the hands of an intelligent mother would, we think, prevent much needless sickness for herself and her children. It has been Dr. Hemenway's wish "to write a book which might be profitably read by all classes of society, and that, being read, it would help each to lead a more perfect life." And we think his wish finds its consummation in this volume of nearly 300 pages.

COLUMBUS AND WHAT HE FOUND.

In this most delightful book an unapproachable opportunity is given to teachers and to mothers to acquaint their charges with the wanderings and wonderings of this modern Ulysses. How one mother has interested and captivated her children and their friends is set out in "Columbus, and What He Found," by Mary H. Hull. She idealizes her hero, and for the purposes of instruction this may be not only justifiable, but commendable. All that needs to be said about the immoralities of Columbus can be compressed into a foot-note. A character is never to be estimated in terms of its faults. The author of "Columbus, and What He Found" has the American spirit in this matter. For the youngest of our readers her book is an excellent one.

A Wheel Within a Wheel

HOW I LEARNED TO RIDE THE BICYCLE

BY

Frances E. Willard

In her inimitable style Miss Willard tells in this dainty little volume her experience in learning to master a "steel steed," and as she graphically portrays the various situations leading from many failures to ultimate success, she has interwoven in delightful "side-talks" some exceedingly helpful and practical suggestions as to how failures and discouragements may be turned to success in life, never losing opportunity, as is her wont, to say that which ennobles and uplifts. It is really a fascinating little volume, appealing strongly to all that is best in physical and moral development.

The Bible Reading for May is by Mrs. Mollie McGee Snell, and the subject is

THE LORD'S PRAYER.

All Bible students have tasted of the rich spiritual food which is so abundant in this, the "universal prayer," and Mrs. Snell's exposition of it impresses us more than ever with its illimitable heights and depths, and will help us to comprehend more fully the heart significance of a prayer that is so often upon our lips.

The Responsive Reading for May deals with

NARCOTICS,

and is prepared by the W. C. T. U. specialist in this department, Mrs. E. B. Ingalls, than whom no one is better qualified for the task. It is a valuable contribution to the literature of that important department, and every local superintendent should see to it that her union uses this reading. Unions that are not regular subscribers to the monthly Responsive Readings should send for a supply of these and send soon.

CAMPAIGN ECHOES,

by Mrs. Letitia Youmans, the heroic pioneer of the white-ribbon movement in Canada, and to-day the honorary president of the Dominion W. C. T. U., was written at the earnest request of white-ribboners on both sides of the border. Besides being an autobiography, a record of eighteen years of unfemitting toil in the service of God and humanity, it is valuable as authentic history of the temperance reform in Canada.

It is a work of 312 pages, dictated from a bed of sickness and constant pain, and breathes from beginning to end a spirit of Christian service and unwavering faith in God. The book is dedicated to the author's "white ribbon sisters in this and other lands." The introduction is by Frances E. Willard, and the price is (cloth bound, with portrait of Mrs. Youmans) $1.

Believing that no superintendent of literature can do effective work without THE UNION SIGNAL, the official organ of the World's and National W. C. T. U., we cannot enroll as representative any name not to be found on the subscription list of this paper. If not already a subscriber kindly send remittance for one year's subscription, with the notification of election.

It is not sufficient to say: "I am superintendent of literature," to secure the privileges of representatives. The notification of election is valueless to us unless sent by president or secretary of union making the appointment.

Does your son ride a bicycle? Is your daughter considering the delights of a spin upon the fascinating wheel? If so, you will do well to put at once into their hands Miss Willard's new book, "A Wheel Within a Wheel." There's meaning in the title. There's many a thing to be learned in the book besides the ways and methods and results of bicycling. The excellent picture of Miss Willard with the faithful Anna Gordon ready to stand by—and let go, is worth the cost of the book. Price only 50 cents. It contains five half-tones which at 10 cents each would be a cheap investment.

Signal Notes.

It is estimated that over fourteen million dollars are wasted annually in tobacco and pipes in the United Kingdom.

Miss Anthony announces that the eightieth birthday anniversary of Elizabeth Cady Stanton will be celebrated by a great gathering of women in New York, November 12.

The Chicago Audubon society, recently organized for the purpose of condemning the use of birds in millinery, meets at the Athenæum monthly. Its work will also include the introduction of bills into the legislature, for the protection of birds.

It is not generally known that in Russia women are not only on school boards but are also serving as principals and poor law guardians. In 1894, one small province had 45 women as superintendents of workhouses, 125 as poor law guardians and 283 as members of school boards.

An exchange says, "The Anti-Cat Society held a meeting in Munich, Germany, last week. The secretary reported progress, saying that 1,223 cat tails had been sent to the treasurer—a considerable advance over the number received in 1893. There was great rejoicing at this." Since when have our domestic feline friends been dubbed a nuisance?

Some of the insurance companies doing business in Indiana have declined to issue policies on saloon property unless the saloon-keeper can prove himself to be a responsible party. The reason given is fear that the liquor dealer forced out of business by the new law may commit arson to get the insurance. The wise insurer does well not to assume the risk.

Y. M. C. A. work in India has been abundantly blessed. In three years the number of associations has increased from thirty-five to seventy-seven and the membership (now 3,793) has doubled. There are five general secretaries in the field and four native assistant secretaries giving their entire time. Six buildings are now owned and five associations have building funds paid in.

Ohio's fiftieth annual state agricultural convention at Columbus last winter, passed resolutions commending women's work at agricultural fairs in which they "have a common interest and upon whom depends much of the success"; pronouncing it "right and just that they should have representation on the board of managers of the county fairs of the state and on the board of directors of county agricultural societies"; and recommending to fair managers generally the establishment of rest rooms or cottages on fair grounds, such rooms or cottages to be furnished and cared for by the Woman's Christian Temperance Union, subject to the control and direction of the Board of Managers.

Coöperation or profit-sharing is well set forth in the model village of Leclaire, eighteen miles from St. Louis, built by the N. O. Nelson Manufacturing Company of St. Louis. The houses in Leclaire are sold to the employés for the cost of new material and labor plus the average profit made by the manufacturing business. The company adopted profit-sharing in 1886. Its employés number about 500, its annual sales vary between one and two million dollars, and its profits are systematically divided between capitalists and laborers after reserving certain funds. Leclaire has a successful coöperative boarding club, and a store, literary society, library, kindergarten, but no police officer nor saloon. Proof conclusive is found in the workings of this company that coöperation is not only possible but in the highest sense successful.

During the year 1894-95 the missionaries of the American Sunday School Union, under the superintendence of F. G. Ensign of Chicago, opened 929 Sunday-schools in destitute places and frontier settlements, and brought 3,494 teachers and 27,262 scholars into them. They also visited, aided and revisited these and other schools to secure permanence, 5,835 times, distributed 6,137 Bibles and Testaments, made 70,000 visits to the homes of the people in the interests of the Sunday-schools and for religious conversation or prayer and held 9,884 meetings. The first fruits, as far as heard from, are 4,928 professed conversions, the development of 101 churches and 36 Y. P. S. C. E. from their schools, and the starting of 197 young people for high schools, academies and colleges for higher education. Temporal relief has been afforded over 2,500 families in Nebraska and South Dakota by these missionaries. Truly this is a fruitful work.

In the L. T. L. department of the W. C. T. U. Messenger, Colorado, we notice a letter from its editor, Mrs. Maude L. Green, who has been quite seriously ill at the Temperance Hospital, Chicago. It is brimful of gratitude to the loving, thoughtful Legioners of Colorado who have sent to their beloved leader "a box containing a lot of mountain anemones," whose purple blossoms, fresh and sweet in spite of the long journey, reminded the sick one of "home" and the loyal hearts of the temperance boys and girls of that wide-awake state. Mrs. Green is not too weak to dictate to her nurse, who, with "large brown eyes, brown hair, pink cheeks, pretty gown and a little white cap," is typical of the sweetness and purity of life at the Temperance Hospital. Her appeal is tender and touching, and the boys and girls who read it will promptly respond, will grow purer, brighter, stronger, more helpful, for the words of their "loving superintendent."

The Union Worker, of Nebraska, says of the "bow of ribbon white":

"What a volume the ever-blessed little badge of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union speaks to all lovers of the cause, more forcibly, if possible, when adorning gentlemen, or when seen upon those in other respects entire strangers. It tells so much speaking from heart to heart. It speaks for us when we cannot with propriety speak for ourselves. It tells of labors of love, of labors for the amelioration and uplifting of mankind, of Anchorage missions for the redemption and protection of betrayed, enslaved victims of perfidy and lust, of police matrons so greatly needed in our cities, of kindness and mercy to man and beast, for peace and arbitration instead of cruel, devastating war, of temperance and purity, with all the thrice blessed results following so closely and legitimately in their train. Would that we all might ever wear it, being richly imbued with all the hallowed attributes which it so forcibly implies, disseminating these sanctifying influences always, at all times and in all places."

It should be always borne in mind that we carry in stock a silver bow with face of white enamel, which is especially fitted for the coat lapel.

Through Pullman Sleeping Cars from Chicago To Dallas and Ft. Worth, Texas, via the Chicago & Alton Railroad.

The Chicago & Alton, America's most popular railroad, is universally recognized as the best line between Chicago and Texas. Together with its connections, it forms the shortest line; it offers to its patrons free choice of no less than seven different routes beyond its own termini, and now in order to still further improve its matchless service, it has established a daily line of through Pullman drawing-room sleeping cars between Chicago and Dallas and Ft. Worth, Texas.

These through sleeping cars leave Chicago on the "Alton's St. Louis Limited" at 11:00 a. m. daily, and running via the St. Louis, Iron Mountain & Southern and Texas & Pacific Railways beyond St. Louis, reach the following cities at the hours given on the next day after leaving Chicago: Little Rock, Ark., 8:05 a. m.; Malvern, Ark. (Hot Springs), 9.50 a. m.; Dallas, Texas, 9:25 p. m.; and Ft. Worth, Texas, 10.30 p. m. These through sleeping cars also greatly improve the Chicago & Alton's service to Houston, Galveston, Austin, San Antonio and Laredo, Texas, and the City of Mexico.

The "Alton's" Texas route via Kansas City, will remain fully up to the high standard maintained in the past. See that your Texas tickets read via the Chicago & Alton Railroad.

SINCE OUR LAST ISSUE.

Utah has had an equal suffrage convention.

The Presbyterian General Assembly met at Pittsburg, Pa., last week.

The pure food law of Ohio has been declared constitutional in a test case.

Pennsylvania's compulsory education bill has been signed by the governor.

The upper German house has passed a resolution calling for an international monetary conference.

Political interference in police matters was denounced at the Police Chiefs' Convention in Washington.

A destructive earthquake visited Florence, Italy, and vicinity, Sunday, causing great damage and consternation.

Florence Nightingale's seventy-fifth birthday has been celebrated by the people of England, with every evidence of appreciation of her great work for humanity.

An investigation into Chicago's city pay roll shows a very dishonest state of affairs, one official alone drawing thirty-one salaries. Small wonder the city is in arrears.

Elgin, Ill., has been the scene of an inspiring state Sunday-school convention. The one hundred and two counties of the state have 7,676 Sunday-schools, 89,154 officers and 654,874 pupils.

Among the other excellent declarations of New York's reform police commission board last week was the pertinent one that "saloons are not proper places to frequent, and that every drunken policeman will be dismissed."

THE unveiling of the Emma Willard statue and the dedication of Sage Memorial Hall, in Troy, N. Y., occurred May 15. This delightful recognition of one of America's noblest women is a cause for much rejoicing. Emma Hart-Willard was born in Washington, Conn., in 1787, and began her educational work at the age of seventeen. The Troy Female Seminary came into existence about the year 1820, and was, with Mary Lyon's Mt. Holyoke, the pioneer institution in woman's education in America. Mrs. Willard's educational work was not limited to this one institution, however, for she has published several books on physiology and astronomy. Such genius and devotion should be kept in perpetual memory, and there is every indication that they will be.

TWO MILLION FOR THE GREAT PETITION.

Keep on getting signatures for the Polyglot Petition! Although the names may not be on the Petition when it sails on the Berlin, the number will be cabled at the last moment. Send to Mrs. Rebecca C. Shuman, 2130 Sherman Ave., Evanston, Ill., who will keep on pasting.

Ho, for two million names!

MARY ABIGAIL DODGE, better known as Gail Hamilton, was stricken last week with paralysis at the residence of Mrs. Blaine at Washington. Miss Dodge is one of the brainiest writers this country has ever seen, her contributions to political literature especially being of unique value. Her most recent efforts have been on behalf of the release of Mrs. Maybrick, the American woman confined in an English prison.

THE Golden Rule has exhibited rare journalistic enterprise in issuing six weeks in advance a Christian Endeavor convention number, full of interest. Boston is confidently anticipating fifty thousand delegates and is preparing to accommodate every one of them right royally. The committee of thirteen is pictured on the front page of the paper, and every face beams with welcome and resolution, but we wonder why, oh, why, there is not even one young woman on the committee. Surely a woman ought to be in her "sphere" arranging for this great co-educational Christian school.

THE Ohio Prohibitionists have honored themselves by choosing Miss Henrietta G. Moore to preside over their state convention, which meets in Springfield in June. Our readers will remember that Miss Moore, who is one of our best-known lecturers, was elected a member of the board of education in Springfield, O., at the spring election. She has shown commendable independence and courage in her new position, and we are delighted to see that the brothers of the home protection party are recognizing her ability and advancing the cause of equal suffrage and equal honors in calling, for the first time in history, a woman to preside over a state political convention.

READERS of THE UNION SIGNAL will be interested to learn that wedding bells have been merrily ringing in the home of the first editor of this paper—Mrs. Mary B. Willard, of Berlin, Germany. On May 15, Mrs. Willard's eldest daughter, Katherine, was married to Mr. William Woodward Baldwin, of New York city, son of Mrs. Summerfield Baldwin, for many years president of Maryland W. C. T. U. Mrs. Baldwin and daughter were present at the ceremony. The newly wedded couple will make a brief sojourn in the British Isles and then settle in New York city where the groom is engaged in business. We extend to the excellent young people heartiest congratulations.

AMONG the churches in which women have been invited to speak at the World's White-Ribbon Convention are the three best-known churches in the world, among what are in England called "Nonconformists," namely, Spurgeon's Tabernacle, the City Temple (Dr. Parker's) and Wesley's City Road Chapel. It is probable that Miss Ackermann and Mrs. Helen M. Barker, who are Baptists, Mrs. Clara C. Hoffman, who is a Congregationalist, and Mrs. Elizabeth Wheeler Andrew and Dr. Kate Bushnell, who are of the Methodist persuasion, will occupy these three representative pulpits. Lady Henry Somerset and Miss Willard are to speak in the City Temple at 3:30 p. m., June 16, the day preceding the great Conventions. Miss Lillian Phelps, of Canada, will also speak in some prominent church on that day, and Mrs. Ormiston Chant, who is cosmopolitan so far as pulpits are concerned, will have as prominent a place as any, for to this she is entitled by her talents and her services.

THE first communication on the uses to which the old Crusade church of Hillsboro, O., may be put is sent by Mrs. Anna M. Palmer, one of our National evangelists. Mrs. Palmer says: "Now comes the opportunity for every local W. C. T. U. to secure a gavel. From the beams and timber of the Crusade church let there be wrought thousands of gavels, suggestive of better order in the local meetings and the battering down of a legalized liquor traffic." This idea is excellent, let us have more. A bit of good news has reached us about the new edifice to be built on the site of the Crusade church and that is that the architect has planned for a beautiful Crusade memorial room, devoted to the meetings of the W. C. T. U., and to be filled with souvenirs of the Crusade. This atones in large measure for the loss of the old structure.

THE difference between the Woodbridge and Lathrap funds must be kept clearly in mind. Because Mrs. Woodbridge was for so many years the "pen in hand" of our society we designate the fund for the free distribution of literature by her name; and because Mrs. Lathrap lived in a district W. C. T. U., presided over by a colored woman, we have named the fund for carrying on the colored work the Lathrap fund. We confidently hope that as the years pass by there will be such accretions to the nucleus which we hope to gather in this year as will make each of these funds an engine of power in the world-wide movement of the white ribbon. Who will help us this year to gain the money needed for this purpose? Let those whose interests and sympathy are especially with the colored people help us in this effort. Will not the English sisters who have worked so valiantly in the anti-lynching crusade send practical tokens of their zeal and remembrance for this purpose? And will not those who believe in moral rather than legal suasion in the temperance cause help us to send out literature gratuitously to distant unions? If they fear lest we might distribute incendiary documents pertaining to woman's suffrage and the like, they have only to designate the manner in which they wish their money used, and we will be true to the commission given us. But at all events let us go into the convention of October next with a good showing for the two prominent funds with which we have connected two of the most honored names in all our work.

THE attendants upon Willard Hall meetings have been greatly favored in being permitted to listen to a series of six lectures by Dr. George Dana Boardman, of Philadelphia, at present chaplain of the University of Chicago. These lectures have all been scholarly and patriotic. It is unnecessary to say that they have been of the highest order in a literary point of view. The subject of the last address, given on Monday, was "National Corporation." Nations stand as individuals before God, and mankind is only a corporation of nations. If one member suffer, the whole body suffers. One whole page of THE UNION SIGNAL would not be sufficient space to do justice to this excellent address, but our readers will be glad to learn in this brief paragraph that Dr. Boardman took strong ground for peace and arbitration, and stated that he believed humanity had reached such a point of moral and religious education that a war between two Christian nations in the future would be an inexcusable sin and crime. He then made an eloquent protest against Boys' Brigades as at present conducted. While he commended the systematic drill that would discipline and develop mind and body, he deprecated the use of guns and swords, whose only mission is to maim and destroy man. He believed that a cultivation of the warlike spirit in our boys by martial tactics was not in accord with the teachings of the loving Christ. These peace sentiments were enthusiastically applauded. May the time be hastened when "our swords shall be beaten into plowshares, and our spears into pruning hooks."

LUKE 7: 20.

BY MAY HASTINGS NOTTAGE.

A prayer ascends from many a sorrowing mother:
Art thou—they question, sighing wearily—
He that should come, or look we for another?
With passionate insistence—Art thou He?

We hear afar the sound of bitter weeping
The wail of mothers in their agony;
The moan of babes, for very sorrow sleeping,
And by their sobs entreating—Art thou He?

Prisoned and helpless 'mid the desolation,
Our hearts are sore oppressed with misery.
If thou indeed art come to save our nation
Hark to our cry and answer—Art thou He?

Hush! at His feet the sighs are changed to singing;
The dead are raised to life; the blinded see;
Unto the poor the glad good news comes bringing Beauty for ashes. Surely, this is He.

Yea! though we perish, locked within our prison;
Yea! though His day of power we may not see;
Yea! though Himself be crucified, nor risen,
Yet to our aching vision—this is He.

Slowly though move the chariot wheels eternal,
Straight through the darkness onward moveth He.
The prison gloom is pierced by dawn supernal.
Our God, for whom we waited; this is He.

ALCIDE'S "YOUNG MISS."

BY ELIZABETH CUMINGS.

"I'se pintedly anxious 'bout young Miss," confided Alcide to Polly Hopkins, the parrot. "Ef I were a gwine ter sot forth my 'pinions I'd say as she hab mos' ovah done her juty tur her ma. She hab so."

Alcide was fifty-five, five years older than his "young Miss," who had just been bereaved of her mother. Madame Boufil had been in her day a famous beauty. She had been, too, very bright and clever. Husband, sons, wealth had gone in the awful sacrifice of the war. To be sure her daughter, Eugenie, had lost father and brothers and fortune and lover, but Madame thought little about Eugenie. She thought about herself, and about her great grief and loss, and the more she thought about it, the more convinced she was that the very least Eugenie could do was to devote herself in every thought to her. That was way back in the year 1862, and she had just died in the year 1894, never having changed her opinion. Old friends and acquaintances died or were lost sight of, for Madame would neither make visits nor permit Eugenie to do so. She did not, to be sure, lay commands upon her daughter, but she wept or sulked if she went out. She did not care for literature or music, so no new books went into the great book-cases, and the grand piano remained closed. She thought newspapers reading only for men, and as the modern magazines were in their infancy in the year 1862 she knew nothing about them. That Eugenie might like to know something about the world she was living in did not occur to her. Of course, new acquaintances or friends were not to be thought of. The very children over the way avoided the house as a strange and fearsome place.

But there was a garden full of flowers and Polly Hopkins was a sprightly old bird, and Eugenie, spite of everything, saw a little of the world, for she went to the Cathedral every Sunday morning, and on high festival or fast days. After Madame became too stout to go, it was hard for her to allow her daughter to attend to this duty, but the soul must be fed, she admitted. It was on these journeys that Eugenie saw the change of fashions, and so was able remotely to follow them, but in mourning, as Madame Boufil said, one does not have to think of styles as in colors, and no matter what the cut of her garments, Alcide's "young miss" looked the lady that she was. She had never been a beauty, but the young lover who had never come back from Chickamauga had said her face was like a star. Now she was a thin, tall, gray-eyed woman with dark hair streaked with gray, and a gentle manner that suggested years of submission to somebody. She sat on the front gallery, her shawl drawn about her thin shoulders, taking no interest in the one pleasure that had been her resource all those thirty-two years. It was not wonderful that the faithful Alcide shook his head. He circled slowly toward her, stirring up now this plant, now lifting a weed.

"De Ma'shall Niels is doin fine," he said, lifting his hat, "and as fur de Jacks deys a right sma't o' clippin' tur do. I'se been projecking 'bout sottin' out some ob dem dar out by de back gallery. Wut you t'ink, Miss Genie?"

"Don't ask me, Alcide. There's no one to do anything for any more. Now that ma mere is laid in the old St. Louis tomb, what does it matter about the roses?" Miss Eugenie spoke drearily, but calmly, her hands crossed in her lap.

"O' cose, o' cose, jis so," assented Alcide with the utmost respect though with secret impatience. "But yoo wants flowers fo' All Saints Day, an' oder times tur take her. O' cose. An' den yur mus' do somepin. Yur is boun' tur hab weeds ef yur don't hab flowers, an' it ain't no ways polite tur de ole place tur let eve't'ing run plum wil'."

"No," admitted Miss Boufil rousing up enough to glance about. "And yet, Alcide, what is the use? Who will care when we are gone?"

Alcide drew up his shoulders and spread out his hands. Pure blooded African though he was, his training had been French. "We has tur care how t'ings is lef'," he reasoned. "Ef we'se de las' ob de family, we is. But dar somebody a-comin' hyar atter we is, an' hyar's now."

"Do what you like with the roses," said the mistress rising to hide the coming tears. "It is true I shall want many to take to the tomb. That is all that is left. All."

Alcide returned to the flower beds disconsolately. A mocker trilled and fluted high up in the magnolia near the gate, flirting his tail with joy that he was not set upon by a swarm of scolding sparrows. Delicious scents were in the air, for the violets were opening. Old Polly round in the court called tirelessly, "Happy day, happy day, Polly!" With the delight of spring fermenting in his veins Alcide himself longed to sing. But he forbore and talked instead to his hoe. "She ain't knowin' nobody as is young any mo'. Professor Rochon an' Madame is mos' eighty, an' one is deef, an' one mos' bline. Old Madame Clairveau shake like she hab a continuwall chill, an' she's sebenty-five ef she are a day, an' de chile nuvvur see dem 'cept at mass. Dad burn some folkses, I say! I don't keer who dey is! How is I tur sot young Miss a 'joyin' life! 'Tain't like I was white folks. An' 'tain't like somepin I could ask ole Cæsar's adwises 'bouten." In his perplexity he began to hum a charming air with nonsense words in Creole French, whose refrain if put into English would say,

"She has sorrow, sorrow, sorrow,
She has sorrow in her heart."

That evening after long study Alcide at last determined to visit the wise Cæsar, like himself a survival of "old times," and the born servant of Professor Rochon.

In spite of her narrow life Miss Boufil had been free from many troubles. While a panorama of strange faces passed through the kitchens and chambers of the rest of New Orleans and housekeepers wrestled with new conditions, she had only Madame, her mother and poverty, and to help her she had always Alcide. He had married a flighty yellow woman who would have had him go beyond Canal street. But he would not budge an inch out of the Boufil yard; so she had left him. Before Madame became helpless he had often gone out and earned money for himself with a push cart. But from the day she had a stroke of paralysis, he was at Miss Eugenie's command. He cooked the dinners, did most of the buying, washed the windows and swept the rooms. In the hour of Madame's death he had knelt at her feet and responded to old Pere Joseph's prayers. He never intruded his opinion upon his "young Miss," but she knowing in a vague way that he had become a citizen, and that he, going out among people, was able to judge of many things she could not, often asked it. When, therefore, in the morning she found no coffee waiting her and the milkman, after much clatter with his bell descended from his lofty two-wheeled cart and pulled the gate bell, she was frightened. In vain she searched. Alcide was gone. But where? Not for one moment did she think he had deserted her. She had a strange feeling, mysterious, unexplainable toward the black. The deep, impassable gulf of race lay between them; but as he had said the day before, they were the last of the family. They bore the same name. All her life she would have spoken of him as she did now to the milkman as "our Alcide." A profound desolation came upon her as the hours went by and he did not return. Again and again she stepped to the back gallery and called his name. There was no response save from the old parrot who stirred on her perch and called uneasily, "Oh, yoo Alcide!" The sudden southern night had come when a messenger boy brought her a note which said:

"An old colored man is lying in the surgical ward of the city hospital, who says he is your servant. He has asked that you be sent for. He was struck last night by an electric car and seriously injured. How seriously I cannot now determine. I am, Madame, your obedient servant, J. Segura."

Segura, like Boufil, was an old Louisiana name Miss Eugenie remembered. There was a surgeon by that name who had gone away with the first volunteers in '62. He was a handsome man. As she hurried into her wraps she wondered if "J. Segura" were like him, and if he were a relative. Just how she reached the hospital she did not know. People looked at her in wonder when she asked where it was, her speech so plainly marked her a native. But at last she was there, and beside the bed where bandaged beyond recognition, lay Alcide.

"Oh, young Miss," he cried, feeling sudden strength as her cool fingers touched his hot head, "I was plum crezy t'inkin' yoo'd rickon I'd run away, ur got killed. Ef I doan git well dar's a bit ur money—" He lapsed into unconsciousness for many minutes, during which his "young Miss" sat beside him and helped the nurse change the cooling applications on his forehead. But when he came to himself he began just where he had left off. "It ar tied to de laig ob my bed. I got 'nuff fo' a coffin, but—"

"You shall be laid in our family tomb, my poor Alcide," said Miss Eugenie, softly, divining that the terror of the New Orleans negro of a pauper funeral was upon him. "And it shall not be a pauper funeral."

"Lawd bress ye, young Miss," breathed Alcide. "An' Miss,"—

"Yes, Alcide."

"I doan want no 'ficials. I wants real flowers a-plenty."

"You shall have them when the time comes; but you are still living. Try to think of getting well. It is still possible."

"True, true," said the pleasant voice of a dark, slender man who had just passed beyond the white screens that shut the bed in, and whose authoritative manner proclaimed him a doctor. "Think of living."

The next morning when Miss Eugenie presented herself at the hospital she carried a little basket of violets. "Oh!" cried the sister who met her in the corridor, "let me have a few for the children."

"Children!" echoed Miss Boufil, blankly. "Do you have sick children here?"

"Alas, yes, and sick girls and boys, as well as sick men and women."

"Take all but one little bunch. I will tell Alcide. He will like it. He takes care of my flowers," said Miss Eugenie, hastily. "He is not a common servant, but was the son of my old mammy. You understand, and when I have seen him, may I visit the children?"

"Oh, yes. I will tell them you brought the flowers. My ward is for the convalescents."

At the sight of the row of little beds and wan little faces something keen as a knife, yet lovely as light, darted through Miss Eugenie's heart. All young life had been denied her so many years it was wonderful that youth had not shriveled up in her. Madame, her mother, was made nervous by children, so they had sat upon the back gallery that looked out upon the bayou, not upon the front gallery, where one could occasionally hear far-away sounds from the quiet street. A young girl was going about, a slim, dark-eyed girl, Cyrilla, Dr. Segura's youngest daughter, the only one he had left, whispered Sister Anastasie.

"I wish you would sing," said a small mite, whose chin was no broader than Miss Eugenie's slender thumb. Cyrilla stood on one side of him, Miss Eugenie on the other. The girl flushed.

"I cannot sing a note," said she, sadly.

"I am so sorry, papa loves singing so. Perhaps Madame—," and she looked appealingly at Miss Eugenie, who flushed in her turn. Long ago she had ceased to sing, though in her youth her voice had been accounted rare by Mademoiselle Planvin, her teacher. Madame Boufil, her mother, had complained that singing hurt her head, so music went the way of the rest.

"I used to sing a little once, my child," said Miss Eugenie, filled with a desire to do something for the tiny invalid, "but I know no pretty child songs, not one." She sat down in the wooden rocker by the bed and let the black shawl drop from her shoulders while she clasped her hands. It was well no painful memories nearer than thirty years touched her power of song, else the small pleader would have asked in vain.

"My mamma sang," said the child, "and I could sing afore my throat was sore. I don't care what you sing, so you sing."

Pianissimo a pure, clear tone filled the place, Miss Eugenie's young old voice singing Handel's immortal music set to immortal verse, "Angels ever bright and fair." The little creatures playing with toys laid them down on the tables stretched across their cots, and eyed her gravely and when she paused gave a long sigh, and said, "Another, oh, ma'am, another."

"Another? I know so few. I have forgotten." Then she sang Schubert's "Ave Maria," and Dr. Segura paused at the door to listen, then came in and begged her to go into the men's ward and sing. He spoke as if it was a very simple thing which put shy Miss Eugenie at her ease, but she sang Gounod's music to those sadder faced invalids, and she was glad she had ventured to stop at Professor Rochon's and doubled her offering of violets. All her life she had understood by charity the giving of alms. She now discovered the word had far finer and wider meanings.

Every day for a month Miss Eugenie went to the hospital. Professor Rochon spoke to his nephew who sent Miss Eugenie his flowers, and he in turn spoke to his wife's sister whose garden was beautiful. Old Cæsar who brought a basket full each morning from the professor insisted on going all the way to the hospital with such burdens as Miss Eugenie chose to carry.

"It's ole Marse Rochon's orders," he said stubbornly, when she objected, "an' ef yose wuth yoo salt in dis world yoo hasiter do's yur bid."

At last the day came when Dr. Segura pronounced Alcide able to go home. He had kept him just as long as the rules permitted, for his professional instinct had told him the hospital was doing Miss Eugenie as much good as it was Alcide. A subtle change had come over her. She walked firmer; her cheeks wore a different tint; her voice when she sang was richer in tone; her dress too had changed, and she had lost something of that pitiful air of an old child which her long subordination to her mother's whims had made natural to her.

"We shall miss you sadly," he said when he told her the good news that the faithful Alcide might depart on the morrow. "But I—" he hesitated, and a flush rose in his dark cheeks, "I shall, with your permission, do myself the honor to call with Mademoiselle, my daughter."

"Oh, I shall come again to the hospital," said Miss Eugenie, quickly, "I have found so much here." Then a sense of the meaning to the doctor's words darted into her mind, and for an instant she was confused. The doctor's wife had been in heaven for ten years or more. The scar across his face had been made by a federal bullet way back in 1863 when he was twenty-five and a surgeon on a general's staff. Cyrilla, who had just come out from her morning visit to the children's ward, put her hand upon her arm. "Yes, papa and I are coming to see you. Papa has promised though he is so busy. And you will let us, will you not?"

"Oh, I shall be happy to see you," said Miss Eugenie, quickly drawing her veil.

"Yose managed monsous well," said Alcide the next morning when he had walked feebly around his old domain. "It do look like yose gwine tur sot up a consubaotary whut Cæsar are allus tellin' 'bout."

"When you get well enough to attend to it I am going to have all the flowers I can raise to give away," said Miss Eugenie with energy. "There's places where they are needed even more than at the hospitals. I mean in the poor homes where people are ill."

That evening while Dr. Segura sat with Miss Eugenie on the front gallery, Alcide sat on the back gallery and talked to Polly Hopkins under his breath. "It ain't jis' de way I 'lowed ter sot about it," he chuckled, "but I jis rickon when I wur studyin' twell I didn't know no mo'n tur let dat 'lectric car fly me out onter ole Manuel's banquette, an' lan' me blam all ovah his bar'ls, de good Lawd know'd dat was der bes' way tur sot my young Miss intur good times like she'd orter hab. He didn't hab no use in my askin' adwices ob Cæsar. He know'd dar is tings no niggah knows. Dem good times is comin' now; young Miss am started in tur seein' de size ob dis city. Laws a mussy me! Quality and thoroughbred hoss jis' alike. Dey hasitur hab times ob goin' zickity blip in somet'in' an' my young Miss'd pined away into de tomb fo' lack ob chanches ob makin' folkses happy ef I hadn't a cracked my haid. De Lawd's ways are mysterious. Dey is shorely."

JENNIE CASSEDAY.

BY LAURA NEALE.

The story of Jennie Casseday is not a new one to white-ribboners. But hers is a life story that will bear telling many times, and then the half of the beauty of that gifted and saintly character could never be told.

Jennie Casseday was born in Louisville, Ky., in 1840, one of a family noted for its gifts and graces of mind and heart. Her mother died when Jennie was little more than a baby; her father, Samuel Casseday, was one of the prominent merchants of Louisville in his day, and her girlhood was spent amid the bright surroundings of a wealthy, Christian home. Just as she was stepping across the threshold of womanhood she was thrown from a carriage, and the spinal injury which resulted made her a physical invalid for life. Her sufferings all the years were intense. Every other night she lay in helpless agony the whole night through, feeling, to use her own expression, "as if somebody were driving red-hot nails all up and down her spine."

It was her own love of flowers in her sick room which first suggested to her the flower mission, and she so enlisted the sympathies of her friends that very soon women, old and young, gathering inspiration from her bedside, went out once a week into the slums and prisons, the cottages and hospitals, carrying not only fragrant flowers with text-card attached. but often food and clothes as well.

Miss Willard, on a visit to Louisville in 1881 heard of the "best loved woman in the state" and sought her presence. "We talked," said Miss Willard, "of the ministry of these winsome heralds of good-will with the beautiful mission of which Miss Casseday was already connected, and I asked if she would accept the superintendency of such a department should it be established by the convention." She consented, and from that day until her death, February 8, 1893, directed the work of this beautiful philanthropy from her sick-bed. This involved an immense correspondence, and her pathetic little letters dated, "Sick-bed" have set tens of thousands of women at work throughout the land, ministering to the "shut-ins" in sick rooms and prisons.

June 9, the anniversary of Miss Casseday's birth, is observed as a special day for the distribution of flowers and other work in connection with this department. On one of her birthdays her white-ribbon comrades from all over the uation sent her the most beautiful and complete music box that money could purchase.

Miss Jennie made her home with her sister, Mrs. Fannie Duncan (herself a successful journalist and her husband a well known member of the editorial guild), and their parting by death was the first separation the sisters had ever known. Besides her work in the flower mission, Miss Casseday was the founder of the Jennie Casseday Infirmary and the Louisville Training School for Nurses. She also established "Rest Cottage," a summer home for working girls, and every year endured the torture of being moved that she might spend three months among "her girls."

Hers was a cheery, joyous nature; she made "the best of now and here"; turned to utmost use each ray of happiness, possessing a keen sense of humor which never deserted her. "The whole house revolves around her ladyship," Mrs. Duncan proudly said; but singularly modest was "sister Jen" of her own importance. When asked "Why are you not spoiled?" she would smile and say, "What have I to spoil me? That other people are so good to me? That is their virtue, not mine."

A woman never lived who was more universally beloved by all classes and whose influence has been and will continue to be such a benediction to all who come in contact with it. "Jennie Casseday," said a Louisville paper, "erected monuments more enduring than those of brass and marble; generations yet unborn will call her blessed, while upon the hearts of thousands now living her name and memory are indelibly engraved."

REFORM PROGRESS FOR FIRST THIRD OF 1895.

IV.

BY REV. WILBUR F. CRAFTS.

MUNICIPAL REFORM.

Although municipal reform itself needs reforming in New York city, verifying Dr. Parkhurst's anticipation of a long, hard war before permanent victory is secured, other cities have taken courage from what has already been done in New York, and we hear of civic revivals and law-enforcement movements in Louisville, Cincinnati, St. Louis and Chicago,—in the latter case victorious in the recent popular election, which is really a triumph of the Civic Federation. Mayor Weir, of Lincoln, has distinguished himself by recent enforcement of laws against disorderly houses, and Mayor Denny, of Indianapolis, by a vigorous crusade against Sunday saloons. Philadelphia has elected a better mayor than usual, and Wheeling has improved its Chief of Police. Cincinnati, although there is no city election until 1897, has vigorously begun the work of agitation and education for municipal reform in which the writer has been helping a little. A "Reform League" has been organized by the ministers with eight branches in the various sections of the city, each of which aims to hold at least six mass-meetings a year, so scattered that one of them shall occur sometime almost every week. The present plan is to call on a policeman to enforce some law against Sunday saloons, or Sunday theatres, or gambling, or vice, and when he refuses to enforce it he is complained of to the police commissioners who acquit him on the ground that he was obeying the orders of the mayor, and is bound to do so even when the mayor's orders are contrary to law. Then the commissioners acquit him, and for that are accused to the Governor as his appointees, and even Governor McKinley acquits the commissioners on the ground that error of judgment of law rather than fraud or malfeasance is involved. But the Governor will find it hard to continue his evasions, as new and varied cases are one after another presented.

The chief difficulty in current municipal reform is the timidity shown toward the saloons. City governments cannot say "No saloons," but they can and should say, "No saloon domination." The literature of municipal reform has recently been enriched by two books which are its very text-books, Dr. Parkhurst's "Our Fight with Tammany," and Dr. Tolman's "Municipal Reform Movements," the latter giving the working plans of the most successful city clubs in all parts of the country.

NEWSPAPER REFORM.

The evidence that with all our so-called newspapers the art of news-telling is yet in the green has been abundantly produced of late. When Congress adjourned, no daily the writer was able to see, told of the important liquor investigation ordered, and the anti-lottery law was only mentioned obscurely, with no explanation as to its provisions. Shortly before that, as we have said, many newspapers incorrectly declared that South Dakota had returned to its former law allowing divorce on ninety days' residence. More recently we have been told by some papers that the age of consent has been made twenty-one years in Colorado, while other papers say eighteen. Some papers say sixteen and some eighteen for New Hampshire, and all papers but one that the writer has seen are at fault in saying eighteen for Delaware, where it is still seven, as we have shown. Even religious papers share these errors because they rely upon the careless, haphazard newspapers and their news agencies, whereas religious and reform papers should have an associated press of reforms of their own to gather good news and tell it accurately.

The hope that some day philanthropists will establish a national syndicate of daily papers, financially strong and morally pure; that fathers will not forever permit in their parlors the crime-breeding newspapers which are excluded from prisons, is strengthened by the widespread protest which the more reputable part of the press has recently been led to make by the juvenility shown by the daily press generally in their nauseous descriptions by cuts and types of the marriage of a millionaire's daughter to a nominal nobleman. At that very time the same papers were failing to give accurate and adequate reports of the important legislation that was being daily enacted in state legislatures all over the land, which are of interest and value to residents of all the states, interlocked as are our commercial and social and moral destinies.

Press dispatches from Indianapolis in Cincinnati papers which the writer saw on April 13 (and no doubt like dispatches in other cities also), told at nearly a column's length how Indianapolis Baseball Club proposed to inaugurate Sunday games on Easter in that city, closing up with the usual hypocrisy about the poor "workingmen" and "keeping people from worse places." Monday's papers being wholly silent as to the issue we inferred the news was too good to tell, and on writing to noble Mayor Denny found such to be the case. Despite the fact that the baseball management had been specifically notified that no games would be allowed, the game was advertised, Cleveland Club being announced to aid Indianapolis Club in the law breaking, but the mayor preëmpted the grounds for his own "clubs," thirty of them with a police captain in command, and so the management with a lot of hypocrisy on above named lines, used Sunday morning papers to declare the game "off," which left the law "on."

PRISON REFORM.

Prison reformers in New York state are endeavoring, with what success is yet to be seen, to counteract by legislation the serious mistake of the new state constitution, forbidding work in state prisons, except on supplies for state institutions. An effort is being slyly made in the same legislature to oust Mr. Brockway, of the Elmira Reformatory, by such a revision of the management as shall allow his peremptory dismissal, the effort to dismiss him "for cause" having failed.

The same legislature has doled out to penologists a crumb of comfort in a cumulative sentence bill, by which police court "rounders" shall have sentence doubled as each new conviction, from five days for first offence, ten for second, twenty for third, up to six months for a maximum. In the same legislature Hon. Elbridge Gerry, of the Anti-Cruelty Society, has secured serious attention for a bill proposing whipping for wife beaters and others who have inflicted physical pain, who are to be paid in kind.

PEACE AND ARBITRATION.

With Japan and China at war, France marching upon Madagascar, European and American nations engaged in numerous and threatening diplomatic disputes, a Napoleonic craze in our magazines and the last Congress voting more money than any other ever did for the iron ships that have proved but eggshells in recent tests in Asia and South America and in the Mediterranean and North Seas, one would hardly say the era of universal peace was at hand; but the peaceful settlement of the dispute of Mexico and Nicaragua and the proposal of a treaty of perpetual arbitration between Great Britain and the United States, brought to our government recently by Mr. Cremer, with signatures of nearly all the members of Parliament, are omens of good.

SABBATH REFORM.

The most influential special attack on the Sabbath has been the movement for Sunday opening of saloons in New York state which has shown an astonishing strength, and, like every bad measure, has been supported by some good men. Mayor Strong declared that many ministers had written him in favor of it, but when those willing to be known openly as in favor of Sunday saloons are called into the open, Rectors Rylance and Rainsford are all that can be found. The other Episcopal pastors have put themselves strongly on the other side with all other clergy, Catholic and Protestant, that have been heard from at all. The investigations we have made at Albany indicate that Sunday saloons will have to content themselves with the permission of executive officers for their Sunday sales from back doors and will not receive the sanction of legislators this time. The most active Sabbath association this year is that of Wisconsin, of which Rev. J. B. Davison, of Milwaukee, is secretary. He has enlisted Catholics and Protestants, foreign and native churches to an unprecedented degree.

WOMAN SUFFRAGE.

The most cursory reader can hardly have failed to notice that the state legislatures of 1895 have given unprecedented attention to woman suffrage. The votes on the question of enacting it into law or submitting it to the people, though seldom fully successful in both houses, have shown an increased friendliness to the movement as compared with the votes of the same bodies in former years.

On the whole our sheaf of winter wheat is encouraging considering how faint and feeble have been the efforts for reform of the great mass of the "good citizens," who do not care enough for the betterment of society to work for it, not even enough to write a letter to a legislator to ask for it. Considering the number at work the harvest is full of encouragement.

WILLARD HALL, NOONTIDE LINKS.

His face was black, but his speech was a marvel of eloquence. He said: "I thank God for this Temple, for Willard Hall, for the woman whose faith caused it to be, and I want to leave my testimony for Jesus as healer of the spirit and healer of the body. I was sick, oh, so sick, and friends said I would die. One night I sat on the porch, the moon was up, a great round moon, that sent tremulous seas of light sifting down through the trees, and I said, 'O Jesus, if you want this poor black man, take him quick,' and then I went on a journey, and came to a lake that was smooth, and somehow looked like the moonlight, and across it stood some one calling me, but I was afraid. 'Come,' said the voice, so I started, and when I reached the other side my friend looked so bright and beautiful that I fell down at His feet and when I awoke I was well, have never been sick a day since. Oh, glory to His name, this wonder-working Jesus."

Sometimes there comes to the noon meetings, the woman who built the Temple, and when she prays we are strangely moved. She never voices a doubt, but somehow it seems as if her inner self cried out something like this: "O Lord, make haste and let me see this work accomplished speedily." Then it is that I am seized with a determination to do something for the Temple worth doing. Certain am I that she who built the Temple looked down the years with vision strong and clear, and when we who have fussed and scolded about it are dead and gone, countless thousands will gather at the noonday tryst, whose mingled supplication and praise throne-ward rising, may possibly fall upon her ear.

Noonday worship was over, and in the saintly silence I sat alone thinking of the city's need and the work whereunto I had set my hand. I thought of the years to come, and saw against the days missionaries coming and going from Willard Hall, bearing out to the city's highways and byways tidings of great joy. And then I cried out, "Yea, Lord, it would be possible, but where is the gold and silver?" Low and crystal clear came the answer, "Ask for it, child. Some will heed, and they that do shall reap a thousand fold."

. . . . . .

I passed out to the street, and close by the Temple's door stood a girl with painted cheek and glaring eyes. Poor lost ewe lamb, slain on the altars of a city's sin.

AMERICAN MEDICAL ASSOCIATION.

DEAR UNION SIGNAL:—Music Hall, Baltimore, one of the finest and most complete buildings for convention purposes in the country, and the one in which the National W. C. T. U. Convention will assemble in October next, has just witnessed the forty-sixth annual meeting of the American Medical Association, and public interest has been manifested in the event to an unusual degree.

Among the suggestions made at the meeting was one for the organization of a national board of health, with a representative in the presidential cabinet, one duty of which should be "the scientific study of the effects of alcohol as a beverage." Another of startling character was advocated by an experienced physician who thought it "wiser to let children suffering from the vices or physical weaknesses of their parents, die off naturally than to help them through their adolescency to maturity, and that they should be eliminated from society with as much dispatch as possible, for the mutual benefit of society and the poor children themselves."

Hypnotism was discussed at considerable length, and statements were made by some of the speakers regarding its marked value in cases of inebriety.

The annual meeting of the American Medical Temperance Association was held during the convention, and Dr. N. S. Davis, of Chicago, and Dr. J. H. Kellogg, of Battle Creek, elected to serve as president and corresponding secretary, during the coming year. In a paper read by Dr. Davis on "Does Alcohol ever act as Food, as a Generator of any Natural Force in the Living Body?" the writer stated that while men have been kept alive forty or fifty days on water, he had found no case, although he had sought diligently, where men had been kept alive half that time on diluted alcohol. "Vital force, heat force, motor force, nerve force and muscular force are all impaired," said he, "by the influence of doses of alcohol." The sum of one hundred dollars was voted by the Association to the reprinting and distribution of the collected writings of Dr. Davis on alcohol, and a committee appointed to discuss the question of the relation between neurology and alcohol at the next annual meeting of the neurological section.

The prevention of deafness, blindness and various diseases received considerable attention from the general association, but in the press reports no mention is made regarding the prevention of alcoholism or inebriety, with its interminable train of diseases, many and varied.

The conclusion reached in one of the papers, and indorsed by the section before which it was read, was that "the state has the right and duty to supervise the health of its citizens. Legislation for the ear, nose and throat is as necessary to perfect health and comfort as legislation for the eyes."

The conclusion that "legislation for the throat" is the imperative duty of the state was reached long since by the W. C. T. U., though not just in the manner proposed by these physicians.

These points in the proceedings of this influential association and the serving of claret punch recently at large gatherings here of "progressive women" of admirable type generally, have emphasized in the mind of your correspondent some convictions that have lain dormant for some time, and that she takes the liberty of passing on to THE UNION SIGNAL in an interrogative form.

Is it not urgently necessary that more prominence be given in our work, especially at our large public gatherings, to the subject of total abstinence for the individual and our reasons for the position we hold in this? For in our zeal for prohibition and our interest in the many departments into which we have diverged, do we not usually ignore in public this part of our platform, forgetting apparently the steps by which we have been led to our present position? Can we bring the public up to our colors unless we show them something more of the way by which we have come? And is not the great moral and intelligent public far more nearly united in regard to the evil of the saloon than on the subject of total abstinence for the individual? A look at society, not only at strictly fashionable society, will surely convince one that this is so.

The opinions herein expressed are not individual here, as a number of our most active workers have expressed themselves similarly from time to time. And the hope is prevalent and earnest with them, that at the gathering of the National Union in Baltimore in October, the subject of total abstinence for the individual, with its whys and wherefores, will be made prominent in most alluring fashion.

Yours for the work,
MARGARET A. LAKE,

WHO IS RESPONSIBLE?

DEAR UNION SIGNAL:—I would like to tell your readers of a temperance lecture to which it was my privilege (?) to listen not long since.

The speaker took for the foundation of his remarks the words of David, "Is the young man Absalom safe?" and we all agreed with him when he told us that the young men and young women of to-day are not safe, but strange to relate, he put the whole blame upon the churches and the Christian people. He pictured the saloon as one of the most inviting spots on earth. He said, "They have bright lights, good music, and the merry song and jest. There the young man meets with a royal welcome and is made to feel at home, but on the other hand our churches are only open about two nights in the week, then they are dimly lighted, poorly heated and badly ventilated, while the music in many of them is something that would 'spoil a crop of corn,' and furthermore our church sociables are the most unsociable of all things, and the average young man would flee from them as he would from some contagious disease."

Now let us consider these statements for a moment. Surely our brother is laboring under a very great mistake. First, I would ask, does the saloon-keeper ever do anything that will not benefit himself? If he does put bright lights and good music into his saloon does he not expect to make the young man pay for it all? He does nothing that will not bring money into his till, and while it is true he may try in his selfish manner to make the young men and boys feel at home in his den of vice so long as they have money to spend there, as soon as their purse is empty he will knock them into the gutter. But Christian people all over this land are giving continually of their means to build churches and support ministers, that the gospel may be preached on every hill-top and in every valley, that the youth of our country may be instructed. They buy organs and pianos for church and Sunday-school and secure the best musicians to play them, and to-day the finest music in the land is the grand anthems that peal forth from our churches.

Then, again, we find everywhere Christian men and women willing to open homes, some of them filled with flowers and singing birds, where the lights are bright and carpets soft, to gather around them, for a social evening, the young men and maidens of the community. They serve the best of refreshments, and leave nothing undone that can be done for their entertainment. And if the "young man" flees from these to the saloon, with its vile odor of whisky and tobacco, with its dirty floor covered with sawdust, where lewd songs and coarse jests abound, it is—because it is easier to go down hill than to climb up, and not because there is nothing being done by good people to draw him into straight paths. But let us be careful to put the blame where it belongs. The "young man" is not safe. The saloon-keeper, who, for gain, has spread a net for his unwary feet, and the voters of this nation who permit him to ply his trade, are responsible before Almighty God for his ruin. "We cannot take the boy from the saloon." Oh, that we might "take the saloon from the boy."

MRS. A. V. QUINN.
Phœnix, Ari.

DEAR COMRADES:—A glance at my "special" calendar, covered with all sorts of hieroglyphics, that mean W. C. T. U. days and doings, reminds me of fast-approaching June 9—our flower mission day.

As I think of your busy hands filled with the cares that come to you as wife, mother, sister, daughter,—hands that find time, nevertheless, to do for those that "have need," I rejoice over the blessings that are yours through our Master's "Inasmuch."

I learned a beautiful lesson the other day that may well come in right here. Finding myself in need of a little help a while ago, I thought of speaking to a friend, but concluded to defer the request and manage in some other way—a woman's fashion of doing! But it all came out later, and instead of the protest common in such cases, my friend said regretfully, "You cheated me; you should not cheat people so." "Cheated you?" "Yes, out of one of the Lord's 'inasmuches.'"

As you go about on your various missions of kindly deeds and you come now and then to someone "too proud" to be helped, have you not thought, perhaps, the same thought? That not only were they refusing the "cup of cold water" themselves, but hindering you from hearing Him say, "Ye have done it unto me." Ah, let us run, though our feet be weary and the road be rough, since our running is for the King!

When your flower mission superintendent has laid all her plans and you have counseled with her how you may aid in carrying them out, then cast about how you may conduct daily flower mission deeds of your own. Do not let your superintendent get all the blessing. Put your own finger to the plow that you may feel the blessed thrill of helping make straight furrows and planting precious seed for God.

Keep a supply of flower mission cards on hand with the white ribbon tied or ready to tie in the corner. When your washerwoman goes home fasten one to the banana or pear or "posy" you give her for the children. Hand one to the thirsty laborer who comes to you for a "drink of water, please, ma'am." Run over the list of your members and see if there be one who knows not the blessedness of giving. Take her with you next time you go to hospital or jail or sick room and let her share the overflow of your "Inasmuch."

Oh, there are so many ways! One reason our hands are not filled wish such work as this is that we have not heard the Master's "Go ye." And why? We have not listened. Our ears are strained to hear the world's news and we have not enough time left to go alone with Him.

Dearly beloved, if your flower mission seems languishing, set apart a little space of time and listen at His feet until the hungry cry, the weary sob, the languishing groan of His "little ones" can reach you. As soon as you truly hear, you will be eager to go.

A country union exceptionally blessed in that it is "in one of the purest and best parts of the state, four miles each way from a saloon," is doing fine preventive work. Its active L. T. L. meets regularly and sews for the poor of Bethesda Mission, Chicago, and it is not only "not losing young men," but educating them that they may stand firm in such evil day as may find them in less helpful surroundings.

---

"The greatest blessing to our church and neighborhood," writes another sister, "was the organization of an L. T. L. in connection with our Sabbath school."

The little children will lead many to righteousness!

We are indebted to Miss Kate Lunden, Framingham, Mass., for an interesting article on "The Scandinavian Crusade":

"Crusade? Yes, though it has begun at the other end of the line, in the churches—the saloons will hear from us later.

"The first bugle call of this campaign was sounded in the Swedish Bethesda church, New York, one evening recently. The church was packed to the very doors. A fitting song prepared the way for the touching story of the Crusade, eloquently told by Mrs. Princell. Through the streets of Hillsboro and Washington Depot, from saloon to saloon she conducted her hearers and eyes grew dim and glances were exchanged as she painted the scenes enacted. Later in the program when the membership cards were passed, twenty-seven responded, backed by seventeen honorary members, and the number has since grown to forty-one.

"The following evening a large audience gathered in the Swedish Methodist church in Brooklyn. Some telitale figures concerning the liquor traffic and a couple of stirring songs completed the program. Forty-three recruits for the white ribbon army were pledged, and ten sturdy Norsemen, headed by the pastor, declared themselves ready to stand by the sisters. The honorary list would have been much longer, but there is a Prohibition club in that church already, and its members considered themselves self-constituted 'brothers-in-law.'

"The third night the scene of action was changed to the New York Swedish Methodist church. There the pledged membership was rounded out to one hundred and seven, and the honoraries to thirty-four, with the prospect of increase from other quarters."

Our Chieftain sends us an extract from a letter written to her that beautifully illustrates the value of the "personal touch." It is the story of how one woman became a white-ribboner. This new recruit was on a train carrying delegates to the Cleveland Convention. She says: " . . . A bright, energetic lady came on board. The very pompons on her bonnet told the resistless force of the wearer. How I enjoyed watching her! Her every motion bespoke untiring energy and strong will power, and her eyes betokened a kindly nature, with charity for all.

"I became acquainted with her, and she asked me if I was going to the Convention. I told her that probably I should attend some of the meetings while in Cleveland, and although I never had identified myself with the W. C. T. U., I was heart and soul for temperance, and no one hated the saloon with its damning influences more than I.

"'Where is your white ribbon?' she asked.

"'What good does it do to wear a white ribbon?' said I. 'If you can convince me that it is helping my Master in any way by wearing one, I will do so.'

"'It does just this much good, child,' she replied. 'It tells its own story to every one who sees it. It tells them they should live pure, sweet, temperate lives; they should love Christ, the Son of God, and the wearer is trying to do what she can for her Saviour. Then, too, it will give you many an opportunity to speak for the cause. I not only wear it on every house dress, but I even leave it on my old dresses that I throw in the rag-bag, so that it will be a token even to the rag-man.'

"Need I say that her words touched me? It was the old story over again of the woman who hid the leaven in the three measures of meal.

"Isn't it Drummond who says, 'What we exchange when we meet is not words, but souls?'

"Well, it was on this wise that I became a white-ribboner."

still loom up before us in questioning array, so we will consider some of them for the remainder of our space.

QUESTION.—Who is entitled to wear the white rose?

ANSWER.—Any voter who has the wit to put it on, with the understanding that he is to vote for home protection. No pledge is necessary.

Q.—How should county president's expenses be paid when organizing?

A.—The matter of paying expenses is met variously. If the county union is financially able it may vote to pay its president's expenses. Oftener, however, she pays her own way and depends upon what arrangements she may be able to make at local meetings for a collection. Sometimes the women who call her to their aid can guarantee her a certain sum and expenses. It all "depends."

Q.—What is the proper manner of drawing money from the treasury?

A.—The proper way in a meeting of the W. C. T. U. is for some member to arise and say: "Madam President, I move that the treasurer be instructed to pay the amount due to such a person (naming the amount)" or, "that she be instructed to pay such a bill (naming the bill)."

Q.—What is the proper way to present a bill?

A.—The usual form is to draw it up as follows:

The W. C. T. U. of.....

To Mrs. .....Dr.

To services rendered (naming services).....$0.00

This bill should be presented to the treasurer. She submits it to the president or secretary or brings it up in the meeting for instruction.

May I urge you again, dear co-workers, to send me suggestions for the most successful methods you have employed in carrying on our work?

Yours in our do-everything activity,

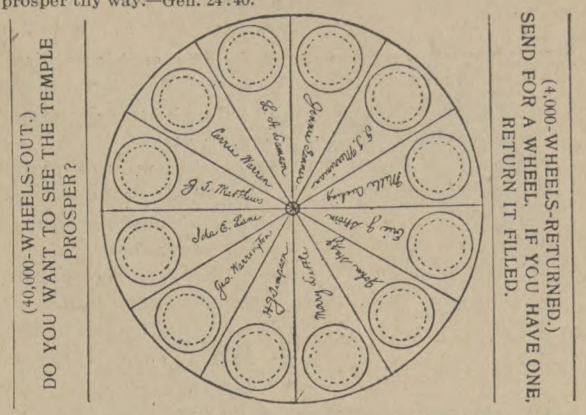
BY MATILDA B. CARSE.

PRAYER.—O Lord God, prosper my way which I go.—Gen. 24:42.

PROMISE.—The Lord will send his angel and prosper thy way.—Gen. 24:40.



A letter has just been received from Miss Frances E. Willard which shows she has been disappointed in the response the unions have made to her letter of appeal written just before she sailed for England, in which she asked that each of the seven thousand five hundred unions in this country would in some way dispose of one hundred Wheels. She did not ask that members of the union should alone fill these, but that they would get Sunday-school children and others interested, who would be glad to do it for the premium they would secure. Miss Willard says: "I do hope that the Wheels are taking hold well, your columns are full of cheer, but I do not see the thousands of Wheels called for that will at all meet our hopes." Will not such words as these from our great leader cause a pang of remorse to those who have been standing idly by and not so much as lifting a finger to help? We trust they may be the means of an arrest of thought in regard to their duty in this matter and cause them send for a Wheel at once and give it a turn.

Yesterday we received orders for seven hundred Wheels. We have now sent out forty thousand. This seems like a goodly number, but nothing in comparison with what it ought to be. The figures would amount to 750,000, if each union would send for the number Miss Willard requested. Of course, orders are coming in daily from unions, and will no doubt throughout the year, but our white-ribboners do not seem to see the urgency for expedition in this matter as we do. We must be patient, knowing that they are not pressed by a personal responsibility that often turns the hours of sleep into seasons of wrestling and prayer which wrings sighs from a heart burdened with responsibility, who at times longs for the last long sleep if the work the Master has given was only accomplished, and the House Beautiful paid for. If we could only get the Wheels returned filled that have been ordered, we would send out at once 500,000 additional, as we have the names and addresses of that number of persons, but it takes so much money to send out such a large number we must wait for returns from those already ordered. Will not those holding Wheels fill and return them at once?

The days of 1895 are slipping rapidly by. Half the year is gone and there is so much at stake. There stands Mr. Field's offer of $25,000, saying to every W. C. T. U. woman and L. T. L. boy and girl, "Each of you secure thirteen dimes for your great building, and if $275,000 is passed in to the Temple treasury by January 1, 1896, I will present your society with $25,000 additional." This offer has been published two months. One would think that every man, woman and child in the temperance ranks would at once send for a Wheel and get it filled in order to secure Mr. Field's gift, as it would only cost them a couple of hours' work. But our white-ribboners, as a class, do not seem to realize their great opportunity. It is with this undertaking so pregnant with good for the race—as it has been from the beginning of the world—but one neck feels the awful yoke which at times seems hard to be borne, especially when depressed by the apathy of those for whose benefit it has been undertaken.

Mr. W. Hale Ramsay, Montreal, Canada, has made a very generous offer, which shows most sincere interest in the cause of temperance and humanity. He offers to give a prize of $50 to the person who will fill the largest number of Temple Wheels by January 1, 1896. The Temple Trustees have decided to add two other prizes to the above, $25 to the person who fills the second largest number of Wheels by the first of January, and $10 to the person who fills the third largest number in the same time. All Wheels received from individuals after this date, May 23, will be counted. Beside the prizes offered above, the persons getting the first, second or third largest number of Wheels filled will get the regular premiums as well. Each month the names of the three persons who have filled the most Wheels will be announced in this column.

All orders for Temple Wheels and mite-boxes and everything pertaining to the Temple should be addressed to Mrs. Matilda B. Carse, The Temple, Chicago. Send two cent stamp for either the Temple Wheel or mite-box. Money orders and checks should be made out in the name of Mr. G. B. Shaw, treasurer, and sent to our financial secretary, Miss Sara G. Johnson, Room 1111, The Temple. Chicago.

OUR MEMORIAL DAY.

BY KATE LUNDEN.

THE dancing sunbeams kiss
earth's furrowed brow,
And balmy breezes dry each wintry tear.
The gentle dewdrops wash
her faded cheeks,
And bursting buds and blushing flowers hide
Her telltale wrinkles 'neath
the bloom of youth.
The mountain brooklets, freed from serfdom's chains,
Declare their independence as they go,
While from the depths of Nature's mighty breast
A long-drawn breath of freedom stirs the air.
And mountains, hills and valleys echo back
The opening strains of spring's memorial day.

The drums are beating. At their muffled call
The thinning ranks of war-scarred veterans march
'Neath tattered banners, proudly borne aloft.
With measured steps they march as when of yore
They measured time by bullets, not by hours.
Make room, ye pressing crowds! Clear ye the way
Sons of the brave! Place on the hoary heads
The dew-wet laurel, daughters of the free!
Salute this remnant of a mighty host,
Ye strangers, over whom the starry flag,
The flag for which they bled, protecting flies!
The empty sleeves and crutches tell their tales,
And snowy locks and stooping shoulders speak
Of untold suffering, when through reeking swamps
They ploughed their way, or when on shell-swept plains
The last salute is fired, the task is done;
And slowly, as some memories of the past
Reluctant leave their homes within our hearts,
The veterans leave their comrades 'mong the dead,
Thinking, perhaps, of some memorial day
When none shall answer if the roll is called,
When covered with the colors which he bore
The last defender of our Union sleeps.
That time is coming, but ere every star
Is torn from fair Columbia's gleaming shield
Shall never yet the nation which they saved
Forget to bring this offering to their graves.

. . . . . .

In silent graveyards, watched by stately palms,
Or guarded by the fir trees of the North,
Beneath the shadow of the village church,
Or where the din of crowded cities rolls
In roaring breakers o'er the hallowed ground,
An army sleeps. No polished marble tells
Of gallant deeds, no towering columns mark
These humble graves. Perchance some stone is carved
"In memory" of a faithful heart,
Or fragrant flowers tell of deathless love;
Perhaps some name we know so well is hung
Among the nation's galaxy of stars
Upon the shining temple walls of fame.
But of the tens of thousands naught is known
Save what the hillocks tell, that they have been.
O struggling womanhood! is this thy fate?
O mothers of the heroes we have crowned,
Shall thus ye sleep, oh, pioneers, who stood
Unflinching 'midst the ridicule and scorn,
Which fell like gall-dipped hailstones on your heads?
Are these our thanks? O hearts that loved and prayed
And hoped and toiled and broke in silence.
Grows on the hills your weary feet have trod
No flower destined for your lonely graves?
Come, sisters! go where the arbutus trails
Among the mosses, where the violets fringe
The shady path, or where the hilltops glow
With sunny, gold-haired children of the spring;
Go where the lilies bloom and roses blow
And claim earth's tribute for our dead to-day.
For motherhood, go bind a snow-white wreath
Of fragrant lilies; tie the pale-red rose
Among the blue-eyed violets for the love
That clung to ruined homes, though every hope
Lay crushed and bleeding 'neath the shattered walls.
And twine a garland of the meadow's gold
For those who came and went as sunbeams go;
Whose presence made the night of sorrow bright,
Whose touch could soften e'en the bed of pain.
Then, sisters, while the echo of the noontide prayers
Soars upward with the fragrance of the flowers,
O sisters, write upon each grassy mound
The silent message of our love—redeem
The nation's long-forgotten debt to-day.

. . . . . .

The lengthening shadows slowly eastward creep,
But ere they vanish in the dusk of e'en
Another loving task is ours

. . . . . .

In lanes where never yet a sunbeam found its way,
In hovels where the light would blush to peep,
In charnel houses where each breath is death,
The ground is strewn with withering human plants.
Pale, trampled buds, upon whose faded lips
No mother ever pressed a loving kiss;
Imprisoned souls, who beat with broken wings
Against the prison bars! shall we pass by
Your living graves when we have crowned the dead?
Still in the woodlands there are flowers left;
The hilltops yet are bright with streaming gold;
Ye bright-eyed maidens, help to bind the wreaths;
Twine in some sunshine from your happy homes,
Some tender mother's smile, some father's kiss.
Come where the azure sky is never seen,
Where childish hands, that never touched a flower,
Are stretched beseeching for each scattered leaf;
Where trembling lips suppress the cry of pain
To kiss the blossoms; where the sunken eyes
Grow big with joy to greet these unknown guests
From field and forest. Let a ray of hope
Gleam out from every bud; press on each blade
Some evidence that God still loves the world.

HEARTSEASE.

BY BELLE LOUISE PIERCE.

NELLIE MOORE was a flower mission girl, whose mission work extended from the first snowdrop to the last asters and chrysanthemums; and with a face as sweet as her flowers, she had brightened many cheerless homes, and lightened many cheerless hearts. But one morning she stood arranging and rearranging the flowers she held, with a troubled look which attracted her mother's attention.

"What is the matter, dear?" she asked. "Your bouquet is beautiful! is it for Grandma Clarke?"

"That's the trouble, mamma! that's my temptation," Nellie answered with a troubled laugh. "Giving flowers to dear, old Grandma Clarke is getting to be a rather selfish act of mercy, for I do so love to do it: but I have given her so many that it seems to me—oh, mamma, do you think I ought to give these to old Mrs. Shaw? do you suppose she would care for flowers?"

"Give them and see!" Mrs. Moore replied.

"But she is so very disagreeable looking that, really, I am half afraid of her. Her face is so brown and wrinkled, and her head and her hands are always shaking, and her voice is so high and queer and that shakes too. We girls glanced in through the open window one day, and when she saw us she pounded on the floor with her stick and screamed, 'Stop your staring, young ones, and get out!' and we did get out in a hurry. And Mattie says she is so cross to the woman she lives with, and finds fault with everything she does. And that woman is cross too, and doesn't seem to care whether she is pleased or not; how can such people care for flowers? and these pansies are so sweet, they ought to go to some one who will love their bright little faces."

"Those women are mother and daughter," said Mrs. Moore sadly.

"Oh, mamma! what an unlovely family."

"Wait, daughter, mix your judgment with more mercy. I think from what I have heard that there are many excuses for the unhappy tempers of these poor women. They are very poor; the daughter supports them both, by washing and scrubbing; and she must come home evenings so tired and lame that I dare say it makes her cross. Then the poor old mother has been sick and helpless a long time—it is disease that makes her shake—that makes her nervous, and as Mattie says, cross."

"Still, I think they would love each other," said Nellie, thoughtfully.

"I suppose they do, but their life has been so hard and the old love has been covered so long that they have almost forgotten that it is there. Perhaps God has a work for His flowers to do there; they may help them find the lost love."

When Nellie went to school that morning a beautiful bouquet for Mrs. Shaw lay on top of her dinner-basket.

All was quiet when she reached the house, and looking through the open window she saw Mrs. Shaw dozing in her chair. She laid the flowers on a table which stood beside the window and hurried away. Two days later she carried a fresh bouquet; but when she had tiptoed up to the window she started back half frightened, for in front of it, her stick between her knees. her keen black eyes looking straight into Nellie's blue ones, sat Mrs. Shaw.

"Well, come round to the door!" she called, in the shrill, tremulous voice Nellie had heard before. "We ain't got much but we hev got a door! Be you the gal that brought them posies?" she asked as Nellie entered.

"Yes," she answered, "and I've brought you more to-day."

"That was clever of you," the old woman said graciously. "I'd got to thinkin' young ones wern't good for nothing nowadays but to stare and laugh at a poor old body. I always liked posies and I had 'em too, when I was young and stout like Mary—that's my gal—but she'll never try to raise one. She never does nothing to please me; she just gives me the bare victuals and clothes, nothing to cheer a body."

"Perhaps she's too tired when she comes home," Nellie suggested timidly; "washing all day must be hard work."

"Well, mebby she is, mebby I'm too hard on her; but I get so tired sitting by myself all day, nothing to do but think how I'm fixed now and how I used to be when I was young. I had my white house and my posy-beds on each side of the walk to the gate. Four o'clocks, marigolds, petunias and pansies—them was my pets—and at the end of one bed was a bunch of ribbon grass, and at the other a bunch of rosemary."

"Where is it all now?" asked Nellie.

"Drunk up in the saloon 'round the corner," answered the poor woman shortly.

"Oh, I'm so sorry," said Nellie sympathetically. "Try to fancy that these flowers grew in those old beds. I must go now, it is nearly school time."

But Mrs. Shaw made no answer and seemed to have forgotten her presence as she sat looking away at the distant hills, her chin resting on her cane. A long time she sat motionless, then turning with a sigh she saw the flowers. How fresh and fragrant they were. There were pansies, too, and with trembling fingers she separated them and made them into a little bunch by themselves. Back thirty years they carried her thoughts to the flower beds beside the walk; and as she looked into their shining golden faces she seemed to see again the laughing faces of her own little ones as she had seen them in that far-away time among the flowers. Charley and Jennie had left her before their faces had lost their baby roundness. But Mamie—she started, as memory placed beside the tall, stooped woman Mary, with her weary face and faded eyes, the merry, dimpled Mamie of that little group.

"She lived and growed up before me," she sighed, "but she seems more lost to me than the others; mebby I've been too hard with her; that leetle posy gal seemed to think so."

"Darter," said a voice from a dusky corner as Mary entered that evening, "darter, come here," and as she obeyed wonderingly, the poor, palsy shaken arm drew her down to where she had not rested since babyhood, down to her mother's breast; and a voice trembling, but with no harshness in it, was murmuring love names her ears had long forgotten.

"My Mamie, my only baby left me," it sobbed, "your mother's been a hard woman to you these many years. My disappointments and my hard luck made me cross and bitter, and I forgot that they was as heavy on you as on me. But it won't be so no more, Mamie! Life won't never be so hard again, now that love's waked up! Thank God, it's His doings, through that child and her posy bunches!"

"Don't, ma, don't take on so!" whispered Mary, brokenly, "it's been heaps my fault. I might have done lots more to make you happy sitting here all day, and I never done it! But I will, you'll see! You shall have your flowers—real growing ones—and I'll ask folks for their old papers and read to you evenings. Oh, there are brighter days coming, ma, dear!"

And Mary was right; for through Nellie the interest of many others was awakened. Indeed, that first kind act was a seed which grew and blossomed—as richly as her own flowers—and yielded bountiful results. The old house was made more habitable, good books cheered their evenings, and pots of flowers brightened their window all winter.

Easier work too, was found for Mary; and in the spring they were moved into a tiny cottage with a green yard, and beds of flowers bordering the walk. And the old mother's table was seldom without its vase of pansies.

"Heartsease," Nellie once told her they were called.

"Heartsease, indeed!" she whispered, kissing their velvet petals, "and God's own heartsease He sent us through them, and you, my posy gal."

FLOWERS IN BOY ALLEY.

BY MABEL GIFFORD.

The electric car rattled by the corner of Southeast street and bobbed serenely along the broad level of East street, ignoring a certain excited maiden standing on this otherwise deserted corner and wildly waving a shopping-bag.

All in vain; the electric car was eyeless for the time being, and the despairing maiden, Dorell Bickford, by name, leaned against the unsympathetic brick wall nearest her and gazed dismally after the vanishing car.

"Whatever am I to do! Not another car for half an hour; if I miss the six o'clock I shall have to wait until the nine. Was ever anything so provoking?"

Maid Dorell shrugs her shoulders in disgust and frowns until her eyebrows meet. But she is not any happier for all this; on the contrary she grows gloomier every moment.

"Any trouble, miss?"

A burly policeman, shining with big, brass buttons, was smiling upon her very amiably. Grasping his "billy" in one big hand as if ready to do battle with any enemy the young lady might point out, he sent a sharp glance down both streets, took a deliberate look at the dark mouth of the alley near, then recalled his attention to the corner-piece, standing so stiff and still frowning.

"Lost your way?"

"Missed the car."

"Oh, there'll be another along pretty quick. Rather long, though, to wait," he added. He glanced up at the building belonging to the brick corner, as if speculating whether it could help the matter. Evidently no satisfactory suggestion was made, for Mr. Policeman remained silent, and pompously awaited the lady's acknowledgment of his considerate remark.

"I don't mind the waiting—that is, not much; but I shall lose my train."

"Which station?"

"The Northern."

"You can walk it in fifteen minutes, if you are lively." He gave another glance about the streets. "You'll get along all right, I guess."

He guessed! Was the place of such doubtful safety?

Dorell was escorted to the head of the alley, and given direction how to reach the station by a short cut. She looked hesitatingly after the officer as he left her to resume his beat and then timidly started down the uninviting perspective.

"I believe I'll try it," she half whispered to herself, pulled her veil closer, sent one lingering farewell after Mr. Policeman, and sped on tiptoe into the obscurity of Boy alley.

With quickened heart-beats she sent her glance from side to side, observing how dead the place looked. Also noting here and there a crouching figure against the side of the dismal buildings, that seemed to add to the general air of desolation.

She had walked some distance when suddenly a door creaked and a rush of children's voices burst upon the air.

"I heard it!"

"I saw it!"

"It's mine!"

"It's mine, I say."

Then followed a scrambling, and wrangling in shrill and hoarse voices.

Next came a shout of triumph from one of the scufflers, angry wails from the rest; another creak and shriek, a bang, and an instant's expressive silence in the alley.

"He's got it," was the sententious remark of one of the group.

"Grip always gets w'at he sets out fur," came sullenly from another.

"Grip's bigger'n me," piped a thin, feeble voice, "he's got the muscle."

"I've got a piece anyhow." This was a harsh treble, an unmistakable girl's voice. "It dropped when you's was tusslin'. Ain't it han'some?"

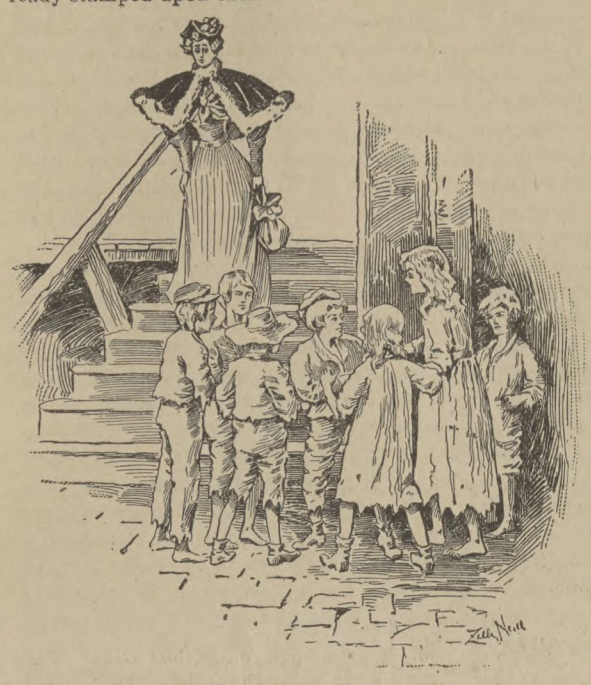
"Smashin'; what is it?"

At the first sound of the quarrel Dorell had nearly dropped to the pavement with fright, but finding the disputants were children she gathered a little courage though she still trembled, fearing violence, so fierce was their struggle. She sought the shelter of a doorway, asking herself if she would dare to interfere and wondering why some one did not come out and stop them. After the victor had vanished she became interested in the conversation and her curiosity was sharpened to know what this greatly coveted prize could be.

She forgot her loathing of the place and its inhabitants, forgot her recent vexation and her anxiety to catch the train. Descending the steps she followed the sound of the voices and came abruptly upon a group of children huddled like a small flock of speckled and spotted sheep on some steps that led to a basement door below the sidewalk.

Dorell stepped back quickly; but she need not have feared, they were too absorbed to notice her.

In the center of the group stood a pinched, blue-looking girl, bareheaded, barefooted and clad in tatters. There was a another smaller girl and several boys, all ragged and unkempt, the marks of poverty and vice already stamped upon their faces.



There was an honest interest in each face just now as they pressed closely about the taller girl to admire some object held in her red, claw-like hand.

A FLOWER PUZZLE.

I have some flowers in my hands,
I'm holding them way out of sight,
As I think now of each, you guess
And tell what's in my nosegay bright.

(1) What the sun did this morning,
(At this I know you loudly smile!)
(2) In what a secret should be kept
(That, too, you'll not miss by a mile.)

(3) This came o'er the sky at dawn,
(4) This is named for the king of day,
(5) And this wonderful white flower
You tossed last winter in your play.

(6) Where Uncle Sam makes golden coin,
This dainty sprig of green suggests;
(7) And at the hour school is out
This flower puts forth its varied crests.

(8) Not a real stone (type of Erin),
(9) And a bird all dragged and torn,
(10) A most wise man (you're doing nobly)
(11) On the coat of single men forlorn.

(12) Covering for Reynard's hand
(13) Of precious metal a full stick,
(14) What naughty Rob once called his father
(15) Herds of sheep (you've guessed that quick!)

My nosegay now complete you see
And it is yours on one condition:
If with ribbon white and Scripture text
You'll present it to the flower mission!

"Establish L. T. L's, and keep on with the work;
Go on with your crusade, and never stop to shirk;
You will conquer some fine day,
King Alcohol must surely fall."

Dear Boys and Girls:—Are you preparing to help white-ribbon mothers and sisters on flower mission day? When is it? you ask. And I see a good many bright, eager faces ready to give the answer—June 9. Yes, June 9, the birthday of a saintly invalid lady who lay on a bed of suffering thirty years, is the day set apart for visiting jails and charitable institutions and all the sick ones, rich and poor, to carry to them the sunny cheer of the bright flowers and a greeting from God's own word.

Jennie Casseday, for that is the name of the patient sick lady who was the means of establishing the flower mission work among the white-ribboners, did not live in vain. If her life, so shut in, was such a blessing to many others how much more should yours, with the power to go out in the world and among many people, be made a means of help to those you meet.

So gather the flowers, Saturday, June 8, help tie on the Scripture cards and white ribbon, and carry them Sunday, in company with others, or if there is no one else to go, take them yourself to some one who will love God and you better for your thoughtfulness and love toward them. Then you will be "really and truly" loving your neighbor as yourself.

Next week we shall have the prize essay on What I Have Learned About the Great Petition, in which you will all be very much interested. Look out for it. Some of the letters sent with the essays are in our column this week. How I wish every one might have had the prize. But remember the old proverb, "Try again," dear competitors, for I have a summer prize offer to make next week. Who will enter?

Affectionately,

Aunt Jane

NEPHEWS AND NIECES.

I am a girl twelve years old, and I will send you the essay I have written about "What I Have Learned About the World's Petition." I am an honorary member of the W. C. T. U., and at the last election of officers one of the ladies nominated me superintendent of flower mission work. Yours truly,

Milton, Wis. Helen Seaver.

I really believe this is the youngest superintendent of flower mission work in the United States. Salute her, boys and girls.

---

I am a girl ten years old. I have written an essay on the "World's Petition" for the Cozy Corner. I like to read the pieces written by the other nephews and nieces.

Camden, O. Clara E. Ramsey.

Your essay was very good, Clara. Are you not glad to have thus fixed in your mind the facts about the Great Petition?

---

I am nine years old, and one of the "charter members." The Cozy Corner has been very helpful to me, for we came from Michigan three years ago, where I was a member of the L. T. L. There is no temperance society here, and mamma is the only one who wears the white ribbon. Mamma and I always observe flower mission day. Mamma writes texts for me, and I take them with flowers to sick people. I have no brothers or sisters.

Olivet, S. C. Ethel L. Knox.

Here is a hint for others. It only takes two to make a flower mission! Now a ringing Cozy Corner salute to the charter member from the South!

---

I have tried to write an essay, but do not expect to get the "Authors," as this is the first essay I ever tried to to write. But nobody would like them better than I, as I have not any games like that. Brother, mamma and I are temperance. I was thinking yesterday as I was blowing bubbles, how nice it would be if everybody used their pipe as I did mine—upside down!

Zimmer, Neb. Edna Austin.

The Cornerers heartily applaud that last sentence, dear niece. Do not be discouraged because your essay did not win, but make another effort. Next week—but I mustn't tell about that yet!

---

Please may I come in and be one of your nephews? I am thirteen years old. My sister and I belong to Co. K, second division Michigan L. T. L. My mother takes The Union Signal. She is also county, as well as district superintendent of juvenile work, and father county chairman of the Prohibition party.

West Toledo, O. Eddie Rawson.

P. S.—Countersign: I mean to do all I can for temperance.

We all say, Amen, to that postscript.

THE BUSINESS OUTLOOK.

GLEANINGS FROM STATE PAPERS.

Under the heading of "Five Hints to the Wise" in the W. C. T. U. Messenger, of Colorado, we notice the third suggestion of the outlined plan for intelligent, coöperative department work: "Advertise it. Plan for it. Pray for it." This is what we ask you to do for THE UNION SIGNAL.

From The Union Worker, Nebraska's state organ: "We want to show to the world in all our word and works an overwhelming desire to be helpful to all creation, and already we must study to be wise, for our organization has attained that importance that we are closely scrutinized and criticised."

The same paper reports a union of which every member takes The Union Worker and THE UNION SIGNAL, this, too, in times of suffering from the effects of drought.

"THE UNION SIGNAL Gem Club was held Monday, April 15."—Pennsylvania W. C. T. U. Bulletin.

Just what the "Gem Club" is we are not informed, but it is sufficient for us that it bears the name of THE UNION SIGNAL, and we surmise its members, each and every one, take THE UNION SIGNAL, pay for it promptly, consider the entire paper a "gem," but at these special gatherings search for the "brilliants" in the last issue. The same paper has an earnest appeal for The Young Crusader, and we conclude our interests are well taken care of in Pennsylvania.

The May issue of the Illinois Watch Tower is a "Young Woman's Number," and to its many attractions is added the sweet face of Miss Mary Mahon, secretary of the Illinois Y. W. C. T. U. The appeal for new subscribers is opportune, and when you send in your name, dear Y's, please remember also your own official organ, Young Women, and send in $1, to cover the cost of both.

Our Message, official organ of Massachusetts W. C. T. U., has an inspiring column by its editor, Mrs. Esther T. Housh, upon "Our Literature Department." After considering the objects and necessities of temperance literature, Mrs. Housh gives clear, terse instructions for judicious selection and wise distribution of the same, believing that "a little literature wisely selected, and as wisely distributed, may accomplish far more than much not wisely selected." With this end in view she suggests that each union keep at hand the W. T. P. A. Catalogue, study THE UNION SIGNAL for new helps, and record upon a blank book, devoted to this special object, the various ways of distribution. From beginning to end the keynote is system, system, which is vital to success.

Side by side with the file of THE UNION SIGNAL on our office table is a file of the state papers. We watch for their coming, we rejoice in their coöperation, and from their tone we judge of the good our literature is accomplishing in each section of the country covered by the great network of department organization of the National W. C. T. U.

LIVES LAID DOWN.

Plucking a flower and gazing into the purity of its face, we are silent and wondering in the presence of its mystery. The browsing cattle, the scurrying insect and the gliding snake are heedless of the charm of the fair daisy and the shy violet, save as it comes to them in common with grass and herb, for food or shelter. Yet man smiles upon these silent field beauties as if they held in themselves a response to his involuntary greeting. Surely we may say that God set the flowers in the deep forests, on hill-tops, in green valleys, by the dusty roadside and even cropping out between the paving stones of the great cities, as continued reminders of His love, oft repeated messages from His tender heart. The herb for food, the flower for a Father's fondness.

We do not stop to analyze the feeling that prompts us to place flowers in the hands of the sick and the sorrowful, but is not the prompting on this wise,—Be comforted; God has remembered the world, He remembers you. Thus, even the agnostic becomes an unwitting herald of divine love when he lays a lily beside the pillow of his dying child.

There is no more soul-reaching "mission" to which white-ribboners have laid their hands than the flower mission. Men and women need money and shelter, food and clothes and education, but unless over all these brood the strong, warm, white wings of love, in spite of all earthly provision the world would soon arrive at that condition termed lost. Therefore, we fill our hands with these living expressions of love—God's love to us and our love to man—and say to all who mourn, "take comfort."

Why is it that a proffered rose will awaken a smile, call forth a tear and a tremulous word of thanks, when a coin might in all probability develop but a selfish semblance of gratitude? Is it not that with the gift of the rose must necessarily go a little bit of the giver's heart, since he can hardly let the living thing leave his hands without the mute confession, "I sympathize with you—your pain is in a measure mine." Else why the gift? It is neither food nor medicine. It cannot be kept beyond its little span of life. The donor cannot say, "I made it and give it you." It is a creation of God's,—it is a life. Such a gift is a confession of faith—faith in humanity, faith in humanity's heart not yet grown stony and indifferent. But the coin—! A human being dug for it, coined it, earned it, kept it, gives it and limits his gift. It carries an impress of self more or less in all its bearings. Yet the coin is a necessity. As has been said, the rose is neither food nor medicine, the coin represents both. Thus we find the flower missioner going out with her flowers in one hand, her more material help in the other, and the two make a perfect gift.

It has been stated that gifts tend to pauperize. Flower-gifts never do. Is it not because they are so nearly related to Him who gave His life a ransom for many? The culled pansy, whose little life is shortened by the culling, gives its all to the fevered hand closing about its cool petals. Other gifts, unless they too represent a death, that is, a laying down of a measure of self, a sacrifice, must pauperize. "Give till you feel!" urges the pastor. Why? Because true giving must be life-giving. What you do not feel is not a part of you, hence, fails of its purpose.

Here, then, is the secret of the success of our flower mission. Here are the flowers culled from our choicest plants, or bought with money we saved through self-denial. Here, too, are jellies prepared in weary hours, clothing taken from our own bodies that shivering limbs may be protected, an hour spent in reading God's word to a fretful invalid, soothing a crying baby, when there were pleasant woods to stroll in or self-appointed tasks to be done. And the result? Grateful smiles, tears of repentance, words of appreciation and a new endeavor to better life.

"Come unto me all ye that labor and are heavy laden" means all it can mean on earth or in heaven when said by the One who had not where to lay His head that we might have rest. Said by one who lives in a palace of silken couches, who never has felt his giving, it is akin to insult, and the poverty stricken one turns away, sharing more gladly the newspaper spread for him on a bare floor by a companion in distress.

So gracious is God to us that His law is that every kind act shall rebound upon the actor with multiplied benefit. Have you not found it true that the bright-faced, big-hearted, tender-handed flower missioner is daily growing more beautiful, bigger hearted and more gracious of touch? And how gifts shower upon her! Not often gifts of money or land, but those priceless tributes, smiles and tears and the life-gratitude of hearts to whose wounds she has carried Christ's own balm. "Every one that hath forsaken houses, or brethren, or sisters, or father, or mother, or wife, or children, or lands, for my name's sake, shall receive an hundred fold, and shall inherit everlasting life."

Were there no other department in our W. C. T. U. plan how blessed the world would be through this one. What texts for sermons these flowers furnish us! How we may witness for Him who styles Himself the Rose of Sharon and the Lily of the Valley. How we may point impure lives to His purity! How we may comfort doubting ones —"If God so clothe the grass of the field . . . shall he not much more clothe you, O ye of little faith!" How we may teach the resurrection story to those who sit under the shadow of bereavement, pointing them to the lily that grew from the bulb in its dying. When we give bread to the hungry or a cup of cold water to the parched how blessedly may we not teach of Him who is the Bread and Water of life, and with the bunch of luscious grapes whisper, "I am the true vine, ye are the branches."

It is lives laid down that shall save the world. As the flower life sacrificed to cheer a sick room elevates the thought of the sufferer and blesses the donor, the human life freely given sees souls redeemed and is itself crowned by a redemption that makes it like unto the Master's own, until it shall at last "shine forth as the sun in the kingdom of their Father."

THE MESSAGE OF THE FLOWERS.

That flowers have a message for all is observed in the fact that every one, no matter what the condition in life, no matter what the moral or material environments, is responsive in more or less degree to their subtle influence. This response may be as unconscious as the appeal of the winsome messengers themselves, as voiceless as their own silent eloquence, but it is none the less true that it is universal and potent, sometimes leaping to the heart and to the conscious mind with a suddenness and force which dims the eye and opens the floodgates of the soul.

Watch the little toddling child as it reaches out its tiny hands for the bright flowers of lawn or wayside, and runs with baby delight to throw the plucked and stemless blossoms in its mother's lap—what is the joy-freighted message they bring to the child-soul? And so on through life. To the school boy and girl, to the care-free youth and maiden, to the man and woman burdened with the thought of the morrow, and to the aged whose feet are upon the threshold of another world, the flowers bring a message that none can refuse to hear, a message that warms the heart and expands the soul; they exert over all hearts a fascination peculiarly their own.

What a pathetic sight, and withal a suggestive, is the little street gamins standing with longing eyes and itching fingers in front of the flower stands on our city streets! Who shall say that the beneficent influence of the beautiful messengers has not a potency even there?

Rich and poor, old and young, saint and sinner, all are touched at some point by the sweet breathings of the spirit of the flowers—a spirit which because it breathes universal love and good-will is universally listened to. We may not be able to analyze the law which makes the human heart quick to open to these subtle influences, but the veriest child feels its operation. Beauty of form, of color, of fragrance—these please the senses, while that higher and invisible something which lies back of these, and which brings forth their beautiful harmony, touches a chord in the human soul and causes it to vibrate in unison, if but for a moment, with its own beautiful spirit.

"What do the flowers say to you?" was asked of a girl who had been "knocked down" by one who should have been her protector, and who was being tenderly cared for by a white-ribboner in a home where flowers bloomed in rich profusion.

"They make me feel sorry," was the reply, "sorry for myself and sorry for him; they seem to take the terrible bitterness out of my heart." And, indeed, that, we think, is the special mission of flowers—to take the bitterness out of the heart, and thus "prepare the way of the Lord."

All things beautiful have their mission. It is a cheering sign of progress that the world's thinkers to-day are coming to recognize the power of the beautiful in the development of the higher faculties; that they are beginning to see that the truly beautiful is the truly useful; that beauty in music, in art, in literature, in "nature," is of the utmost utility in the uplift of humanity on all moral and sociological lines.

We often speak of a man or woman "with a mission" as if to have a mission necessarily distinguished that person from the ordinary run of mortals, when the fact is everybody and everything has a mission. Every atom in the universe, every offspring of the creative Word—without whom "was not anything made that was made"—whether organic or inorganic, protoplasm or man, has a mission; and that mission is, in its highest and broadest sense, to help carry forward the great plan of creation, the great purpose of being—to reveal the Creator. The question with us then is not, have we a mission, but what particular part have we to play in the great all-inclusive mission?

Of one thing we may be sure—that it is the duty of each one of us to recognize and coöperate with whatever influences for the general uplift we may see around us.

Flowers, speaking as they do the universal language of the soul, are one of the most powerful and wide-reaching, of these influences. It is fitting, therefore, that we should send them with their wordless messages of love and sympathy, "heralds of good-will" to all who need the helping hand, thus perchance preparing the heart for the reception of the spoken message, the printed word, for Christ Himself.

Flowers have always had a mission and people have always vaguely recognized that they were among the most persuasive preachers of the gospel ever commissioned, but it was left for the W. C. T. U. to give this beautiful mission organized form. The idea was born, as all W. C. T. U. women know, of the busy brain and loving, sympathetic heart of our "white ribbon saint," Jennie Casseday, herself a shut-in for more than thirty years, and it has grown and developed under the direction of "organized mother-love" until it has become a mission whose field is the world, and the record of whose work only eternity can reveal.

THE GENESIS OF THE FLOWER MISSION.

As every year finds new readers to THE UNION SIGNAL and fresh recruits to the W. C. T. U., we feel it incumbent to give in our annual flower mission number a brief outline of the indispensable flower mission.

This department, as well as many others, had its origin in a modest local way, and its practicability was well demonstrated before implanted in our National curriculum. It is not as old as many of our departments, but it has long been one of the most widely observed and deservedly popular. It has had but three superintendents—Miss Jennie Casseday, the precious invalid, whose "sick-bed letters" have wafted breezes divine into prisons and hospitals and the homes of the poor and prosperous; Miss Gertrude Ferguson, who was so long Miss Casseday's faithful associate, and who for the two years succeeding her death, so acceptably filled the position, and Miss Alice L. Sudduth of Colton, Cal., the present superintendent, who is thoroughly imbued with the spirit of the departed chief, and is happy to carry on the work in its original scope.

We are so anxious to make Miss Casseday's life and plans immortal in our reader's memories, that we give on another page a sketch of the dear invalid, and cannot do better in this place than to reproduce in her own simple and cultured language the history of the beginnings of the flower mission, introducing it with her own excellent definition, as follows: "It is a mission whose aim is to lead burdened souls up to Christ, and to teach them to cast their cares on Him who careth for them; whose work is to cheer and comfort all who need a friend and to help the poor to help themselves, and whose text is, 'Bear ye one another's burdens and so fulfill the law of Christ.'"

When asked how the ministry of flowers came to her, Miss Casseday replied as follows, on February 12, 1889, just four years before her death:

"In 1877 I read in the New York Observer of a flower missioner in that city who went about amongst the destitute and the sick carrying flowers and texts of Scripture. The idea seemed to take quick and deep possession of my very heart, and the longing grew more and more intense to see such a mission established in my own city. I saw with my 'inside eye' its blessed opportunities, for I knew by experience the comfort and joy, the all outdoorness, to be found in these silent messengers of God's love.

"I had been an invalid then ten years, and it never occurred to me that I could do more than to tell it to others. But my heavenly Father had His plans all laid in His own blessed way, and was preparing me, unconsciously to myself, to carry them on as He willed. The following winter I had a serious illness, from which it was thought I could not recover. I was led to see that it was to be given to me to organize this work here. I have long since been taught of God to know that the very weakness which I believed would prevent is my greatest strength. And He said unto me, 'My grace is sufficient for thee; for my strength is made perfect in weakness, most gladly, therefore, will I rather glory in my infirmities, that the power of Christ may rest upon me.'

"It was four years after the Louisville flower mission was organized that Miss Frances E. Willard was in Louisville attending a National Convention of the W. C. T. U. in 1882. She was my sister's guest, and during the latter part of her visit—the very last morning—she asked me to tell her of my work. With that quick perception and ready insight for which she is so remarkable, she saw how it might be grafted on to temperance work and bring forth rich harvests of good. She rose to her feet exclaiming, 'I have an inspiration—it is to establish a flower mission department of the W. C. T. U., and put you at its head as National superintendent.' The very idea appalled me, and I felt that it was impossible for me either to take on more work, or to think of undertaking from my little corner a National flower mission. But it was another unfolding of 'God's thoughts,' and in a few months He opened my eyes to see His will for me. It has grown to large proportions, as does all work that has God's call behind it; and this week my secretary writes me that we have sent abroad through the land eighty-nine thousand text cards from January, 1888, to January, 1889."

Amid many bodily ills that would have paralyzed a weaker faith and less devoted heart, Miss Casseday continued her labors, directing state and local superintendents from her "prison house of pain" and victory, until she had enshrined herself in every white-ribboner's heart. Let us keep her white name ever at memory's shrine and emulate her beautiful spirit of loving deed, broad charity and ceaseless industry, till we carry not only her beloved mission, but every branch of our work to the highest possible development.

GOD'S TRUTH WINS.

There are two popular fallacies concerning the temperance movement upon which its friends can afford to smile contemptuously. The first is that it can be kept out of politics. Men may hush us, and press for a little longer delay, but it is absurd on the face of it to pretend that an issue so important, in fact, the only political issue having moral quality in it, as well as direct and positive economic bearings of the gravest kind, can long be withheld from arbitrament at the polls. Of course it will go into politics. Where else can it go? Liquor or no liquor; morals or no morals; economy or waste. Sanity, soberness, and God-fearing thrift; over against drunkenness, impaired mental powers, and the wasteful shiftlessness of a drunkard's home. These are alternatives which the American people must meet at the polls, for themselves and for their dependents.

The drink appetite stands upon a wholly different plane from other evil potencies of our depraved moral nature. In a few cases it depends upon a diseased aptitude of heredity; but in most it is an appetite which but for temptation, deliberately thrust upon the attention, by persons interested in the traffic, would never be awakened in the healthy young man. It is for politics to decide whether any man or any set of men shall be allowed to debauch the community in this way. Besides, whisky is already in politics, and it is this, principally, that hinders the temperance movement from having a square stand up count, in a good many states where the whisky powers have too much reason to fear that a fair count would leave them in a hopeless defeat. Besides, there are vast money interests involved in getting a temperance count at the polls. What matter if whisky means a waste of about twelve hundred millions of dollars a year—money improperly diverted from its legitimate office of ministering to the physical and mental well-being of the bread-winners, and those dependent upon them, and turned, a mighty river, into the pockets of saloon-keepers, distillers, brewers, gamblers, and the morally defective classes generally! Temperance has more at stake. All this money, together with the earning power and moral growth of a half million of men, is to be gained for American humanity and social progress by stopping this drink waste. The same economical arguments which are so stupendous when ranged against alcohol, are even more full of promise when turned in the direction of the right. In all this saving there would be a vast gain in additional saving power, greater mental power, and a social progress accelerated by turning into its current all this mental force now wasted in drunkenness and in supplying material therefor. In fact, there is not an economist living who would undertake to measure the gain for humanity which would result from a single generation spent in temperate, God-fearing industry, study and benevolent effort for the general good. Multiply the churches, missions, philanthropies and labor-saving inventions by hundreds, and you would still fall short of what might just as well be. God has done His part; it is for us to do ours.

The other fallacy is that of supposing that the temperance cause will "play out" after awhile. If the liquorites are waiting for the storm to blow over, they are reckoning without their host. God's movements do not proceed in this way. When the truth starts in to win, it goes straight on to the end. Workmen may fall, but the cause goes on. There is not a case on record where a moral or social truth once discovered has been allowed to fail. It always wins. Sometimes it takes one or two generations, but truth is eternal, and when once it is seen it can never again be hid. Temperance is truth in physical and social science. Thousands know it in their hearts who do not say so publicly. There is an under current for temperance which even its friends only half realize. Men may say, for this year and for next or the year after, that although these things against alcohol are true, it is not necessary to go against the party this time; nevertheless there is bound to come a time when the truth stands up against the everlasting horizon of right so mightily that it cannot be ignored. Then, God knows them that are His, and the ballot box tells the story. Temperance has come to stay, and its voice is to be heard at the polls.

These two conclusions are in the very nature of the "thing-in-itself," as Kant called it. We believe in God and in His righteousness. Here the women stand.

O loving, soul-fresh faces!
Moss of deserted places;
O voices of the chosen!
Through deadliest cold unfrozen;
O lives with beauty brimming!
Glad in the heavens, near hymning.
Ye know the hidden glory;
Who else may tell that story?

Grow, sing and bloom undaunted!
A world so shadow-haunted
Needs all your bursting splendor,
Soft lights, and murmurs tender.
The human want is pressing,
O'ershadow it with blessing!
Your triumph sure believing,
Till hearts shall hush their grieving.

An important question for flower missioners to consider in selecting flowers for mission uses is that of durability. Some flowers most beautiful, are, on account of their fragility, utterly useless for the flower mission. Lilies and tulips must be picked when closed to be of value, and all flowers should be gathered before their prime to retain their freshness and fragrance. Pinks, pansies, geraniums, verbenas, asters, daisies, mignonette, sweet-peas, lily of the valley, phlox, candy tuft, larkspur, head a long list of blooms which are particularly desirable for the purposes of the flower mission.

"Something light, something bright, and something to smell sweet!" This was saintly Jennie Casseday's thought for the flower mission bouquet. The sweetness often counts for more than the brilliance, however, and many a modest flower, "born to blush unseen" sheds its fragrance into the saddened lives of the sin-sick and shut-in.

Mrs. E. B. Ingalls, of our National anti-narcotic department, writing in the St. Louis Advocate recently quotes Rudyard Kipling's verse:

"A million surplus Maggies are willing to bear the yoke,
And a woman is only a woman, but a good cigar is a smoke.
Light me another Cuba; I hold to my first sworn vows,
If Maggie will have no rival, I'll have no Maggie for spouse."

And then adds: "My friend, Mrs. Oberholtzer, of Pennsylvania, answered this, and as the poem has never been published, I quote from it:

"'A million surplus Maggies; where will you find them, pray,
That for yoke of smoke are aching at this enlightened day?
The Maggies to-day are Maggies who are not bought and sold
For a few pounds of tobacco, or a pot of paltry gold.
Unto your clouded vision things are not what they seem,
The human heart is better and fairer than your dream.'"

"The 'new woman,'" says Miss Anthony, "made her appearance forty-five years ago, when Antoinette Brown entered Oberlin College." On November 12, in New York City, there will be celebrated the eightieth anniversary of another new woman—Elizabeth Cady Stanton. The anniversary will be made the occasion for a grand gathering of women who were the first to enter those fields of intellectual and business endeavor which half a century ago were occupied solely by men. At that time no trades, no institutions of higher learning were open to women. A woman who was driven to self-support could do a little sewing, could enter domestic service or perhaps teach in a primary school. From not being able to earn a livelihood as she chose, from not being able to reap the results of her labor after she married, from not being able to control her property after she married, from, in brief, a position of civic nullity she has advanced to her present position. Forty thousand women have been graduated from American colleges, every calling has its followers among women, and they are to-day as well educated as men, if not better.

THE BEAUTY OF PATIENCE.

BY HESTER M. POOLE.

By patience is not meant that inaptitude of feeling, that stoical temperament that takes things as they come and never frets, because its nature is impassive. Patience is a diviner quality than that. It is the inspiration of faith outworking from the depths of the spirit. It is a certainty that God's way of dealing with life is the best way, and it acquiesces in that order.

In the beginning, patience is a matter of temperament; in the end it is the effect of culture. And this culture is something different from merely intellectual culture. One may be unable to write her name and yet have a cultured and chastened spirit. For, again, we must realize that patience is conformity of the individual with the Divine order, a loving, trustful, serene faith that "He doeth all things well." Such a faith, inwrought into the very fabric of one's soul, is stronger than any other feeling that a human being can cherish. It is based on substantial laws, it is calm amidst the shock of change and disaster.

There is one tranquillity that results from a want of feeling, and another that is sullen and implacable stoicism. Neither of these is patience. The one indicates a selfish and unfeeling nature.

"The shallows murmur, while the depths are dumb."

The fretful woman who harries and scolds her household for the least infraction of her rules may be a most excellent person, a good wife and mother, and fulfill all her duties with religious zeal, yet is she most uncomfortable to live with. In comparison with her who is "mistress of herself though China fall," how unlovable she appears! A want of self-control, a giving way to passion, like,

"The little speck within the garnered fruit
That, rotting inward, slowly moulders all," is one of the saddest habits to which a person is subject. By and by the temper is ruined. A frown always wrinkles the brow, and children and dependents steal away from the irate presence, and concealment upon their part seems a virtue.

The tendency of those in the immediate neighborhood of the impatient person is to avert outbursts of temper, to cover up and prevaricate. What influence must this course have upon young, impressible minds?

"It is a word and a blow, and often the blow comes first," said a young girl who ran away from a good home to seek service, in explaining why she left. "Neither father nor mother have any patience with the children. I am so tired of being scolded that I would rather live in a prison with a kind jailer than stay at home."

Another young woman, recently in New York city, poisoned herself because she had been scolded by her mother. Let us imagine, if we can, the condition of both the actors of the sad drama. On neither side was there consideration, thoughtfulness or patience. A cultured spirit in the poor, distressed mother would have caused her to lovingly deal with a waywardness which ought to have received attention from the first year of the girl's life. In such a case we may not judge, but on general principles we must believe that reason, tact, affection and firmness on the part of a parent would have averted such a catastrophe. Therefore I designate patience as one of the greater, instead of one of the minor virtues.

It is closely akin to love, the divinest of all qualities. Look at the angelic forbearance and assiduity of a mother's love for her ailing babe! Night after night she bends over its couch or pillows it in her arms, counting not her loss of strength, because of her affection. Why can we not be equally patient with the shortcomings of all those who are near and dear to us?

The two wings of patience may, then, be designated as faith (faith includes love) and self-control. Where these exist, there is the basis for family and social order, growth and happiness.

That great heathen philosopher, Marcus Aurelius, whose heathenism often breathes the deepest religious spirit, wrote thus:

"Begin the morning by saying to thyself that I shall meet with the busybody, the ungrateful, the arrogant, deceitful, envious, unsociable. All these things happen to them by reason of their ignorance of what is good and evil; but I have seen the nature of the good that it is beautiful and of the bad that it is ugly. I know that he who does wrong is my kinsman by nature; not only is he of the same blood or state, but that he shares in the same intelligence and in the same portion of divinity."

NEBRASKA.

LIGHT AFTER DARKNESS.

There are many thankful hearts in Nebraska just now, when our state is all green and smiling under the bountiful rains we are still receiving. As we rode over the many miles of perfectly level prairie between Lincoln and Hastings on our way to the executive meeting in the latter city; when we saw grass, grain and trees as green and bright as they had before been brown and bare, we thought "surely God is good to us and Nebraska is a paradise."

The attendance at executive was smaller than usual, but all the general officers, seven district presidents and ten superintendents were present.

Resignations were received from superintendents Unie L. Moore, of scientific temperance instruction, and Mrs. Levy, of purity in literature and art, as they are both removing from the state. Their places were filled by Mrs. D. D. Nickell, of Beatrice, and Mrs. Julia M. Klinck, of Minden. Other important places are made vacant. The department of health and heredity has lost its leader, Mrs. J. H. Battles, of Auburn, who was called to her reward quite suddenly last month. Mrs. Eloise B. Pease, president of the eighth district, has removed from the state. She was a valuable member of the executive committee—one we regret to lose.

The departments of unfermented wine and peace and arbitration were taken up, Mrs. Dr. Reynolds, of York, being made superintendent of the former, and Mrs. Day, of Greeley, of the latter.

The report of the Union Worker showed all expenses paid to April 1, and a good balance in hand. During the meeting a telegram was received announcing that the paper had been admitted as second class matter by the postal authorities. This has been a matter of very serious consideration to the officers for the past six months and threatened the success of our paper. But "line upon line," letter upon letter, and as persistent an importuning of the third assistant postmaster-general, as ever the unjust judge of Scripture received, has accomplished this result and guaranteed the life of the Worker. Many thanks are due Hon. E. J. Haines, our representative in Washington, for his prompt and efficient service in our behalf.

Mrs. S. M. Walker, president of the state, Mrs. A. M. Bunting, editor of Union Worker, and Mrs. A. F. Newman, superintendent of jail and prison work, were elected delegates to the World's Convention in London, and all expect to go.

Bethany Home, controlled by the Hastings union, was indorsed. Beatrice was chosen as place of meeting of next convention, in September.

The organizers' fund, which had so small a beginning, was loaned to Kearney county for organizing purposes. Additions were made to the fund, and it is hoped other counties may be set to work soon.

Mrs. Nellie M. Richardson gave a very interesting account of her work as superintendent of legislation in the legislature the past winter. I presume you know that we are all rejoicing over the passage of the bill raising the age of protection to eighteen years. In addition to the lists of names secured on the petitions sent out by Mrs. G. W. Clark, the superintendent of purity, who did the preliminary work for the bill, two thousand names were secured from the different universities about Lincoln, favoring the bill. The list included teachers and professors, and was headed by Chancellor Crook, of Wesleyan University. The measure was indorsed by the Woman's Club. At the request of Mrs. Richardson all the best women—the representatives of the wealth and culture of the city—were present when the discussion came up in the house, with the result that the subject was treated with a delicacy never before observed in the Nebraska legislature, the vote standing ninety-seven in favor to three against.

In the senate it was more laughed at—declared to be weak and sentimental, and to judge by the arguments offered against it no man would be safe in Nebraska if the measure was carried. But the vote showed only five against.

The cigarette bill passed by eighty-eight in the House, but was limited to twenty-one years in the Senate, which practically destroys its usefulness.

The evening sessions of the executive meeting were very good. Mrs. Happersett gave an account of relief work in her district; Mrs. Klinck had a fine address on the work of the W. C. T. U., and Miss Harn a paper on equal suffrage that was highly appreciated especially by the gentlemen present. We had fine singing and the hearty coöperation of the ministers of the city. A very pleasant feature of the occasion was a tea served in the church to which the pastors and their wives were invited.

Several new unions are reported recently and the old ones prospering. Omaha is active in many ways. One of their recent undertakings is the Noon Day Rest at 513 South Twelfth street, for the benefit of girls and women who work in the large wholesale houses. This is a place where they may take their own lunch and eat it, buying warm drinks if desired at a small charge, while books, papers, a piano and writing-desk give the comforts and brightness of a home to the noon hour. The matron, Mrs. Houser, is a refined, Christian woman. The work is carried on by the W. C. T. U. and the Y. W. C. A., the latter having charge of the Rest at the noon hours, while the former, with the Y's, are looking after the gospel, mothers' and children's meetings held in connection.

The W. C. T. U. coffee house is another enterprise of this union. A prominent citizen gave them the use of a building for one year if they would fix it up. Solicitation among business men brought them lumber, glass, paint, etc.; the ladies furnished dishes and table accessories, and Miss Hester Miller, railroad evangelist, was installed manager. Provisions for the first dinner were donated, the meat being given by the South Omaha packing houses. The pretty gray and green cottage is situated at the northeast corner of Eleventh and Cass streets, very convenient for employés of the Union Pacific shops, in whose interests it was started, though all are welcomed.

The union have contracted for fifteen automatic drinking fountains for which, with the exclusive right to the territory of Douglas county and Council Bluffs, they pay one thousand dollars. The fountains are to be placed in the busiest thoroughfares of the city and will probably furnish cherry phosphate. It is expected they will pay for themselves during the summer.

The U. S. Government Tests Show the Absolute Superiority of Royal Baking Powder.

ROYAL is placed first of the cream of tartar powders; actual strength, 160.6 cubic inches of leavening gas per ounce of powder.

Every other powder tested exhibited a much lower strength than the Royal, the average being 33 per cent. less.

Every other powder likewise showed the presence of alum or sulphuric acid.

The claim that this report shows any other powder of superior strength or purity has been denounced as a falsehood by the Government officers who made the tests.

ROYAL BAKING POWDER CO., 106 WALL ST., NEW-YORK.

South Omaha union has been using its funds to assist the associated charities. The following pleasant incident is related by a member of the union. One of the public schools is named the Willard school. In honor of this, Mrs. Truman, the local president, and Mrs. Towl, one of the pioneer women of the city, visited the school and presented them with a framed picture of our honored president. Two bright little girls with sunny hair, belonging to the school, bear the name of Willard, one of them being Frances E. Willard. They claim to be distant relatives. May the Willard school and all of its members honor the name they bear.

Minden union made a most vigorous campaign against the saloons at the spring election. Besides using one column donated by the paper, they paid for another. Their L. T. L. is in charge of two superintendents, and a very enthusiastic public meeting was given by them, which, with ten cents admission, brought them twelve dollars. Public meetings were held once a week by the union for two months previous to election, for which a leader for the music was hired. Rev. Mr. Compton and the Catholic priest were most earnest helpers. This union has been in existence but one year, and, if one were to judge from apparent results only, W. C. T. U. work would be condemned, for in that time the spirit of opposition to live temperance work has brought about the closing of one church and the opening of another saloon. But Satan rages when he is being valiantly opposed. The women are by no means disheartened, but feel that a sentiment has been aroused which will lead on to better things.

The sixth anniversary of Yankee Hill union was observed by holding a suffrage contest in Wesley chapel, the contestants being four ladies and three gentlemen. (Let us get our honoraries at work.) Mrs. McEachran took the first prize, a copy of "Sweet Cicely."

Contestants were drilled by Miss Etta Crippen, of University Place, and Mrs. Emma Bowers, superintendent of franchise, made the presentation speech most effectively. The music was excellent, the violin and organ solos being especially enjoyed. The house was crowded, and the entertainment was considered a great success.

The annual convention of Jefferson county was held in Steele City, April 17, Mrs. Welton, county president, organizing a union at that place.

Saline county held its convention in Wilber, May 1 and 2, with a good attendance. Some very fine papers were read. Mrs. Walker, the state president, was present during the convention, and gave an address on suffrage the second evening. Mrs. Wheelock, the corresponding secretary of the state, divided the time with Mrs. Walker on suffrage evening, and also conducted the question box.

Dear Mother Putnam, president of the fifth district, who has been quite ill all winter, has just passed away. She was seventy-three years old, president of a district and of a county, as well as a great worker in the missionary cause. For eight years she had not missed a state convention until last fall. She was greatly beloved by her district and by the workers throughout the state.

ITEMS.

Miss Kerney has just organized a Y at Friend.

Several unions and Y's report having tried the railroad social recommended by Mrs. Pugh, in the Worker, with great success.

Rev. Alice Draper is contributing an interesting column on sociology to the Worker.

Our state evangelistic superintendent's Bible readings are so good they find their way into other state papers. We are willing.

Mrs. Benjamin, National superintendent of parliamentary usage, has been engaged for five days at Crete Chautauqua and will also make a few other dates in the state.

The union at University Place have petitioned, in the name of the state union, to have a woman physician appointed at the state girls' industrial school, at Geneva.

Franklin reports a full city ticket elected in the interests of temperance. The W. C. T. U. committee made a thorough canvass of the city before election.

Of Miss Watson's Sunday-school class of twenty young men at Trinity church, Lincoln, all but two signed the pledge against tobacco on Temperance Sunday, and one of these has since done so.

Mrs. Miller, of Wilber, who has several times crossed the ocean, recommends acid of phosphate taken three times a day for two weeks before starting and while crossing, as a sure preventive of the distressing malady of seasickness. Delegates, take notice.

NEW HAMPSHIRE.

GOOD CHEER AND PROGRESS.

Never have there been brighter and more cheering reports come in from all over the state than in the last month. The quarterly convention reports are full of interest, and if our frost and cold does hold on, the hearts of the W. C. T. U. workers are warm and full of zeal for the cause.

I quote from Mrs. G. W. Richardson, president of Grafton county, an earnest worker, and only wish I could send her report in full: "Grafton county held a very successful convention in Woodsville, March 6; nearly fifty delegates and several visitors were present. Four clergymen spoke cheering words, a helpful mothers' meeting was held, fine papers were given on 'Jail and almshouse work,' and 'The W. C. T. U. as a power of good.' The church was decorated with beautiful flowers which was a surprise to the ladies, and a gift from the president's husband. [Just fancy the condition of temperance in New Hampshire when the gentlemen begin to scatter flowers in the pathway of temperance workers!] At the close of the day the flowers were taken by the delegates to the sick and aged in their towns, and many of them were sent to the county farm, thus making a second flower mission day, as a result of this convention. A new union was speedily formed at Monroe."

The Haverhill union held a very interesting service at the jail March 5, and with the gift of five dollars from an honorary member they are going to start a library for that institution with the assistance of other unions.

East Haverhill has had a very interesting course of lectures by their clergymen. From the Franklin Transcript, Merrimack county, we find the Franklin union is up and doing. A large and interesting mass-meeting was held on Sunday evening, March 17. Earnest and spirited addresses were made by the different clergymen of the town. There was fine singing and a crowded audience. A delegation from this union has recently visited their county farm.

Rockingham county, Miss McIntire, president, held its convention at Exeter, March 14. Members from five unions were present. A "Workers' Conference" was held in the morning. In the afternoon an address on purity by Mrs. Chase, a fine talk on narcotics by Mrs. Jones, and an impressive paper on "The Importance of Evangelistic Work in our Unions," by Mrs. Pike, were all good.

In my last report I stated the fact that the bill raising the age of consent from thirteen to sixteen years had passed both branches of the legislature, and as our governors in the past have been men of high principle and advanced thought, it did not occur to me but that the bill would become a law. Governor Busiel has vetoed the bill.

On March 10 Mrs. Emily McLaughlin, National lecturer and president of the Boston union, was at Wilton and aroused great enthusiasm as she always does in her work. In the morning she gave an address in the Unitarian church; in the evening at the town hall, all the clergymen present. New members were added to the union, and Mrs. McLaughlin writes, "I was cordially received and many kind words were spoken."

Bristol, Franconia and Littleton all report a gain in membership. Woodsville has been especially active, adding eleven new members and sending funds to Mercy Home, to Mrs. Loyne for work among lumbermen, and five barrels of clothing and six dollars to the Nebraska sufferers. Swiftwater has had temperance lectures and sent money to the lumber camps.

MICHIGAN ETCHINGS.

In my last I located the county president of Eaton county, third district, way up north. Now I will bring her down and tell you she has organized two unions and lives in a county where local prohibitory law was sustained in the late election, and has prepared a county banner "That it may be displayed because of the truth." I refer to Mrs. H. H. Parmenter, of Vermontville.

From the seventh district comes the cheering report: "Our county, Sanilac, has doubled its forces within the last year, and last week held a grand rallying convention at Port Sanilac with Mrs. Law for speaker." Taking up five national departments, they make a long stride forward.

Almont union and fifth ward of Port Huron, have fitted up rooms in the former, having a circulating library.

Imlay City's reports at annual meeting show a successful year of work.

Mrs. Bradley, our state superintendent of narcotics, must be a delight to the National, for she is wise, prompt and obedient. She writes officially: "Anti-cigarette Leagues are receiving much attention in the state. We are slowly gaining ground, teachers are doing more than formerly, they are using blanks I have prepared. Teachers' gatherings more frequently discuss methods of teaching narcotics. Teachers using tobacco are made to feel that they cannot properly teach scientific truth by word and destroy its effect by act."

Battle Creek writes that they as unions serve bi-monthly teas. At their last served one hundred persons, closing with literary program, and gained ten new members.

We of Michigan have a just pride that among our ranks is the lady commander of the Maccabees, Mrs. Lillian Hollister, and the department president of the W. R. C., Mrs. T. B. Knapp. Both have been state workers in the W. C. T. U.

Reports from the ninth district are thus headed: "The season of the year seems to affect the unions of the ninth, as is shown by the new ideas that crop out in their reports."

Lake City has held a Cooper contest in which the contestants were married men, one banker, two merchants, one real estate dealer and one bookkeeper.

Big Rapids and Fremont circulated petitions sent out by Mrs. Kinney.

Manton has held a matrons' contest.

Sherman reports successful mothers' meetings and at the annual meeting of Mason county gained eleven new members.

Reed City (take notice) at a tea meeting discussed the "Digest of the Laws of Michigan."

Shelby agitated our views until election, sowing literature; result: No saloons for another year.

Manistee held franchise contest by members of the High School, three from each of the fraternities.

Tenth district at Alpena has a new union of twenty-six members. A successful county convention met at Bay City, where lives Mrs. C. C. Faxon, district president, who is called an ideal "patent condenser of ideas, words, time." At the same place lives Julia R. Parrish, our corresponding secretary and editor.

Mrs. Howard, of the eleventh district, is home again. Petoskey union sent six boxes of goods to northern sufferers and have kept the monthly gospel temperance meetings right along. Even during revival services it was all right.

Benton have secured new members by letter writing and by the same way saved a young man from the influence of bad company.

Cheboygan hold gospel temperance meetings with pledge signing and report a conversion through flower mission department.

Our state president, in Michigan Union, said this: "As I journey toward life's sunset I am more and more impressed that finally our sins of omission will aggregate more than our sins of commission. I fear we are not faithful enough in the little things. It seems such a little thing to secure one more member to a union; to persuade one wayward young man to take the total abstinence pledge; one soul saved, through that example others; one more subscriber to state paper and THE UNION SIGNAL in the aggregate means much."

Mrs. Wheeler Winch of Canada, once our state secretary, had an "at home" to the board of education, at which our principles and wishes were forcibly presented.

Our Bible reading by Mrs. Hudson is "His strength given us for His service."

To us of the sixth district at Howell, has come one of national reputation, Rev. Frances Townsley, whose printed Bible reading for April is a gem—"Doing what He bids, and doing it now."

Our state legislature has given us not eighteen but sixteen years as the "age of consent," and five hundred dollars uniform liquor tax. Mr. Baird offered a resolution prohibiting the use of tobacco while the house is in regular session or committee of the whole, which was referred to the committee of public health.

The woman's edition of the Ann Arbor Courier and the Albion Daily each had a "History of the W. C. T. U. work," the latter ably edited by Mrs. Professor Dickie.

I close this April letter with a report of two district conventions in the heart of our state and the last before the "gathering of the clans" at Battle Creek, June 4 to 7, a host who still see the banner held aloft by our leader to the very last, bearing this inscription, "Go forward!"

The sixth district convention was called at Howell; everything to please the eye, the ear and encourage the heart of workers was provided. We had fifty accredited delegates, that included a National superintendent, a state officer and county president of much experience and ability. Mrs. Dawson, one of them, is an evangelist of repute at Chautauqua.

At our memorial service for Mrs. Lathrap, said to be one of the best held, the bell was tolled, a stroke for each year of the earthly life. The Scripture was an acrostic upon her name. A chant was rendered, composed by Mrs. Curtis, a resident of Howell, and one of our delegation. The departments were well reported, and we had a paper that would be creditable to a college professor, as she has been, by Miss Norton, subject of the same, "Laws for the Protection of Our Youth."

Mrs. Shepherd, our president, was wise, dignified, helpful, all through, and was of course reëlected, as was the faithful secretary of ten years' service and the treasurer. The resolutions were strong, especially upon political lines, and we pledged ourselves this year to make franchise first.

The band of forty Y's had their leader welcome us, and eight of their number pleased us with the finest of fine music on mandolin and guitar. The L. T. L's recited for us; three of the clergy gave us warm words of welcome, and also the mayor. Turning our faces homeward we could say, "I will trust and not be afraid, for the Lord Jehovah is my strength and song."

The fifth district convention was called at Ionia and was a large gathering. They received greetings from fourteen organizations, two state officers and one district president. Papers upon "Some Things Every White-ribboner Needs to Know," and "Women on School Boards," were followed by discussion. The franchise question, whenever presented, elicited enthusiasm. At the memorial service the list was long of the good and true that have gone home.

Reports of county presidents, superintendents, Temple, W. T. P. A., Michigan Union and The Union Signal, together with our literature in general, received attention. One evening was given to medal contest, (prize received by Willie Halleck, of Sparta,) and every competitor deserved a prize. The residents of Ionia spared no pains to entertain the delegates. An excursion was planned to the state house of correction located here. Our women, Mrs. D'Arcambel and Mrs. Wilson, always give good reports of flower mission services held here, and the kindness of the officials. The entire corps of officers were reëlected; The district president, Mrs. A. S. Benjamin, was elected for the sixteenth time,—an unusual record.

A lecture was the feature of the second evening. The local papers, Sentinel and Standard, were kindly in mention and gave full space. Fine music, beautiful flowers and banners were not wanting, and this for many reasons was one of the fifth's best conventions.

News in a Nutshell.

Meadville, Pa., W. C. T. U. is a prosperous and growing union. Its president has issued an urgent circular letter for an increase in membership before the Pennsylvania "coming of age" convention; a good idea.

Pennsylvania W. C. T. U. is to have a membership "honor roll" at its "coming of age" convention next fall. Each local union prepares a roll, each county gathers these for county conventions, and all are to be forwarded to Harrisburg before the state convention in October.

The Scandinavian Woman's Christian Temperance Union, of Brooklyn, with a membership of sixty, and the Scandinavian Woman's Christian Temperance Union, of New York, numbering eighty members, are new organizations, reported by our active worker in this department, Miss Kate Lunden.

Church parlors converted into home parlors by the use of rugs, easy chairs, etc., and decorated with white ribbon insignia, made an attractive setting for Michigan's fifth district convention at Ionia last month. This is the district over which Mrs. Benjamin presides and the sessions were keenly interesting and well conducted.

At Lafayette, La., five years ago, it was impossible to organize and several attempts have been made with no success. Mrs. Dimmitt secured Miss Belle Kearney to lecture and followed up her efforts with a gospel temperance meeting, and the result is the whole community is stirred on temperance, and there is now a union of twenty-five members, and fifty-six who have signed the pledge. They are now getting up a medal contest.

Mrs. Metcalf, superintendent of the state department of the L. T. L. for New York, writes most encouragingly of the progress of the L. T. L. work, particularly of the Senior grade. Their convention is to be held in August and the young people will this year represent an older class than formerly, ranging from fifteen to twenty-two years. There are classes studying our manuals for graduation in high schools and in the state normal school, also one at Keuka College, Lima Seminary and other institutions. In all the twelve years that Mrs. Metcalf has been at the head of this department in New York there never was so much reason for encouragement as now.

The death of the Rev. Dr. H. B. Ridgaway, of Evanston, Ill., has removed one of the strongest, gentlest and most accomplished friends that the cause of temperance, purity and woman has developed in our day. Dr. Ridgaway warmly favored the admission of women to the Garrett Biblical Institute, of which he was president, and was known to give his time at important public meetings to he women theological students that ne might emphasize their right to be there. He was the only pastor in that progressive-conservative town who ever invited a woman to conduct the church prayer-meeting on temperance day in the week of prayer. He was a devoted champion of the admission of women into the General Conference, and Madam Willard and the workers at Rest Cottage had no more loyal and brotherly friend. If all men were like him the occupation of the white-ribboners would speedily be gone and the ideal home would be a practically universal institution on the earth.

A "feast of good things" was enjoyed at the Riverside county, Cal., con vention, held in Riverside last month. The temperance evangelists, Major and Mrs. Scott, Mrs. Sammet, Mrs. Kyes, of the Salv ation Army, Mrs. Davis, Mrs. Potter, Mrs. Button, and Rev. Dr. Wright were among the leading speakers of the meeting, which is described as the most inspiring temperance convention ever held in Riverside county. At the close of the meeting a Law and Order League was formed to see that the license law was strictly enforced in South Riverside, so that though the hideous evil of the saloon is in this otherwise fair little portion of the county its horrors may be lessened as much as possible, and its fiendish work kept within the bounds at least of law. Seventeen new, active members and twenty-two honorary members were added to the list of W. C. T. U's of S. Riverside—all the ministers of the place wear the white ribbon, and the professor of the High School confesses that this convention had converted him to the franchise for women, or to anything else they should ask.

EVANGELISTIC DEPARTMENT.

QUESTIONS FOR ANNUAL REPORT.

To Superintendents of Evangelistic Work:

As the National Convention at Baltimore, October 18 to 23, 1895, is so much earlier than usual, all reports must be gathered earlier, and should reach me by the last of September. As the questions have been, and are still, so largely circulated in my Hints and Helps, I shall not issue a special question circular, but repeat these questions in The Union Signal.

Will each state superintendent secure answers to the questions from every local union, and send the summary only to the National superintendent? Will she also add a brief letter, giving her own outlook over her state and report of her personal work during the year?

QUESTIONS.

Has your union an evangelistic superintendent?

How many unions in your county or district have evangelistic superintendents?

Have you received a copy of the National superintendent's Hints and Helps?

How many copies have been sent out in the state?

Are you and your union growing in spirituality and using the helps thereto?

Have any communion circles been formed?

How many observe the trysting time?

Do you hold in your union a weekly meeting for conference, prayer and temperance enthusiasm, and is this separate from the business meeting?

Has there been in your union a revival of interest in evangelistic work, and a renewed consecration and Bible study?

Have you held Bible readings as suggested by the National superintendent? With what result?

Did your last district or county convention observe the hour from eleven to twelve a. m. as a season of devotion and Bible exposition?

Did your last state convention observe the hour from eleven to twelve a. m. as a season of devotion and Bible exposition?

Have you continued the campaign in the churches?

How many church services have been held under the auspices of the W. C. T. U.

How many sermons preached by pastors?

How many meetings were addressed by women?

In how many were collections taken for the union?

How many pages of gospel temperance literature have been distributed during the year?

How many unions have inaugurated the system of coöperative evangelistic work, outlined in our Hints and Helps?

How many visits have been made by each union?

Mention results, incidents, etc.

Have gospel missions or district conferences been held?

How many and with what results?

Have Crusade bands been formed, and with what results?

How many gospel temperance meetings have been held?

How many in prisons, jails and penitentiaries?

How many in almshouses?

How many in halls?

How many in cottages?

How many in mothers' meetings?

How many in school-houses?

How many on ships or in forts?

How many outdoor services?

How many visits made by union?

Number of conversions?

Number of Bible readings?

Number of pages of literature distributed?

How many signatures to the pledges?

The Mississippi Basin.

The Struggle in America between England and France. 1697-1763. With full Cartographical Illustrations from Contemporary Sources. By Justin Winsor, author of "Cartier to Frontenac," "Christopher Columbus," etc. 8vo, gilt top, $4.

This volume takes up the story of American exploration where Dr. Winsor left it in his "Cartier to Frontenac." It traces the counter movements of the English and French, in adventure, trade, and war, for the possession of the Great Valley.

Letters of Celia Thaxter.

Edited by A. F. and R. L. With four portraits. Handsomely printed on the best paper, and carefully bound, cloth, gilt top, uncut front and bottom, each volume bearing a statement that it is a copy of the First Limited Edition. A few copies have been bound entirely uncut, with paper label,—making a most desirable volume for collectors or for the purpose of extension. 12mo, $1.50.

A book of singular literary and personal charm, produced in a unique and exceedingly attractive style.

The Life of the Spirit in the Modern English Poets.

By Vida D. Scudder, Associate Professor of English Literature in Wellesley College. Crown 8vo, gilt top, $1.75.

Miss Scudder has made a thoughtful, philosophical and eloquent study of the characteristics of the poetry of the nineteenth century, to discover the development of thought on the highest themes, and analyzes keenly the poetry of Wordsworth, Shelley, Tennyson, Arnold, Clough and Browning.

Russian Rambles.

By Isabel F. Hapgood. Crown 8vo, $1.50.

Thirteen chapters on Russian life, people and customs. These are of special value as being the fruit of personal observation by an unusually intelligent and fair-minded visitor.

FLOWER MISSION.

DEAR COMRADES:—The time for celebrating our National flower mission is almost here. I hope each superintendent is making preparation to hold services in the jails, hospitals, prisons, or any public institution in her locality. I think it would be well for the flower missioners to celebrate Decoration Day by sending buttonhole bouquets for those who decorate, also a liberal supply of flowers for the graves. As the 9th of June occurs on Sunday it will be appropriate to supply all pulpits with flowers, using our National texts and white ribbon.

Let me patiently exhort the local superintendents to report to the state superintendent, and the state to the National. It is a fact that as a flower mission department we always have something to report; something sweet, something bright, and something inspiring.

A little bird wafted the following lines to me the other day: "I do distribute a great many flowers, relieve the suffering, visit the sick, but it is all too sweet to be reported." I want to refer my good sisters to Hebrews 10:24: "Let us consider one another to provoke unto love and to good works." If by telling of the sweet things accomplished we may provoke others to good works, let us then withdraw our own personal feelings and inspire each other to greater activity in our ministry of flowers this coming year.

"O women! Do what you can,
Not what you cannot;
Not what you think might be done,
Not what you would like to do,
Not what you would do if you had more time,
Not what somebody else things you ought to do
But what you can."

In bonds of service,

ALICE L. SUDDUTH, Nat. Supt.
Colton, Cal.

Treasurer's Corner.

Remember, dear comrades, that the custom is now becoming established in the National W. C. T. U. to ask each member of a local white ribbon society to send on each birthday, in token of her gratitude to God, as many pennies to the National treasury as she has lived years on this earthly ball. Again we say, remember. This little deed faithfully followed out, would, financially speaking, transfer our society from crutches to wings.

Ever yours affectionately,
Frances E. Willard.

The committee on finance at Cleveland in their report, after looking the field over and considering that the dues alone have never given us money enough with which to carry on our work, to say nothing of branching out into aggressive work, recommended that this year we adopt the birthday plan. This report was adopted almost unanimously. Some of the states had already adopted the plan for their state work. We do not wish in any way to interfere with the work of the states nor lessen their receipts, but there are many in those states that could send to each, and very many who will not send to the state that perhaps would be moved to send a gift to the National; but in those states where no such method has been adopted there are thousands that could, without detriment to themselves, send us a penny for each year. What a help it would be to our burdened treasury.

Some very cheering responses have been received this week. One dear sister from Missouri sends a gift and says: "I mean to repeat it every year as long as I live." Think what a few hundred yearly contributors like that would mean to the National. Mrs. Tyng, of Peoria, Ill., sends one dollar and yet no one would believe she is half a hundred years old. Another good friend from Middletown, R. I., sends with her pennies a message of love and good will and hopes the time will come when she can send dollars instead of pennies for each year of her life. Thus a few are responding. May they greatly increase.

A very welcome gift of $100 came to the treasury recently, sent by Mrs. Frances Gulick Jewett, a donation from her revered mother, Mrs. Luther Halsey Gulick, who gave her life in missionary and philanthropic work. She was a warm friend of the W. C. T. U., and a sketch of her life and work will soon appear in THE UNION SIGNAL. Oregon has just sent dues and is making good gains this year.

This number of THE UNION SIGNAL being flower mission number it is fitting that we speak a word of this beautiful mission. There is no department of our work that appeals more powerfully to the heart of every good man and woman. There is scarcely a heart so hardened that it cannot be touched by these beautiful children of the garden and field. The fresh fragrant flower opens the heart to the text of comfort or admonition that accompanies it or to the loving message that follows it. Many have been won to purity and a better life through this delicate ministration. How blessed that we are permitted to help in this work for the Master.

Organizers' Corner.

I lay down my UNION SIGNAL, having just read Mrs. Gleason's letter beginning, "My special work so far this year has been for the children." This has a good ring to us whose special work is always for the boys and girls.

While the sisters were met in their "coming of age" celebration last autumn I was riding behind a pair of fiery colts in the hills, mountains and wilds of eastern Oregon and Washington. To accomplish this trip "across lots" I traveled nearly seven hundred miles behind the noble horse, beside about a thousand behind the steam horse. A weary trip, but left our noble army with seven new companies of recruits, one of these a union among the Warm Springs Indians. This union—our first among the Indians—was organized with twenty-four members and has since grown to sixty. A unique banner of buckskin is under way to be sent to Oregon state convention.

To accomplish my work in the last year I have traveled over four thousand miles by rail and one thousand by wagon. The one thousand being quite equivalent to three thousand on the level roads of the Mississippi valley. I have spent two hundred and forty days in the field; given two hundred lectures and sermons; held one hundred children's meetings, giving chalk-talks; held one hundred woman's meetings; ten young woman's meetings; visited and addressed thirty-five schools and colleges; attended two state, three county and one L. T. L. convention,—and been oh, so blessed in it all. I have fifteen new unions and fourteen L. T. L's, one in the Oregon Reform school, to compensate me, beside the hearty welcomes, the tearful good-byes, the tender hand-clasps, the words of confidence and love, the whispered assurance that "you have helped me." These, sisters, are my jewels in the casket of memory that I would not exchange for the diamonds and pearls of the society queen.

I am more than ever convinced that we need more thorough organization, more systematic work, more clear, definite and simple instruction among our unions. Many of the unions are groping along in the dark for want of these.

You will expect me to say that we need more Loyal Temperance Legions. Out from a home that was once brightened by a baby smile and has been desolated twenty-one years because he went away, I want to send the message that, just as a childless home is far short of the ideal, so a childless W. C. T. U. falls far short of its privilege.

Our women grow eloquent in talking of the blessings of motherhood. Let them dwell for a time on the blessedness of motherhood to the union as well as the individual. The L. T. L. is the child of the union and many a union is shirking motherhood. Let me whisper (it's a secret and "must be kept") that I'd actually be ashamed of a union that I had organized that did not have an L. T. L.

Then our unions need to feel that they are a part of the great National more than they do to be in more direct touch with the National, so that they will realize that they are each a link in the chain that shall hold the anchor by and by in the safe harbor.

Not a few well authenticated anecdotes go to show that even the people who enjoy the advantages of travel are often sadly unenlightened. A lady who has recently returned from a Mediterranean trip says that as the ship was leaving the harbor of Athens a well dressed lady passenger approached the captain, who was pacing the deck, and pointing to the distant hills covered with snow, asked, "What is that white stuff on the hills, captain?" "That is snow, madam," answered the captain. "Now is it really?" remarked the lady. "I thought so, but a gentleman just told me it was Greece."

Our Library Table.

Alexander Mackay: Missionary Hero of Uganda. By the author of "The Story of Stanley." Splendid Lives Series. Thomas Whittaker, 2 and 3 Bible House, New York. Cloth, 50 cts.

A Voice In The Wilderness. By Maria Weed. This little volume is written to teach a lesson and utter a word of warning against morphine. The heroine, through a doctor's prescriptions, became an unwitting slave to the morphine habit. The hero is the physician called to save her. He summons to his aid a beautiful and talented woman whose sister—slain by morphine—was the doctor's wife. The story portrays the awful, inevitable battle, the doctor's and nurse's need of long continued tact, patience and skill. But victory comes, as it always will, to those who are determined that it shall. Written in a popular vein, the narrative is readable and the plot well sustained. However, there is a bit of inconsistency that cannot in justice be overlooked. The author has fallen into the common error of introducing cigars whenever her heroes retire for rest or conversation, forgetting that nicotine is a near relative of morphine, often proving the forerunner of the fatal habit. Her vigorous blows at the morphine fiend might well have been turned on the nicotine fiend, but no, even the doctor smoked! Aside from this the little volume is an acceptable one. Messrs. Laird & Lee, publishers, Chicago. 50 cents.

No handsomer and certainly no more valuable publication adorns Our Library Table than the Funk & Wagnalls' Standard Dictionary of the English Language, which, after nearly five years of preparation is now complete. The work is issued in two large quarto volumes, also in a single volume. Some of the facts pertaining to the work of "making" this dictionary may be of interest to readers. The editorial staff whose combined labors have perfected the Standard Dictionary is as follows: Isaac K. Funk, D.D., Editor-in-chief; Francis A. March, LL.D., Consulting Editor; Daniel S. Gregory, D.D., Managing Editor; John Denison Champlin, M. A., Rossiter Johnson, Ph. D., Arthur E. Bostwick, Ph. D., Associate Editors. Aside from these there were engaged over two hundred forty office editors and specialists; nearly five hundred readers for quotations; hundreds of others whose counsel was called in definitions, etc. As a result of the combined wisdom and painstaking of the above the dictionary contains by actual count 301,865 vocabulary terms, exclusive of the appendix, which contains 47,468 entries. The work is a most inclusive one and might almost fill the place of the encyclopædia, at least in all ordinary cases of reference. One of the rules followed in selecting and rejecting words has been: "Omit no word found in a living book—that is in a book now read by any considerable number of people—and whose meaning is likely to be sought for in an English dictionary." A host of specialists have been employed, each set of words having been defined or passed upon by "a representative of the science or art, handicraft, party or class or religious denomination to which the terms respectively belong." The New York Independent says well of the dictionary that it is "the joint product of linguistic learning and lexical scholarship of the age." The pictorial illustrations are masterpieces of mechanical art and accuracy and have been prepared as carefully as the text of the volume. The classification and grouping of synonyms is indispensable to writers, and this need has been fully met. With any word that may approximately express the thought of the student is found a list of synonyms with differences of meaning and use carefully explained. Capitalization and a uniform system of compounding is a feature that printers and proofreaders will especially appreciate. Lack of space alone limits the specific testimonies that this masterpiece merits and its name is an apt one—The Standard.

Sold only by subscription. Prices: (according to binding) single volume edition, $12, $14, $18. Two volume edition, $15, $17, $22

What is an Emulsion?

Milk is a true Emulsion, and as milk or cream is easier to digest and assimilate than butter, so is the milk or cream of Cod-liver Oil easier to digest and assimilate than raw Oil. This is why Scott's Emulsion is much more useful and effective than the natural Oil; why it accomplishes so much in arresting waste and building up the body.

But it is much more than ordinary fat food. It has other constituents that have wonderful healing and strengthening power, and in addition we add the Hypophosphites (or Phosphorus), another most important element in overcoming decreased vitality or loss of flesh. These are the reasons why Scott's Emulsion is benefiting to-day hundreds of thousands of consumptives and anæmic persons, as well as being a food and remedy for sickly, wasting children that is surprising both to physicians and parents.

BIBLE READING FOR JUNE.

The subject of the June Bible Reading is

The Divine Keep,

and it will, we feel sure, be heartily welcomed by our women everywhere. It is prepared by the well-known and well loved leader in this department,

Mrs. Hannah Whitall Smith,

and reveals, as do all of Mrs. Smith's Bible expositions, a wonderful grasp upon the heart of the Infinite, and a clear perception of the needs of the human soul only possible to one possessing the "open vision." Like all this author's Bible Readings, it will help us to know the Lord better and, therefore, to trust Him more as our "keeper."

Responsive Reading for June.

The promised reading on Penal and Reformatory Work, by the National superintendent of that department, having failed to reach us, we substitute therefor one arranged by Mrs. A. Swan Brown, entitled which will be found very suggestive to local workers. With a little change this Reading might be made of service in a program for parlor meetings or other entertainments.

HAVE YOU EVER READ "HIGH JOE,"
Or The Logger's Story?

W. F. Ogilvie, late chairman of the Pierce county Prohibition committee, of Wisconsin, just after a camp meeting there, says: "I talked with quite a number of the ministers on the grounds, and they all agreed that 'High Joe' is to the Prohibition cause what 'Uncle Tom's Cabin' was to abolition. It is the greatest vote-maker of our times."

Illinois W. C. T. U. president writes: Coming home one day very weary . . . I took up "High Joe" for an accompaniment to my rest. I intended to read only a few minutes, but so interested did I become in the hero of the story—so thrilled by his strong arraignment of the liquor traffic—that I completed the "o'er true tale" before I laid down the book. The author has certainly added a helpful book to the prohibition literature of the day. It is a timely warning against the foe of the home, and will surely not go unheeded by the youth whom we hope by thousands will ponder its truths as they read the intensely interesting pages. Sincerely yours,

Louise S. Rounds.

"THUMB NAIL SKETCHES OF WHITE-RIBBON WOMEN."

This interesting and useful little volume has been brought out in new and enlarged form, and is now ready for orders. Besides brief biographies of World's W. C. T. U. General Officers and superintendents and many presidents of National and Colonial auxiliaries, it gives sketches of white ribbon leaders in Great Britain and Canada, our own National officers, state presidents, organizers, evangelists, pioneers, promoted comrades and other leaders. It is a book of 125 pages and beautifully illustrated, containing nearly forty half-tone cabinet-size portraits. A book that aside from its direct and personal interest to all white-ribboners, is bound to prove of immense value to local workers in advertising speakers and in introducing to the general public through the press some of our representative women.

Publisher's Notes

We print in full Miss Helen Walker's excellent letter to the Y's in the current number of the Watch Tower, which is a "Young Woman's Number." This very fine issue should have a circulation far outside of state lines, into the home of every young woman who wears the white ribbon.

LITERATURE.

MY DEAR Y'S:—The silent influence of literature is not seen but its power is acknowledged by all. We bring no new plans this year, but ask for a systematic working out of those already proposed. In this we urge your hearty coöperation.

As we draw fresh inspiration from the "old, old story," with its blessed, never-changing plan, so through our literature there comes to us continually the help and encouragement needed for our broadening work. If we study to show ourselves approved workmen there will come in the working out of old plans, many bright variations as we try to meet the needs of different communities.

To insure systematic work appoint as superintendent one who believes in this work and who will have the cheerful coöperation of active and honorary members. Report her name at once to the state superintendent, who will see that she is properly registered at the W. T. P. A., thus receiving the benefit of the commission offered. Quoting from your own paper, "Now, whatever else you do, be sure to have plenty of UNION SIGNALS, Young Women and Watch Towers and be sure you read them. This is the way you get ideas, enthusiasm and information of what other Y's and W's are doing and how they do it." Urge the members to subscribe for Young Women and Watch Tower. Every union would do well to subscribe for two or more copies of Young Women to be given as samples to new members, or to young people whom it is desired to enlist.

This paper is full of bright, helpful suggestions, which carried out, would make Illinois the banner state in Y work. To secure a number of new subscribers try the plan given on page 6 of the March number, in the article, "How to Earn Our Premium." The Watch Tower will come to you this week with a very happy surprise. As you enjoy it, will you not pledge yourselves to be more earnest in the service you can render in return?

The State Report should be read and kept for reference. Furnish members with W. T. P. A. Catalogues that they may learn of the printed helps ready for use at our great publishing house. Urge every superintendent to study carefully the department literature in which she is especially interested. Keep on hand a supply of literature giving facts and statistics, as well as plans for and results of work, for the use of individual members.

Distribute literature. Freely and wisely sow the good seed of printed thoughts and expect results. This is one of the best means of giving information and making sentiment in favor of our cause. In this work the honoraries can render valiant service.

On one of our convention programs last year was this Scripture text, "A good report maketh the bones fat." Work well done, be it little or much, always makes a good report. Don't fail to report.

In this department formerly all has been gathered in one report at the close of the year, but at our next state convention I would be glad to report the literature work of the Y's and W's separately. Will you help me? I have great confidence in the ability of our young women to carry forward this work. Please send me the name of a superintendent from every Y in Illinois. Let us make a new start all together.

Every card or letter received will be promptly answered, for in personal correspondence we may have free interchange of thoughts and plans.

Your loving elder sister,
HELEN WALKER,
State Supt. of Temp. Lit.

OUR BOW PIN.

We desire to call the attention of our women to the new white ribbon badge. It consists of a bow pin of white enamel on sterling silver and will meet a very general demand for a "white ribbon" which has some intrinsic as well as distinctive value, and which—like the inclusive "aim" of the organization it represents—will retain its pristine purity and all opposing forces. Every W and every Y should wear one of these truly symbolical pins.

Signal Notes.

Headquarters of the American Purity Alliance, and of The Philanthropist, its organ, will hereafter be at the United Charities Building, Fourth avenue and Twenty-second street, New York.

The announcement that the Christian Endeavorers will hold no Sunday session at the Boston International Convention, to avoid Sunday travel, is meeting with warm approval from all Sabbatarians.

The Horticultural college, Swanley, Kent, has a successful woman's branch which has sent forth twenty graduates equipped as practical gardeners and horticulturists, who find the occupation profitable and beneficial.

Sir Benjamin Ward Richardson has written the introduction to Miss Willard's book entitled, "A Wheel Within a Wheel, or How I Learned to Ride the Bicycle," published in England by Hutchingson & Co., Paternoster Row, and in New York by Fleming H. Revell.

That a large proportion of the people in the United States are without religious books is made evident by last year's report of the American Tract Society. Their 209 colporteurs employed in 36 states, territories and Manitoba visited 131,633 families, and found 14,420 families without religious literature, 5,827 families with no Bibles, and 36,533 who did not attend church.

Long Island, N. Y., Chautauqua Assembly, convening at Point o' Woods, July 4 to September 2,—its second season—is a seaside resort for intelligent and religious people. Suffolk county W. C. T. U. have planned to erect an assembly and boarding hall there this summer and the place will have many attractions for those who desire a delightful summer outing without evil influences.

At the suggestion of Professor Gordon, of Tillotson Academy, Trinidad, Col., the local Prohibitionists fought under the banner, "home protection," at a recent election, and cast the largest vote in the history of the town. An illustrated ballot was used, in which the Citizens' ticket was typified by a man and woman holding the ballot; the Republican by the American eagle upon a shield, and the Home Protection leaders by a mother and children. This is an effective design, which might be carried to wider use with equally hopeful results.

The Massachusetts reformatory at Concord, Mass., in which are confined one thousand young men (a large per cent from the results of the drink traffic) was the scene of a notable silver medal contest recently. The twenty-seven recitations were delivered with a fervor seldom excelled by more highly favored contestants. At the close a touching address was given on the life and work of the originator of the contest plan, Hon. W. J. Demorest, whose recent death has saddened the temperance workers the world around, and the young men were urged to assist in the overthrow of the saloon.

Many Christian teachers are desirous of obtaining the advantages of study in the Moody Bible Institute, but after the taxing work of the winter, feel unable to take the full course laid out for regular students. It is Mr. Moody's desire to make a special arrangement for such, by which they can share in the study and work only so far as their strength will allow, and can also pursue a musical course if desired. Beside the usual lecturers, Dr. A. T. Pierson, of Philadelphia, is expected in June, and Dr. Webb Peploe, of London, in September. Further information can be obtained from Miss E. S. Strong, superintendent women's department, 230 La Salle avenue, Chicago.

The Hon. Henry W. Blair, for twelve years United States Senator, has been from the first the uncompromising friend of the temperance and labor movements, the cause of purity and the enfranchisement of women. And now Mrs. Blair has written a novel which embodies the finest flavor of New England life and character as it was in the past generation. Her book gives a vivid picture of the home life of the people and the supreme influence of theological debate upon the character and life of those homes. The spirit of the book is thoroughly ennobling, and its dramatic quality remarkable. It deserves to take high rank among the novels of the year.

Couldn't Stand Upright.

June 11th, 1894.
The Dr. J. H. McLean Medicine Co.,
St. Louis, Mo.

Gentlemen:

For about ten years I suffered with a pain in my back which I thought was caused by a strain, sometimes it got so bad I could not stand upright or ride in my buggy. I read in your almanac of symptoms that I recognized as my own, which led me to the conclusion that my trouble was disease in the kidneys. I immediately began using Dr. J. H. McLean's Liver and Kidney Balm. It proved to be the right medicine and reached the spot. I soon lost all pain and had better health than ever before. It is more than a year now since I quit using it and have not had a pain or sick day in all that time. It is certainly a wonderful medicine for the kidneys.

Yours truly,

SINCE OUR LAST ISSUE.

Mount Vesuvius is again active.

The United Presbyterian church held its General Assembly in Pittsburg last week.

The news of the death of the Cuban rebellion leader, General José Marti, has been confirmed.

Formosa declines to submit to the rule of Japan, has declared its independence and prepared for war.

As we go to press the condition of Miss Mary A. Dodge (Gail Hamilton), who was stricken with paralysis, is slightly improved.

Eighty thousand Sunday-school pupils paraded Friday, in Brooklyn, the occasion being the sixty-sixth anniversary of the Sunday-school Union.

Queen Victoria's seventy-sixth birthday was celebrated Friday. Among the noted men who were knighted, are Lewis Morris, the poet, and Walter Besant, the author.

The income tax collectors were dismissed from government service Saturday, and the amounts paid before the Supreme Court declared the law unconstitutional will be returned.

At the twenty-ninth annual meeting of the National Temperance Society and Publication House, held in New York on the 14th inst., Joshua L. Baily, of Philadelphia, was unanimously elected president of the society, to take the place of the retiring president, Major-General O. O. Howard.

Believing that reform cannot be accomplished without their removal, the New York police commissioners, under the chairmanship of Theodore Roosevelt, have decided to displace Chief of Police Byrnes and Inspector Williams. These men have been at the head of New York police affairs for many years, and were blind to the network of official corruption all about them.

Friday, May 24, was a field day for temperance in the Presbyterian General Assembly in session at Pittsburg. Rev. Dr. Page, of Kansas, one of the candidates for the moderatorship, offered a resolution declaring "that it is the duty of the Church of Christ to avoid even the appearance of evil, and as there is a well-grounded belief that danger lies in the use of fermented wine at the communion table, it is the sense of the assembly that unfermented fruit of the vine fulfills every condition in the celebration of the sacrament." The resolution was strongly opposed by a small minority, but to the credit of this great church it was carried by an overwhelming vote. Moderator Booth gave every one desiring an opportunity to speak to the question, and for hours the keenest excitement and enthusiasm prevailed. We are greatly encouraged over this action and believe that it is the strongest stroke for total abstinence the church has ever taken. God speed the day when all Christians will be willing to remove the "stumbling block" from the path of the "weak brother."

"Will you please inform me if the W. C. T. U. is in any way connected with the so-called new 'Woman's Bible'?" This query, in one form and another, has come to us several times, hence, we take the privilege to answer this correspondent through our columns. No, the W. C. T. U. has nothing whatever to do with the 'Woman's Bible.'" To the best of our information there is to be no such a Bible. We have heard from authentic sources that there is to be a "Woman's Commentary on the Bible," which is quite another matter. But even with this commentary, the W. C. T. U. has nothing to do. It is, we understand, to be issued under the superintendency of Mrs. Elizabeth Cady Stanton, who is not a member of the W. C. T. U. Miss Willard was requested, we believe, to write upon certain passages in the Scriptures relating to women, and consented provided there would be a sufficient number of evangelical Christian women on the commentary committee to make the work an orthodox one. We have not heard directly from her since the press began agitating this question, about two weeks ago, but we have been told by one who knows that Miss Willard has had nothing to do with it and probably will not have. At any rate no one need feel any uneasiness about her position on this or any other evangelical question, for there isn't a sounder orthodox Christian living than Frances E. Willard.

A legal opinion of much interest to temperance people has just been rendered by a Tennessee attorney. Col. Noble Smithson, who, the press admits, has had much practice before the United States supreme court, has declared that the adverse decision of the court on the income tax has also abolished the internal revenue laws. Colonel Smithson says: "Justice Fuller, in his opinion, states: 'The constitution divides federal taxation into two classes—first, direct taxes; second, imports and excises;' and that 'direct taxes must be apportioned among the several states in proportion to their representation in the house of representatives.' Apparently the logical result of this opinion is that all federal taxes, except duties on imports, must be apportioned among the states according to their representation in the house of representatives. The act of August 27, 1894 (the Wilson bill), section 48, provides: 'That there shall be levied and collected on all distilled spirits, etc., a tax of one dollar and ten cents on each proof gallon.' The statutes of the United States levy a tax of six cents per pound on tobacco, etc. It seems clear that, according to this opinion of Chief Justice Fuller, these are direct taxes on personal property, and not being proportioned among the several states according to representation, they are unconstitutional and void. If this view be correct, the supreme court has not only wiped out the income tax, but has practically repealed the internal revenue law as it affects tobacco, whisky, etc." If this be true, there will be some hasty patching up of the revenue law, for even the liquor men know that the protection of their nefarious traffic lies entirely in the revenue derived by the government.

Two of our Methodist exchanges grew excited last week in commenting upon our innocent paragraph in the issue of May 9, asking the women of the Methodist Episcopal church to write to us concerning any carefully considered plans they may have in relation to the admission or rejection of women in the General Conference. Our friend, Dr. Buckley, thinks we would not have been "exposed to the charge of neglect of duty or violation of good taste," if we had omitted such a call. We do not wonder that Dr. Buckley so thinks, for according to his view point, we have doubtless been guilty of the sin of commission rather than omission, but, happily, all do not share his views on this subject, at least. Dr. Buckley fails to accept the fact that a majority of the lay members and ministers of his church favor the admission of women into the conference, and that the question is a perennial one, so long as it is favorably regarded by the membership. No one or two or a dozen general conferences can "decide" it for their successors. It is bound, like Banquo's ghost, to spring up, and it will never be "settled" till it is settled right. The Union Signal is read by more women than any other religious paper published in this country. Among its readers are thousands and tens of thousands of Methodist women. This question of the admission of women into the largest body of church government in the land is one of interest not only to the church in question and its official organs, but to every thoughtful, fair-minded man and woman. We see no cause for the charge of "interference" and "unwarrantable procedure" which the New York and Central Christian Advocates make against us. This is not merely a Methodist question; it is a woman's and hence a human question. Everything human interests us. There is no more important "woman question" at present than this; we are and have been from the first deeply interested in it. It has been discussed from our columns for years and never with the charge of "meddling" before. Nothing in the paragraph in question or in any of our discussions could be interpreted as advocating disloyalty to the church. We propose to give women an opportunity to express their "plans and purposes" whenever the occasion arises, and the two Advocates can rest assured that we will stir up no sedition in their constituency. It is gratifying that another of the well known Advocates, the Western of Cincinnati, edited by Dr. David H. Moore, speaks thus in our defense: "What more natural than the insertion of the special notice in question? We grant that it would have been better among the specials rather than among the editorials. But its origin and intent are as plain and fragrant as the white flower which badges their high calling. We are sorry that our St. Louis contemporary reads a sinister meaning in the women's desire to decide what shall be their next step in case the Cleveland General Conference denies them admission. It is a gratuitous assumption that the women are deliberating disloyalty. With our contemporary we agree that to be guilty of that would deservedly blight the plotters and also that it would retard the cause they seek to promote. But it does not mean that; simply this, a plan of campaign covering every contingency. By all means send in your carefully considered plans marked as directed. The Union Signal is a denominational clearing-house and will collect and send all Methodist checks to the proper account. What the women need is 'to get together' and reach a sensible and comprehensive understanding. They already safeguard our church and will be its dependence to the end." We thank Dr. Moore for his frank and friendly words.

IN THE CEMETERY, MAY 30.

BY MRS. MCVEAN ADAMS.

Every "Sweet of the year"
When spring and summer are one
There comes a day to the nation dear
When flowers are strewn on the soldiers here
Who look no more on the sun.

While here are the drunkards' graves
Lying on every side,
Side by side with our honored braves.
Over them only the rank grass waves
Their shame and ruin to hide.

Heroes, some of them, too,
Fighting hard to the last;
Falling, yet rising with hope anew.
Alas! that none of them ever slew
The demon that held him fast!

Out of the sweetest homes
Part of that host were borne,
Tenderly laid among costly tombs
Where flowers are giving out sweet perfumes,
And ever the pine trees mourn.

Some of them lingered on 'Till all was lost in the fight,
Fortune, honor and loved ones gone,
No one to carve on a simple stone
The name that was once so bright.

Still must the ranks be filled
And souls and bodies be lost.
Every three minutes one more killed,
As if in battle his blood was spilled,
Murdered by rum accursed.

Shall it be yours or mine?
Our babes that we kiss for joy?
Liking at first the taste of wine,
Then slipping downward the steep decline,
Shall it be your sweet boy?

How long, alas! how long
Shall our nation license crime,
Then weep for the happy and honored throng,
Immortal heroes of prose and song
Whose laurels grow bright with time!

While here are the drunkards' graves
Filled by the law's consent,
Over them only the coarse grass waves.
Our flowers are all for the nation's braves,
Here, here should our tears be spent.

A PAIR OF PUNCH CUPS.
A War Time Romanza.

BY MARTHA YOUNG.

[Allegretto Scherzando.]

Those were exciting days at West Point just before the outbreak of the Civil War. Agitation stretched taut all the nerves in the land and breathed excitant measures on the heart-strings of the nation's young soldiers.

In spite of the storm over all the land and the keen gusts of excitement in the barracks there was a friendship of four years' standing that, like an Æolian harp in a storm, gave forth only sweetness and unchanging melody; the friendship of Bruce Dering, of Alabama, and John Wells, of Massachusetts.

But now a sweet face, a pair of wide hazel eyes had broken a friendship that the falling apart of a nation had not marred.

The hatred that had sprung up in the fiery heart of Dering and blazed out in the heretofore calm breast of Wells, seemed the fiercer for their once ardent friendship.

Everybody was sorry for it. Everybody tried to mend it. Everybody, except one soft-voiced little soul who smiled as placidly over the deep distrust planted in two brave hearts as she would have smiled over a box of chocolate creams.

Some said she could not have helped to bridge the distrust she had created. Some said she fanned the anger in the two hearts that loved her. All said she could not love both. Bruce swore she loved him only. John vowed she cared for him alone. The pretty object of all this regard only opened wide a pair of glorious hazel eyes and smiled on all the world.

Bruce Dering's father had gotten for him a company among his neighbors, friends and kindred; on the morrow he was going South. He was making his last visit to the little beauty, love of whom had divided him from his friend.

"You will drink a 'stirrup-cup' with me?" she was saying.

"But I never taste wine," he replied.

"Then the gift I have prepared for you is nothing, worse than useless to you—" the gray eyes seemed ready to fill with tears—"See here, I had thought I would drink good luck to you and our country in this." She showed him a wide-brimmed punch-cup, like a wide blown silver lily. "See it is flat enough to fit even into a uniform pocket and yet wide enough to hold a goodly draught, and every draught I had thought would be sweetened by this—"

She turned the punch-cup in her hands and in its gold-lined depths shone her own fair face; some artist had caught there the very flash of her hazel eyes, the very glow of her half-smiling rosy lips. Bruce could no longer resist. That stirrup cup was his first taste of wine. The painted punch-cup went with him to the war—Da Capo—John Wells, too, drank a stirrup cup to good luck and our country. In so doing he broke a pledge not to taste wine made to his friend, Bruce Dering, three years ago. What matter? the friendship itself was broken now. John also carried close to his heart to the war a broad, shallow punch-cup out of which a pair of hazel eyes smiled up at him whenever he raised a draught to his lips. The little beauty was off with the opening of war to her home on the borderland.

[Con Dolcezza.]

Night and a heavy march over. Bright circles on the black night showed where Grant's camp-fires burned outside the entrenchments of Fort Donaldson. John Wells stood outside his colonel's tent. In a moment of leisure, rare in camp in those times, he was reading again the sweetest words, so he fancied, ever written to mortal man. From out his great blue army coat he drew a pictured face. What mattered it to him on this bitter night that his limbs were weary with the march, that his body was cold with the pelting of sleet and snow while those lovely eyes smiled on him?

"Is it worth it, John? Is it worth the price it cost, the loss of your friend?" asked the gruff voice of the colonel as he laid a hand suddenly on John's shoulder. "I loved you and Bruce as if you had been my own sons; you loved each other like brothers. Now you are demons of hate—all for the eyes of a woman. She surely can't love both of you. She most probably don't love either."

"Both! Well, I should say not," John laughed bitterly.

"I hear Bruce's company is over there," said the colonel pointing to where the red earthworks showed through the trees.

"And I'm here," said John.

Behind the red ramparts that faced Grant's army, Bruce Dering worked side by side with his men shoveling earth, laboring to make defensible the poorly entrenched camp with its grand misnomer, Fort Donaldson.

In a respite of shoveling and shooting, when wrapped in a gray army blanket, he might have slept a bit by the camp-fire ere to-morrow's fighting; he lay instead face downward under the pelting sleet, repeating with his heart the words of a letter that lay close against it. There was no need to read it; every sweet word was burned deep into him by the heat of his own love. While he said over and over the dear sentences, he feasted his eyes from time to time on the hazel ones pictured in the silver cup that he held in his hand.

[Spirito di Molto.]

The old colonel had heard that his other boy was in front of him. Now with the dim day's light, after that bitter night of hailstorm and snow and scattered firing, he saw him.

Bruce, careless of the pelting fire about, had mounted the breastwork which he had helped to strengthen, and sword in hand he sent defiance to his old friend and comrade who now fronted him, an enemy, a rival, in whom some poisoning breath had forbidden him to trust. The colonel, before his glance to the defenses, had been reading a paper, in spite of the scattering lead, but now he sprung forward, for he saw John rush out of ranks to accept the challenge.

Dropping his eyes to shut out the sight he feared—his two best loved boys in a close combat—suddenly he started. His eyes had by chance fallen on a paragraph in the paper before him. In such moments of fierce anguish and suspense our vision is wonderfully keen, our noting of little things very marvelous. He read the short notice again and again.

Careless of bullets the old man ran toward the breastworks:

"Boys!" he cried. "My boys! Hold up! Here's a word for two love-shook fellows. By Jove, even between two armies here's a word for both of you, and in good time, too!"

They read the marriage notice as the printed sheet fluttered in the colonel's hand. A stray bullet cut off a corner of the paper. "She loved neither of us, Bruce. We were engaged in too losing a business for her. She loved money," said John, contemptuously, reaching out for the hand of the captain in gray.

"That sutler!" breathed Bruce scornfully, grasping the hand of the soldier in blue. From the miniatures close to each heart the hazel eyes looked out clear and smiling as ever.

[Con Furia.]

Through the two days' heavy fighting that followed not a soldier had a moment's respite. There were two in all that fighting horde that knew each that he had on the other side a friend that loved dearer than a brother.

Though each fought with might and main each felt that in a better time to come he would feel enfold him a faithful mighty devotion "passing the love of woman."

On the seventeenth Floyd commenced his withdrawal from the fort. In that night of advance, assault, retreat, charge, countercharge, by the light of death-dealing fires, each friend saw the other, each sent to the other a smile full of trust regained, love renewed.

Each fell never to fight again.

. . . . . .

[Lentando.]

Among four thousand killed and wounded the two boys lay. Over all the field where the frost of death had so heavily fallen, the white, bitter frost of earth came to crust dark locks with whiteness to match the brows that death had already touched to utmost pallor and clearness.

The very groans of the dying froze on the chill air.

[Maestoso.]

In the light of a new day the old colonel went out over the field of the dead to look for his boys. Side by side he found them. They had dragged themselves close together. They had grasped hands in the dark hour of death. With returning love and a trust in each other had come love and trust in all the world.

Each had talked of his home, of his mother, of the strange, beautiful beyond, to which they had now bravely marched hand in hand.

The old colonel, reaching down to feel if there was any warmth in their silent hearts, cast from him, as if they burned his fingers, two pictured faces. Though one was stricken with a bullet and one clotted with blood, the wide eyes still looked smilingly forth.

But in that supreme hour to the young soldiers, one woman's faithlessness in the battle of life seemed of no more import than the firing of a blank cartridge amidst the thunder of heavy artillery.

ALCOHOL AND CRIME.

BY F. L. OSWALD, M. D.

A MEMORABLE FUNERAL.

It has often been asserted that alcohol hurts the head rather than the heart, and the maudlin sentimentality that marks certain stages of the stimulant fever may really often have been mistaken for a symptom of an amiable disposition. Habitual intemperance, however, as often engenders a temper that can be described as brutal only for lack of a stronger term, and hardly without an injustice to our instinct-guided fellow creatures. Parental affection frequently prevails against the less noble propensities even in beasts of prey, and neither a wolf nor a grizzly bear would have been capable of the outrage which Mr. Robert King, a Christian citizen of New York city, committed under the influence of liquor.

His passion for strong drink often caused him to neglect his home, though his wife was forbearing to a fault, and his daughter Mamie was the pet of all her teachers and neighbors. Her mother says she was the best girl a woman ever had, and when she fell sick the poorest of her acquaintances forgot their own troubles and spent hours at the bedside of the wan-faced child.

On the nineteenth of April Mamie died. Her father had been spending that day at a beer shop and did not return the next morning, but the friends of the family gathered at his home, No. 450 West 17th Street, and covered the little coffin with flowers. "I cannot imagine where Robert can be," said Mrs. King; "my boy has been looking for him everywhere and I don't know what to make of it."

A few minutes after Robert King explained the enigma by lurching into the room with a shower of blasphemies. He was covered with mud, and knocked down a table near the door of the bedroom. "Hand's a quarter," he hiccoughed, "what the—" noticing the crowd of visitors, "what the blankety blast-furnace are ye all trying to do—get out of this, now!"

"Be still, father," said his sixteen-year old daughter Alice.

"Still nothing!" shouted King, "I'll show you who's boss in this ranch," giving his sleeves a suggestive twist that made his guests retreat to the furthest corner of the room.

"Oh, Bob, please behave, don't act like that with your little girl dead, and before all these ladies."

The reply was a blow that caused the poor woman to stagger back against the wall, covering her bleeding face with both hands.

"I'll teach ye who's boss here," yelled the ruffian, knocking down the coffin and kicking it all to pieces, and then, snatching up one of the shivered boards, he brandished it like a tomahawk, and made a rush towards the horror-stricken spectators, who ran to the door, upsetting tables and chairs in the struggle for precedence.

"Oh, father! father!" moaned his daughter, but in the next moment she was floored by a blow between the eyes and kicked savagely till her shrieks were echoed by the women who had huddled together at the head of the stairs. Only then Mrs. King, fearing the loss of another child, threw up a window and yelled for help. Policeman Haggerty of the West Twentieth street station rushed to the rescue and caught King just as he was going to brain Alice with the leg of a broken chair.

After a desperate struggle the officer overpowered the brute and contrived to drag him to the station house; but the next day Justice Simms, of the Jefferson Market court, released the unspeakable baboon to "give him a chance to attend his daughter's funeral," and in consideration of the fact that the prisoner's bar-room friends had persuaded his wife to withdraw her complaint. Neither his wife nor his daughter would go to court; and perhaps they were right. It was enough for them to know that their darling had effected her escape from a land of licensed poisons, and would no longer care who shared the spoils of vice, or how many hirelings competed for a rum-seller's bribe by palliating the bestialities of intoxication.

"EXHILARATING EFFECTS."

On the same day when Robert King broke the coffin of his daughter and kicked her remains across the floor, a number of Chicago mechanics assembled at the home of William Condon, No. 4806 Justine street, to celebrate his birthday with a keg of beer. As the contents of the keg ebbed, the spirit of controversy rose higher and higher, till Richard Burke thought it his duty to reprove a political heresy by pulling a dirk knife and shaking it under the nose of his host. Condon, however, repeated his assertion, and his guest then ripped out the bowels of his unrepenting friend, who died before the appalled neighbors could summon a physician. Yet neither Condon nor his visitors had indulged in anything stronger than lager beer, that delightful beverage which, according to the sworn statement of a committee of its manufacturers, "may exhilarate but never produces the characteristic effects of intoxication."

THE DINGESS GRAVEYARD.

The lawlessness of the western alcohol towns is frequently ascribed to the abnormal social conditions of a new settlement, and it is interesting to note the effects of open rumshops on a formerly law-abiding community like the village of Dingess, in the mountains of West Virginia. The county (Mingo) has enforced prohibition for years, and given the circuit court little trouble, but the completion of the Norfolk & Western Railroad evolved a number of little mining towns that defied the laws, open bars being tolerated "for the encouragement of industry"—and a few other things, to judge from the following report: "Winfield, W. Va., April 20, 1895. There may be worse places in the United States than Dingess, in Mingo county, but they are not known here. Ever since the Dingess tavern keepers have begun to sell whisky openly crimes have increased till now life in the little mining town has become almost unbearable. On pay-day hundreds of men get drunk, and for hours the streets are filled with drunken, fighting men, who frequently fire their revolvers in all directions. On the north side of the hill above town is a graveyard in which nine men recently killed in this reckless manner lie dead. A half score more are buried elsewhere, and the number of wounded must aggregate one hundred." The press correspondent mildly adds that the place ought to be incorporated with a view of mitigating that remarkable state of affairs.

"THE ARMENIAN CRISIS IN TURKEY."

A Review.

BY CYRUS HAMLIN, D. D.

"The Armenian Crisis in Turkey," by Frederick Davis Greene, for several years resident in Armenia, should be an epoch-making book. We do not wonder that the third edition of ten thousand is already called for, nor will the press stop until it has issued many tens of thousands. Many who have read it have purchased it in large numbers for distribution. Three thousand copies have been sent to England, and it will probably be reprinted in French and German.

The immediate occasion of the book is the massacre of the innocent and unarmed Armenians of Sassoun, a district containing many villages. The first of the eleven chapters of the book is devoted to that awful tale. Nothing in human history is more infernal.

But the great value of the book consists in the bringing together a mass of facts in relation to Turkey that the world does not know and which it ought to know. The policy of repression and destruction of the Christian element is unveiled. The topics treated are too numerous to be compressed into this short notice. The tenth chapter answers the question, "Who are the Armenians?" The eleventh chapter considers "Americans in Turkey," and an appendix gives us a precious bit of American diplomacy in Turkey. It is not strange at all that the Turks despise Americans when their own government does nothing to secure their rights or the slightest respect to our treaties. Under this administration an American in Turkey has become one who has no rights which any Turk is bound to respect. Another book is needed on the violations of treaty rights and the destruction of American property and the gross discrimination against Americans as compared with other nations.

But this book brings Turkey before the world in her true character, and proves by indisputable facts that license and blood are the means by which she intends to oppress and destroy her Christian subjects.

A GLIMPSE OF "THE BONNIE TOON O' EDINBORO."

BY M. A. WADDELL RODGER.

Edinburgh in some respects is more like a French than a British town. Most of the new streets consist of blocks of substantial stone houses, four or five stories high, and all exactly alike. These are flats of various sizes, a central stone stairway being used by all the occupants. Sitting rooms, with closet bedrooms, are common, and are much used by students.

Boarders pay so much per week for rooms, light, heat and service (the service includes cooking, dining-room service and care of rooms). The advantages of this method are that the boarder can choose his menu and enjoy a privacy almost equal to that of his own home, while the landlady has the same privileges, and is not fearful that her boarder is dissatisfied with his table. This unique method is common throughout England and Scotland. When the boarder is a bachelor his landlady consults him daily as to his preferences for dinner, buys all his supplies and hands him his bills on Saturday night. In Edinburgh, in winter, a large sitting room and bedroom comfortably and tastefully furnished, with light, heat, service, and in a good quarter of the city, may be secured for four dollars per week. In summer the cost is less.

The price of food is higher in Britain than in America. This is especially true of fruits, vegetables and meat; a good roast costs about thirty cents per pound, and even the lowest grades of stewing meat cost seventeen and eighteen cents per pound. "Puddings" may be called the Scottish national dish. One store alone in Edinburgh boasts that it annually sells several tons of puddings; they are of three varieties, black, fruit and plain; black puddings are made by filling skins, such as are used for sausages, with blood and suet, seasoned with salt and pepper. Plain puddings consist of skins stuffed with oatmeal and suet. Of course a haggis (a sheep's stomach) stuffed as above is a prime dish. Oysters are always high, often $1.50 per dozen. A brace of grouse can be bought for $1.50 in November. Yankee pie is unknown in Britain, the nearest approach to it being small apple tarts. British pies are made by filling a dish about two inches in depth with fruit, then covering the top with a thin layer of pastry.

An American is quite embarrassed by the number of meals which he is expected to dispose of (all classes eat at least four times a day) and if visiting aristocratic friends, he almost concludes that men live to eat instead of eating to live. About 7:30 a. m. the maid brings to your room a cup of tea, breakfast follows at 8:30 or 9, luncheon at 1 p. m.; between four and five tea is brought into the drawing room; at 6 p. m. the gong sounds for dinner which usually consists of six or seven courses and occupies between one and two hours; between nine and ten tea and coffee are brought with sweet crackers to the drawing room.

Every day fish-wives come up from Leith and New Haven with large baskets of "caller herrin" upon their backs. They look quite picturesque in their short blue flannel gowns and white caps—not hat or bonnet. It is said that the fish-wife carries the purse and gives her "gude man" just what she considers enough for pocket money. A modern chronicler deplores this fact, which he terms a relic of barbarism. He also adds "the boats are generally the property of the fishermen, who are often possessed of considerable means"; but he fails to see the connection between this fact and the "gude-wife's" carrying the purse.

One of the prettiest sights in Edinburgh is to see the Camerons (the garrison at the castle) out on parade in the park. They wear the unique Highland costume, a skirt of bright tartan, a white jacket over which a tartan sash is crossed, tartan stockings, reaching to the uncovered knee, short, white gaiters and a tartan glengarry cap completing the tout ensemble. They march in perfect step to the beat of the drum and the drone of the bagpipes, and never fail to have many admiring onlookers.

The street cars, or "trams," as they are called in Scotland, are constructed to carry forty persons, twenty inside and twenty on top of the car; the traveler pays according to the distance he travels. But let him not delude himself with the vain thought that the cars are for his accommodation; not at all; the public exists for the accommodation of the trams. For instance, the bell rope which indicates to the driver that the train is to be stopped is outside the car, and can be reached by the conductor only. You inform the conductor where you wish to stop, but, poor fellow, how can he remember where forty people (newcomers constantly getting off and on) wish to stop! The consequence is that until you become acquainted with the streets you are always taken two or three blocks past your destination. This is especially annoying in the evening, nor do the street lamps assist, for instead of painting the names of the streets on the lamps they are painted half way up the building on the street corner, and to read them after dark would necessitate the pedestrian's carrying a stepladder and an electric light. Even after you become acquainted with the streets and signal to the conductor that you wish to stop, if you happen to be near the point at which fresh horses are taken on, he coolly carries you a block past your street, calmly explaining that "the horses will stop in a minit or twa"!

The Scottish character possesses many fine traits, but gallantry is not one of them. If a Scotchman jostles a lady on the street he rarely apologizes. During a long stay in Edinburgh and much riding on the street cars, I never but once saw a gentleman offer his seat to a lady (he was probably an Englishman or an American). Half a dozen sturdy students will keep their seats while white-haired ladies, old enough to be their mothers, stand for half an hour. Again and again I have seen delicate young mothers, with two or three packages and a heavy baby in arms, stand until offered a seat by one of their own sex, while seven or eight corpulent, well-dressed gentlemen (?) sat at ease.

A few years ago when the Woman's Medical College was established in Edinburgh the lady students were hooted and even stoned on the streets by the male medical students. But mark how the world moves! To-day the great University of Edinburgh, with its three thousand students, has opened its doors to women on an equal footing with men. Three years ago a lady who might have attended a class lecture in any department would have been hissed.

Drinking, both moderate and immoderate, is much more common in the British Isles than in the United States. On holidays it is not uncommon to see the saloons half full of women of the lower classes. About two-thirds of the grocers in Edinburgh sell liquor with their groceries; this has greatly increased the habit of liquor drinking among women.

No less than six hundred and fifty thousand dollars are annually expended in charity in Edinburgh, yet during the cold, raw months of November and December you see numbers of barefooted, ragged, hungry looking children on the streets, and in the lower quarters men and women reeling along intoxicated. Says Mr. D. Lewis, a prominent philanthropist, "The drink traffic counteracts our labors to an almost incredible extent." And for the strength and respectability of the drink traffic in Scotland, the church is largely responsible. Brewers and saloon-keepers or "wine merchants," as they are euphoniously termed, are permitted to be not only members, but office-holders in the Scottish church.

Edinburgh teems with historic memories. Who that has read Scott's "Heart of Midlothian" will not visit the spot where the old prison stood to find set in the pavement a large, well shaped heart of stone. Near by is St. Giles' Cathedral in which the doughty Jenny Geddes hurled the stool at the Dean's head.

Not far distant is the famous grass market where for so many years the gibbet did its cruel work, the place now marked by a stone cross within a circle. From 1661 to 1688, as the Martyr's Monument in the historic Grayfriar's churchyard testifies "were one way or other murdered and destroyed for the same cause about eighteen thousand; of whom were executed at Edinburgh about one hundred of noblemen, gentlemen, ministers and others, noble martyrs for Jesus Christ, most of them lie here." The part of the churchyard is still pointed out in which "for five months, without the slightest shelter from the elements, for the greater part of that time, and without other food than four ounces of bread daily and a mouthful of water, were kept several hundred Covenanters."

It is pleasant to turn from the contemplation of such barbarity to the National Gallery (free and open daily) with its valuable collection of works of the greatest British and European artists. The fine museums of science and art and natural history are also free and open daily. Edinburgh boasts of one of the best and most perfectly equipped free public libraries in the world, the gift of the Scottish-American millionaire, Andrew Carnegie.

The number of endowed grammar schools in Edinburgh is gratifying. Scotland has also an excellent public school system of which she is justly proud.

IN THE SOUTHLAND.

DEAR UNION SIGNAL:—On the evening of April 22d I closed my eyes in Chicago with nothing to indicate that the blessed spring was near except a hardly perceptible swelling of buds on the trees and a deepening of green on the grass patches and in the parks. I opened my eyes the next morning upon trees all aquiver with the dainty coloring of newborn foliage; with apple buds glowing in pink and white and here and there bursting into full blossom. It was a more forcible object lesson than I had ever before had of what an easy thing it will be for us to close our eyes upon the cold of earth's night and open them in the land of eternal spring.

We swept through the famous blue grass region of Kentucky, and then entered the glorious fastnesses of the Tennessee Mountains. To any one it must have been a delightful ride; to one half starved for mountains it was "the glory that excelleth."

Imagine woods on either side, now starred with thousands of dogwood blossoms in all their milky whiteness; now glowing for acres with the purplish pink of the red-bud. There were wild cherry blossoms and crab apples galore, while the ground was starred with anemone, trillium, blue violets and other blooms unknown to my northern eyes. We followed wild mountain streams in their tumultuous dashings. We shot through innumerable tunnels and across innumerable bridges. We "wound about, and in and out," with a constantly growing sense of the "better farther on" until my senses were almost drowned in the gladness of life—life in God's eternal hills.

At Harriman Junction a crowd of white-ribboners boarded the train bound for the district convention at Dayton, and though I had never met one of them before, I soon knew all. Mrs. T. H. Thayer is the energetic and efficient district president, who arranged my route through Tennessee. My first stopping place was Rockwood, a town rich in minerals and possessing the largest furnace I have ever seen. Mrs. W. L. Moore, the county president, stopped with me.

A misunderstanding prevented my lecturing there that evening, but we were beautifully entertained and met the ladies the next afternoon in a meeting which laid the foundation for a union. On to the convention at Dayton after the meeting, where I delivered the two evening addresses and helped in the routine work, conducting also memorial services for Mrs. Woodbridge and Mrs. Lathrap. District organization is comparatively new in Tennessee, and the Dayton union but a year old, but great enthusiasm was aroused and several new members secured. From Dayton I went to Spring City, accompanied by the county president, Mrs. Curtiss, of Dayton. I spoke in the M. E. church to a very receptive audience, and took preliminary steps for an organization, which was completed the next day by Mrs. Curtiss.

Saturday I went to Harriman. Harriman, the Prohibition town of Tennessee—the northern city dropped down on southern soil! I had heard of it for so long that my expectations were of the highest, but they were more than realized, for a more beautiful little place it would be impossible to find anywhere. I had a glorious drive with my genial host, Dr. Cory, in the afternoon, and filled my soul with sweet sights and sounds and my arms with wild azalia and dogwood. In the evening I spoke in the colored church and organized a colored union of fifteen active and four honorary members. They received the gospel of the white ribbon with great enthusiasm and complimented me by giving the union my name. Sunday Mr. and Mrs. Thayer, Mrs. Moore and I, drove six miles back through the mountains to Kingston, the county seat and oldest town of eastern Tennessee. It was, for a short time, the capital of the state. It is a charmingly quaint place, but alas! it has the curse of the licensed saloon. I spoke in the M. E. church both afternoon and evening and met a union, organized for some time but inactive, after the evening address. Two new members were secured and they seemed inclined, as a whole, to take up the work with new vigor. The next morning we started at five o'clock for the drive to Harriman.

I wish all my readers could have had the experience of crossing the Clinch River, just before it empties into the Tennessee, in a ferry-boat, rowed by two men. Bridges are not common in that part of Tennessee, and it was an experience I shall not soon forget to see the horses driven upon the raft and to hear the soft swish of the water as we were slowly propelled across. I reached Harriman in time to address the students of the Temperance University at their chapel hour, and it was a most delightful pleasure to meet so many alert young minds in a university which is founded upon such broad principles, and must, from the very nature of the case, so largely influence the temperance work of the future. Monday evening I addressed the Harriman W. C. T. U. in their temple, and the next morning I retraced my steps to Sunbright, a little town on the highest point of the road, where a union had just been formed. I spoke to a most kind and attentive audience that evening, and the next afternoon met the new union and helped them to get started in departmental work. This union is a living proof of what one earnest, consecrated white-ribboner can do, since it is wholly through the effort of Mrs. I. J. Neil that it has been organized. A letter received from her only to-day says that nearly every woman in town has joined since my visit, and three other points in the county are ready for organization, Mrs. Neil being county president. From Sunbright I went back to Rockwood, and organized a small union Wednesday night, with the two Methodist ministers—North and South—as honorary members. The next day I spent in Chattanooga, drinking in the wonderful views from Lookout Mountain and Missionary Ridge.

Altogether, my Tennessee trip was a delight. I met hospitality of the truest type, and made friends whom I shall hope to retain forever. There is no field which seems to me more promising for our work in the near future. I went from Tennessee to Jackson, Miss. But I have already exceeded space limits, and besides, Mississippi demands a chapter by itself.

Yours in the joy of service,

KATHARINE LENTE STEVENSON,
Nat. Cor. Sec.

A REMINISCENCE OF DECORATION DAY.

DEAR UNION SIGNAL:—The work of the department for soldiers and sailors, which took definite shape in the year 1883, was carried forward most vigorously in the early days. Great advantage resulted from the establishment of headquarters in the city of New York, where ample room was afforded for the prosecution of the varied lines of effort necessary to come into touch with the "boys in blue" connected with our government in its military and naval services. From that busy locality on Fourteenth street, lady associates aided me in preparation of petitions to Congress and in the vast labor connected with reception and distribution of barrels and boxes of literature which we placed in ports and ships in the harbor of New York, as well as transmitted through the mails all over the land.

We held meetings of all kinds in our spacious hall, entertained sailors with concerts and festivals, and decorated the veterans on special occasions with flowers which they wore proudly in their buttonholes as they marched with banners to the sound of martial music in the grand military parades.

This beautiful room was a center for prayer and testimony; for gospel temperance and prohibition meetings; here were heard the voices of Fisk, Dickie, Demorest; of Willard, Barnes, Burt and hosts of other grand men and women, consecrated to the cause of freedom from humanity's chief curse; here receptions were held to honor the dignitaries connected with the great reform in other lands, as well as in America.

The 30th of May was always a notable occasion—the place being radiant with fragrant blossoms so appreciated by our soldier boys, who made that day sacred to the memories of their dead comrades. It was our pleasure to contribute largely in this hallowed flower mission as well as by our presence at their more formal ceremonials.

All of us who thus engaged in an attempt to honor the "living heroes" who had risked their lives for their country were women who recalled vividly the horrors of our struggle to maintain the Union, some of us having helped by our own personal sacrifices to preserve it from disruption. We were not less patriotic than those whose interests we had at heart, since we had given our best beloved, who were laid under the sod by war's cruel slaughter or received back to desolated homes the mutilated bodies of manly forms that we had sent forth so splendidly endowed with natural gifts and spiritual graces.

In addition to these oblations on our country's altar many women themselves entered into service, going to the front or to the hospitals, working in our sanitary and Christian commissions. In consideration of so much self-surrender by women, the happy thought came to us at headquarters, Why should we not have a "Woman's Memorial Day"? No time could be more appropriate, so it came to pass that May 30, 1887, was observed by us in commemoration of "the patriotic women of the late war."

The suggestion met with hearty response from a host of distinguished men and women, to whom invitations were sent to unite with us in celebrating the day. All the daily papers of New York noticed this new and unique occasion in complimentary terms.

The papers written and read by their authors indicated the extent of the work undertaken by American women, in coöperation with men, on the many lines necessary to carry forward a war of such gigantic proportions, and having such a tremendous issue at stake. Sketches of such noted women as Dorothea Dix, Clara Barton, Anna Lee Carroll and others prominent at that time were presented.

It is fitting that the women of America who, in that eventful period in the nation's history, dedicated their lives and fortunes to the holy cause of freedom, should have an anniversary day when their devoted, self-sacrificing efforts shall receive that meed of praise of which they are worthy, whose memory has been almost suffered to pass into oblivion. Shall the children of this great Republic be allowed to forget that their mothers were heroines? Shall not the tears they shed, the toils they bore, the love they gave, be rehearsed for the emulation of the daughters of our households, who, did they know the titles to nobility earned for them, would strive to make themselves worthy of such illustrious ancestry?

It becomes more and more evident that there were multitudes of brave, loyal and patriotic women in the South and at the North whose intelligent, efficient work in the great civil contest has received but scanty recognition, and whose memories must be recorded, if at all, by their own sex, whose wont it has been unselfishly to praise the men who bled and died for the country.

Let us never forget to honor the men who moistened the soil with their blood; let us build monuments to the dead, and cherish with tender care the few living heroes. Gladly will we continue to perpetuate these memorial days; but let us not forget the women who have "staid by the stuff" in all perilous days of our past history.

GREAT MEETING OF WOMEN IN ST. LOUIS.

DEAR UNION SIGNAL:—The Mississippi Valley Congress of Women in St. Louis, May 2–5, was a success in every way. It goes without saying that the entire arrangements were by the W. C. T. U., led by Mrs. Ingalls.

First, let it be noted that all meetings were held in large, prominent churches. Two days of congress in the elegant new Delmar Avenue Congregational church, where the authorities were not only willing, but put in electric lights and seated the beautiful galleries expressly for the occasion, finishing the work only the night before the congress opened.

The last day of the meeting, devoted to the Missouri Equal Suffrage Association, was held in the First Baptist church, where a full corps of state officers were elected; Mrs. E. P. Johnson, of St. Louis, president.

The day before at Delmar Avenue, a Mississippi Valley Council of Women was formed to be auxiliary to the National Council of Women, Mrs. E. B. Ingalls, president. Notice that all these meetings were held in large, prominent churches where the expense was almost nothing. The Young Woman's Conference was also held in a large, central church. On both occasions our women were invited to speak in many churches.

The point worthy of note is, secure churches. Do not hire halls. There is not a town in the United States where the churches cannot be secured if the women will ask for them rightly—and keep asking.

Miss Anthony and Miss Shaw were in attendance through all the meetings, and the "sweet reasonableness" of their arguments converted many.

Just before "Aunt Susan" rose to speak seventy-five little boys and girls of the L. T. L. (mostly white, but sufficient of black to give color) marched down the central aisle and then across the platform, each giving Miss Anthony an American Beauty rose, one for each year of her brave, unselfish life. Miss Anthony was much moved, as these little atoms, scarce more than babies, all dressed in best "bib and tucker" looked up into her motherly face and presented the roses, yellow and white. With voice a little choked she said, "This is the very prettiest tribute I ever received."

On Saturday night, at the close of the congress, an elegant banquet was tendered Miss Anthony; the first ever given a woman in St. Louis. About two hundred plates were laid. The toasts were appropriate, and the responses were witty, tender and flattering. The whole affair, meeting and banquet, made friends for the woman's cause, which is the human cause.

AN ANSWER TO "MOTHERHOOD AND CITIZENSHIP."*

Dear Union Signal:—That such a solid publication as the Forum should sanction in its pages the vapid reasoning quoted below, is our excuse for this article.

Hear ye, forsooth:

"Every man who legislates has been conceived by woman, has been influenced by her life, her thoughts, her spirit during his pre-natal existence—has been, in short, moulded by her, and if he grows up to make laws which depress or degrade her . . . there must be some deplorable lack in woman which should be remedied ere weightier matters concerning the state are conceded to her dealing by the conferring (?) upon her of suffrage. She has no right to ask to be made ruler over more things until she has proved herself equal to making her sons' training such that they shall legislate properly."

Such, as nearly verbatim as is consistent with conciseness, is the reasoning. Let us see. "Every man who legislates has been conceived by woman," but no less was he procreated by man.

"Has been influenced by her life spirits, etc., during his pre-natal existence," but pre-natal influence is not more certain and potent than heredity from the father, both of physical characteristics and mental and moral bent.

As to the rest of the argument above quoted concerning the lack of the sons, their consequent bad legislation and the unworthiness of woman upon this account to exercise suffrage, its refutation must be found in answering these questions. 1, Is the woman [mother] alone responsible for the lack in her sons here spoken of? 2, Should not the man [father] share the responsibility and blame of the sons' "incapacity" and "failure" and "bad legislation"?

No, the mother is not alone responsible. Shall the blame of the lack in the men of affairs of to-day be laid upon their mothers alone? Where were the fathers? Not all dead, surely. If so, we prithee, have them excused. We are constrained to ask in language similar to that in Casabianca, "The man, oh, where was he?"

Remember, that we should ever look at how things ought to be and not how they are. Because a father does not, as a rule, have as good opportunity from the conditions of life in one century of coming in contact with and moulding his child, it does not follow that he will always be thus handicapped. The woman must bear the children, and shame to the man who shirks his share of their training. The father will ever be, in the nature of things, allied irretrievably with the mother as a worker upon the character and destinies of the children. Of course lack in the one can never be remedied by faithfulness in the other. We would not have the mother's responsibility less, but the father's more.

When a sculptor begins a work he first moulds a "cast" of that which he hopes thereafter to embody in imperishable form; likewise parents work in the child, as it were, a "cast" of the future man or woman. They should both work upon it to properly perfect it.

There is no good reason why a mother more than a father should render this moulding, except the one perhaps, that she is with them more. Well, could he not be with them more than he is if he tried real hard? As hard for instance as he does to "see a man" or get to a football game?

True, business is often a truthful plea, for "Americanites," a term coined by a clever modern writer, meaning the business hurry and worry which is so characteristic of our civilization, is about to do away with family companionship and the Home with a big H, which is the atèlier of these sculptors of humanity.

"What is your idea of happiness?" was once asked by the late Dr. Holmes of a friend. "Four feet on a fender," was the unique reply, and this should obtain in the Home. Not only the "four feet" should be there, but all the "little feet that such long years must wander on through hopes and fears," to make this "wandering on" quite safe.

If the fathers have not heretofore shared in the "shaping and training" of their sons they should at least bear part of the blame of their "incapacity and failure" and "bad legislation." If the father be in part responsible for the status attained by his sons, and we affirm that every rightminded father will agree that he is so, how unjust then is the plea to withhold suffrage from one-half for fault of the whole?

What a vapid argument to use to deprive a man of suffrage, would the foregoing be, at any rate, but, arguing thus, if he be in fault as to the proper discharge of his duties in "training and shaping" the son, should he not, arguing thus, we say, be deprived of suffrage? Faugh! That a woman, too, should use such arguments against woman's suffrage. The sex needs freeing and uplifting, surely.

*Title of an article in the Forum by Mrs. K. Trask, January, 1895.

Dear Co-workers:—"The Question Box" as a feature of public meetings is a thought-sharpener that perhaps does not receive its just measure of attention. May I not throw out as a suggestion, that once in two or three months a Question Box meeting be arranged for in local unions at which all sorts of W. C. T. U. nuts are brought forward for judicious cracking? Then, if the secretary would make a note of some of the best questions with the answers and send them to Mother Experience, it would give a fresh impetus to our column of

QUESTIONS AND ANSWERS.

Q.—If an honorary member and a Prohibitionist wishes to show his allegiance to both the W. C. T. U. and the party at the same time and place, how may it be done in good form?

A.—By putting on the white rose tied with the white ribbon.

Q.—I have been an invalid for two years and so many people have recommended wine, malt and other liquors as a tonic to build up and strengthen me. It seems as if the local unions might agitate this matter and educate the people, thus saving other weak ones from a similar temptation. Can you bring it before them in The Union Signal?

A.—Yes, indeed. We are always glad to write line upon line and precept upon precept. Ignorance is a large factor in this wrong advising, and yet in one way and another our local unions are hammering away on this very thing. True it is that invalids need a tonic. Fermented wine and other alcoholic liquors are not tonics, but always "mockers," since they pretend to upbuild while in reality they tear down. God's wine, the juice of the grape, "unleavened," that is, unfermented, never mocks. Why do not more of us use it medicinally and advocate its use? It is easy of preparation, not costly and always beneficial, refreshing and unhurtful.

Q.—Has a secretary any right to draw an order upon the treasurer, unless it has been voted to by the society?

A.—No. Where a society has voted to pay a certain rental the treasurer has the right to draw that money from month to month, without any further order from the society. The by-laws usually say that the treasurer shall pay out money only upon the order of the president and secretary, but, if a bill is brought before the society and the society vote instructing the treasurer to pay that bill, she needs no further order, the minutes of the meeting being her voucher.

Q.—Did Frances E. Willard write "How I Learned to Ride a Bicycle" for the Sunday newspapers?

A.—NO. I wish I could make that "no" far-reaching and convincing enough to be heard by all whose hearts have been pained by the suggestion that our Chieftain has given such indorsement at any time to Sunday papers. Miss Willard's bicycle articles were sold to a syndicate, which in turn sold them to newspapers having a Sunday edition, and they were published in that edition because newspaper editors have a way of putting their brightest and newest matter in their First day papers to make them popular. As she had not thought that her articles would be published in the Sunday papers, it did not occur to her to stipulate against such publication. It seems a little strange that having watched her Christian career for so long, any religious paper or person should so easily take alarm at a seeming lapse. Had the name of Frances Willard ever been willingly signed to an article written for a Sunday paper, the fact would have been seized on and so blazoned abroad by the paper itself that there would have been left no room for doubt.

Q.—Why does The Union Signal recommend the use of grape-juice when our pledge discriminates against apple-juice?

A.—Because, as a rule, grape-juice is bottled while hot, and thus the air is excluded, while apple-juice is exposed to the air and the sugar slowly converted into alcohol.

Q.—Is sweet cider alcoholic?

A.—Yes. Even new "sweet cider" contains from one to three per cent of alcohol.

Q.—If we discard apple-juice because of possible harm, why not discard grape-juice?

A.—Because of the reasons just stated: Apple-juice is commonly (and purposely) so conditioned that alcohol may form, while grape-juice is preserved on the same principle as all canned fruit.

Mother Experience.

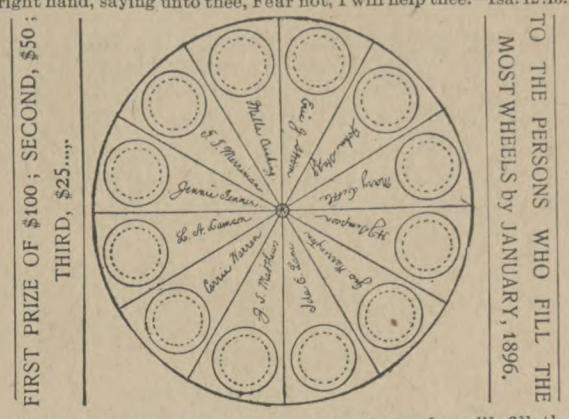
BY MATILDA B. CARSE.

Prayer.—Lord, be thou my helper.—Psalm 30:30.

Promise.—I, the Lord thy God, will hold thy right hand, saying unto thee, Fear not, I will help thee.—Isa. 12:13.



One Hundred Dollars to the person who will fill the most Wheels in the next six months! Was there ever a more generous offer, or one easier of accomplishment? Last week we surprised our friends by announcing the kind offer of Mr. W. Hale Ramsey, of Montreal, Can., of $50 to the person who would fill the most Wheels by January 1, 1896. Another friend now comes forward and doubles the amount, making it $100. We would be glad to give his name, but he requests it shall not be made public. He is a resident of Chicago, and by no means a rich man—except in good works—but he feels a deep interest in the success of the Temple, and thinks the offer of three prizes to the three persons who fill the most Wheels in the next six months, a capital idea; only he thinks the first prize should be $100, and finally decided to give it himself. The first prize will now be $100; the second, $50; the third, $25. The Wheels must be sent as soon as filled. A report will be made every month, giving the names of the three individuals on our books who have filled the most Wheels. All Wheels received after May 23 will be counted. Beside the three prizes in cash the usual premiums will be given to all.

We are counting greatly on the work of the boys and girls when the schools close, so we are getting ready some new premiums for those filling Temple Wheels. No doubt some enterprising boy or girl will capture some of the cash prizes as well. One premium for little girls which we have arranged for, is the new jointed paper doll, dressed beautifully in crêpe paper. The list price for it is fifty cents, but we will send it, postpaid, in a nice box, to any little girl who fills a Wheel. Next week we will announce some new prizes for boys.

Little Louise Doocy, Pittsfield, Ills., writes: "I filled my Wheel in one morning. I am not yet six years old. This is the second letter I ever wrote." We want a whole army of little girls like Louise, who can fill a Wheel in one morning and get in return one of Dennison's beautiful jointed paper dollies dressed in the latest fashion, beside helping the Temple ever so much. Another dear little girl, Mollie Wood, of Baltimore, Md., writes such a nice letter, embodying a beautiful spirit. We give it entire. "Mamma says I may send you $5 for the Temple. I saved it by wearing my last season's hat all winter. Cousin May trimmed it over for me. Mamma says she thinks you will send me a souvenir spoon and a Columbian medal. I am ten years old, and have a little sister, Frances Willard. Please send me three Temple Wheels and a mite-box. Mamma says we must help you to pay for the Temple. I inclose stamps and $5." Another letter is before me, written by a little boy. Oh, the pathos of it! It brings blinding tears to my eyes, but it nerves my heart with fresh courage to work with renewed energy for the overthrow of the monstrous traffic which is blighting so many homes in the land. The letter referred to is as follows: "I send you ten cents in a Wheel; it is all the money I own. My father loves rum better than mother and five children, so we have no home. Ask God to help. This is my first letter."

Miss M. C. Young sends $19.50 for the Ocean Grove W. C. T. U. This completes their pledge of $100. The Wichita, Kan., W. C. T. U., through Mrs. Mary A. Fellows, sends $10, which completes their $100 pledge. The Hygiene, Col., W. C. T. U. sends $5 through Mrs. Nellie A. Goss. This completes their $100 pledge. Mrs. Goss writes: "The union now numbers but eight faithful to the work in this rural district, and our largest membership has never exceeded eighteen." All honor to this faithful little band; "May its tribe increase." The wide awake president of the New London, Conn., W. C. T. U., Mrs. A. C. Fenner, sends $42. This completes the union's pledge of $100 to the Frances Mary Payn tablet, and $18 over, which is to be applied to the following memorials: $3 each to the Whittier clock, the Madam Willard window, Yolande Ames' window, tablets for Mrs. Mary A. Woodbridge, Mrs. Mary T. Lathrap and Miss Mary Allen West. We wish just here to remind our friends that all these memorials are very much behind, and unless more money is advanced we cannot complete them. Mr. Lathrap has pledged $100 toward his wife's tablet, and Mr. Woodbridge has promised to make good any shortage on Mrs. Woodbridge's. Both these noble women's names should be placed in Willard Hall without delay.

All orders for Temple Wheels and mite-boxes and everything pertaining to the Temple should be addressed to Mrs. Matilda B. Carse, The Temple, Chicago.

DEFENSELESS.

BY HAZEL HOWARD.

Alone, I weep o'er my graves to-night,
Where my treasures lie buried low;
To heaven, I lift my tear stained face,
O God! thy comfort show.

On my country's altar my love I laid,
That her bond might all be free;
His brave young life their ransom paid,
But he never came back to me.

I shall meet the love of my long lost youth
In our home all bright and fair;
But my boy? the hope of my failing years?
"No drunkard enters there."

We fought, my fatherless boy and I,
Our country's shameless foe;
But mothers and boys have weapons few;
Our conflict thousands know.

So, near our home a trap they set,
Beside our school another;
The law and power the enemy had—
So little, the widowed mother.

"No chance for boys," I hear him cry,
In shame and anguish deep;
"I'll take my life to end the strife,"
Do you wonder that I weep?

I clasp my arms o'er my darling's grave,
My child so bright and gay;
There's one safe place for tempted boys
In our own free land to-day.

Alone all the years of my life must pass;
Why need I longer live?
For my country's need and my country's greed,
Thank God, I've no more to give.

I shall meet my long lost love again,
But my boy? God's just and true!
No cruel war or licensed fiend
Shall crush my heart anew.

"PRISONERS OF HOPE."

BY LADY HENRY SOMERSET.

[An interview with the Warden of Sherborne Reformatory Prison for Women. Condensed from The Woman's Signal.]

I descended from the train on the platform of Framingham station, twenty miles from Boston, on my way to visit the Sherborne prison for women. On the platform there awaited me, Mrs. Johnson, the superintendent, and, indeed, one of the originators of the scheme of the well-known reformatory prison, and we were soon in her carriage driving through the little town and up the country hill that led to the great red brick building which surmounts it.

"I shall take you first of all to see my cows," said Mrs. Johnson, "for the prison has attached to it a farm of three hundred acres, and I know of nothing that has helped me so much in my work among the women as this fact. I have long believed that the return to nature is often the most helpful teaching that can be given to poor, wayward human beings, and I have proved it so here, again and again."

We were soon driven through an archway that led to the cow stable, and ranged in long lines were the beautiful creatures who were the pets of the superintendent and the inmates of the prison.

She proceeded to show me the methods by which the cows were fed in winter, and to explain the excellent sanitary arrangements which keep the stable so neat and wholesome, showing that she had a mind not confined alone to endeavoring to uplift humanity, but that she was also able to grasp the practical details of agriculture and had that sense of a duty toward every living thing that should make the welfare of the beast an important part of every right-minded human being's creed.

The garden was next shown me, with its long rows of hot-houses, in which some of the women are employed; and then at last we reached the door of her own house, which is detached from the main building, but communicates with it by a passage on the second floor. Here, as we laid aside our wraps, Mrs. Johnson said, "Now you are in prison, and you must be prepared to spend a long day tramping round the different corridors and rooms, because I mean to show you everything." I told her that we had come for that purpose and were only too willing to follow her lead.

"Last year," she said, as we walked through the long broad corridor, after she had unlocked the first huge door (that being the only sign that had as yet presented itself to us to remind us of the nature of the building through which we walked), "our seventeenth annual report was presented. I have been here now eleven years, and we have at this moment three hundred and fifteen women in prison."

As she spoke she opened a door on the right and we entered a long school-room, beautifully fitted with little tables, desks and blackboards.

"This," she said, "is where the prisoners learn to read and write, who cannot do so when they come. Such education is not compulsory, but we find they consider it an inestimable boon. We teach foreigners the English language. The other day I got a letter from a woman with only these words: 'I have nothing to say, but I want you to see that I can read and write, because I learned it at Sherborne.' We have an extensive lending library, and we manage it on the same lines as the best libraries outside the prison, so that when the women leave here they are able to get books and to understand how to sign their names and ask for what they need and procure the reading they want. We give them large pockets, so that they can carry the book in which they are interested, and at all odd times while they are waiting for meals, before chapel or during the intervals of work, they take out their books and read instead of gossiping. We find it far better, and they become deeply interested in what they learn in this way. We have books of all sorts, fiction, travels and history, graded according to the capacity of the readers. On nights when we do not have school we have club meetings and temperance meetings, and in one or other of the divisions something takes place here every evening of the year."

From the schoolroom we went into one of the great workrooms, where the women were busy with sewing machines driven by steam. The room was light and airy, and I noticed at once that a thoughtful care had, instead of putting bars before the windows, placed an iron lattice work behind the glass, so that it looked more like diamond panes than prison grating. Throughout the entire building these little touches tell one of the way in which every detail has been considered.

"I do not," said Mrs. Johnson, "ever give a woman the work to do to which she has been accustomed outside, but always try to teach her some new profession; for instance, if I get a cook here, I would sooner put her to needle-work or laundry, because she would then have a second string to her bow on leaving us, and I think it better for them entirely to change all the associations of their lives. We put all the women to the sewing-machine at first, because we find it steadies them, and the order of the work-room fits them for other occupations."

From the workroom we passed into the cells which are given to those of the first grade. If committed for a slight offence, however, they are allowed to skip over this ward, but if they return to prison for a second offence, they are put here at once. The long line of cells reminded one more of the ordinary prisons with which one is familiar, although the dainty cleanliness and little touches, such as a book, a little paper picture pinned on the wall, showed one that even here there was considerable kindness shown to the individual.

Each grade has its own dining-room. No. 1 is a large, spacious room, with immaculately clean deal tables. The dishes for supper were already laid, and the little china bowls and plates, cups and spoons were set with extraordinary regularity.

The second dining-room was on the same plan as the first, only that some plants ornamented the tables, and the china presented a much better appearance. The third division was as beautiful as anything that could be found in any home; a snow white tablecloth covered the board, and the china was immaculate and perfect. The spoons shone as they lay in their straight row, and the salt castors that stood before each plate were also as bright as silver. I have never seen anything more orderly than these long, well-appointed tables.

By this time we had reached Dormitory 4—a long line of small bedrooms, the doors of which consisted of the shutter work such as one finds in American summer hotels. In each little cell there was a neat bed; the mattresses made of rye straw are manufactured on the place. They are clean and soft and sweet. White sheets and white counterpanes; a little washstand and basin; a table, a small looking-glass and a chair were in each cell; and a jet electric light—for this is the only dormitory where such a luxury is allowed. The women who occupy this portion of the prison are permitted to have half an hour in their rooms before retiring to bed, and as I picked up an interesting book on one of their tables, I understood how great a luxury this must be to those who have been working manually all day.

"You know, I suppose, Mrs. Johnson," I said, "that you are accused of giving luxuries to prisoners, and that it is supposed that you are inculcating a wrong idea, namely, giving to those who have done wrong more privileges than to those who are perhaps struggling outside to do right."

"I know that," said Mrs. Johnson, "and I have read many of the criticisms that have been passed; but I have found that in order to reclaim women it is necessary that they should begin to understand the meaning of self-respect, how valuable every life is, and how essential it is that the possessor of the life should realize that it is precious. It is in little things that such self-respect is cultivated, and when they go out from here they are not contented then to live in squalor; they want to rise and better themselves, so that prison, instead of having a deteriorating, has a positively elevating effect."

"Yes," I answered, "a divine discontent is what many people need, and if you can implant that, of course you have done a great deal."

At this moment she opened a door of a large, square room with galleries running round it, which formed the recreation room of Division 4. A table with a red cover was in the center; chairs surrounded it and were grouped in different parts of the hall; bright plants stood in the windows; and canary birds warbled out a cheerful song. Over the principal doorway was the motto, "Temperance, Truth, Trust," and on the other the cabalistic sign, T. T. B. G. I looked inquiringly at the superintendent.

"That," she said, "is our watchword, 'Try to be good.'"

WHAT TO DO WITH CIDER.
A True Incident.

BY S. M. H.

"What can I do?" was the honest cry from my burdened heart one beautiful summer morning while working large lumps of golden butter for market. For some weeks I had had reason to fear that my husband, a reformed, and, we trusted, a converted man, was slowly going back to his cups. The year before he had put some barrels of cider in the cellar for vinegar. Several times of late he had passed to the cellar with a glass. I had spoken to him about it, but he turned away, saying he did not believe a little cider would hurt any one, and once added that it was his, and he should drink all he wanted of it. I knew that total abstinence was his only safety, but also that as he was a man of few words and very willful, only God could stop him.

Some things that had taken place the day before had wrung from my heart this cry, which only wives and mothers can understand who have seen their loved ones overcome by strong drink. "Take it to the Lord in prayer." This line of a hymn that had been sung in a recent prayer-meeting came to my mind as if in answer to my question, with this Scripture passage: "Casting all your care upon Him, for He careth for you."

I went into the spacious "rollway" where were the large cider barrels. As I looked upon them, I thought, "This certainly is my 'care,' and the great God has told me to cast it upon Him." Placing my hands upon the barrels nearest me, I said, "Here, Lord, is my 'care'; I cannot handle it, but Thou canst; from henceforth they are not mine but Thine. If Thou want the cider to be drank in this home, it may be; if not, in Thy name we forbid it."

I went back to my work with a song of assurance and victory. Days passed. I told no one of my struggle or victory, but sang my song while about my work. My husband, meanwhile, tried to drink some of the cider, but did not tell why he could not; but as we soon had a great abundance of the best vinegar we ever had to use and sell, I know Who accepted and protected His own.

How the universal heart of man blesses flowers! They are wreathed round the cradle, the marriage altar and the tomb. The Persian in the far East delights in their perfume, and writes his love in nosegays, while the Indian child of the far West claps his hands with glee as he gathers the abundant blossoms—the illuminated Scriptures of the prairies. The Cupid of the ancient Hindoos tipped his arrows with flowers, and orange flowers are a brida' crown with us,—a nation of yesterday. Flowers gar landed the Grecian altar, and hung in votive wreath before the Christian shrine. All these are appropriate uses. Flowers should deck the brow of the youthful bride, for they are in themselves a lovely type of marriage. They should twine around the tomb, for their perpetually renewed beauty is a symbol of the resurrection. They should festoon the altar, for their fragrance and their beauty ascend in perpetual worship before the Most High.—Mrs. L. M. Child.

FIGHTING THE FOE.

Long ago brave soldiers fought
For their country, as they ought,
In a time of need.
Can we help our country, too?
Yes, we can, with hearts so true,
And by kindly deed.

War is not so brave as peace;
Men and children need not cease
Fighting for the right.
Wrong at home and wrong at school,
Breaking law and love and rule,
That's the foe to fight!

FLOWERS IN BOY ALLEY.

BY MABEL GIFFORD.

(Concluded.)

"What is it?" the children questioned, and Dorell, leaning as far forward as she dared, wondered, "What is it? what in the world is it?"

"Why, it's a grass," said the girl a little scornfully, proud of her superior knowledge, and eyeing the slender strip of green with evident delight as she turned it this way and that and gently waved it up and down. "It's a grass; it's alive, it grew."

"Where'd it come from?" asked a boy who had just wriggled out from somewhere and joined the group.

"Up'n the fourth story," answered the girl. "There was a whole box of it. Nett brought it from the mission. I seed it the first day. You never could guess what it was then. Just little bitsy brown specks. An' Nett poked 'em down in that box of dirt an' put some water in an' set it in the winder. An' bimeby, this is what come up. Oh! but you'd oughter see a whole box full! She let me in one day when her marm and parp was off. Um! my eye, but you'd oughter seen it. An' jes' now," continued the narrator, "they had a fight up there an' smashed the winder an' the box fell down, an' we seed it, an' we all run out an' grabbed f'r it, an' Grip got it. Nett'll cry her eyes out."

A door further along groaned and shrieked and opened, and a girl about the age of the happy possessor of the grass blade, came slowly down the steps and approached the basement doorway. Her eyes were red and swollen, she held a scant and faded shawl about her head and shoulders. Her dress was as ragged as her neighbors', but it was clean and her face had a more wholesome expression. Plainly, though one among them she was not of them.

"Grip's got it!" shouted one of the boys before the girl had time to speak.

"Yes, an' he'll keep it," added the sullen-faced boy.

Nett (for it was she) looked distressed. "I've tended it so long, and Miss Macy gave it to me, an'—"

"Say, Nett, don't fret, I'll make him give it back," said the tall girl in a surprisingly energetic voice. "It wasn't hurt a bit; jes' jostled up a little."

"Children!" called a voice directly over their heads, the kindest voice they had ever heard, "stay here until I come back, I will bring you something."

Five heads popped up above the sidewalk.

"'Twas a nangel!" gasped one of the boys.

"'Twas a lady," declared another, "I saw her face leanin' right over."

"Well, ye'll never see her face ag'in," mocked a hoarse voice.

The children looked toward the window near them; "Marm Garretty," they said, growing suddenly silent, and catching sight of an evil face before the shutters closed. They clambered up to the sidewalk and danced a Boy-alley can-can while they watched for the lady.

Dorell very soon returned, breathless and smiling, pulled off the paper from a three-cornered package and held up a bouquet of roses and pinks that dazzled the children's eyes. Instantly every hand was stretched out and they fairly snatched the flowers as Dorell held them out, and without a word of thanks scurried out of sight. All but Nett; she stood silent and looked wistfully into Dorell's face.

The latter had reserved a great damask rose and a bunch of violets for this child, and was about to place them in her hand when she heard a crackling noise and looking up saw the spiteful face of "Marm Garretty" peering through the half-open shutters.

Quick as thought Dorell held up the rose and nodded to the woman. A horny hand grabbed at the flower and the shutters crackled together again.

Dorell was surprised at the pleased expression of Nett's face. "You wanted her to have it?"

"Oh, yes; she's so ugly, and she hates everybody."

"Who is Miss Macy?" asked Dorell.

"Oh, she's just Miss Macy. She's at the mission, No. 10 Ellis street. I used to go before I was sick. Do you suppose she will ever come here?"

"I am sure she will," said Dorell.

. . . . . .

Dorell hid herself in the remotest corner of the station to hide the tears in her eyes; then she procured some note paper and wrote to Miss Macy, No. 10 Ellis street. This is what she said:

"DEAR MISS MACY:—The seed you sowed in Boy alley is growing. I found a blade of grass there to-day. It needs your attention. And there is a blossom there that will die unless it is soon transplanted. A FRIEND."

"And to think!" said Miss Macy, as she read and re-read the scrap of paper, "how discouraged I have been about Boy alley. And to think! how I have neglected them. That little Nett was the only one I could coax here, and when she stopped coming I thought it was of no use."

How was Miss Macy to know that little Nett had been a missionary among the Boy alley children? And how was she to know that ugly Marm Garretty had mocked and derided the mission to such an extent that none of the parents would allow the children to go? And how was she to know that little Nett had been mourning because she was not able to go to the mission, and hoping day after day that the mission would come to her?

The next time Maid Dorell visited the city she looked up Miss Macy, No. 10 Ellis street. There she found little Nett and the Boy alley companions, all looking neat and clean and happy. A shout went up when they saw Dorell.

"The flower lady!"

"It was the blade of grass," said Dorell, after everything had been talked over.

"Please, ma'am," said little Nett, "it was the big rose too; she's never said a word against the mission since that day."

"First the blade, then the blossom, and then the fruit," said Miss Macy. "I never will doubt again."

A KIND HEARTED NEWSBOY.

"Down in Frankfort street the other cold day," says a writer in the New York World, "I found a newsboy seated on a grating in the sidewalk, up through which came a little warmth from the basement below. He had something beside him, covered up with a ragged, dirty, old handkerchief, and as I sat down along side, he cautioned:

"'Look out, now, and don't hurt him!'

"'What is it?'

"He lifted the handkerchief with the greatest care, and there on one of the iron bars, all huddled up and half frozen, was a little brown sparrow.

"'Where did you get him?'

"'In the street out there. Got so cold he tuckered.'

"'And what will you do with him?'

"'Warm him up and let him go. If God cares for the sparrows, why should not I?'"—Selected.

DEAR BOYS AND GIRLS:—Whether you took part in our contest or not you will all join in applauding the good essay of the Delaware cousin which took the prize and is printed in our Corner this week. This Viola, when a very little girl, told her mother that the two women in the world she most wanted to see were Miss Willard and Mother Goose!

Our prize essay contest was so much enjoyed that (as I hinted last week) we are to have another. Summer vacation days will soon be here, bringing many opportunities to our earnest boys and girls. So what more appropriate topic could we have than, What I have done for temperance this summer? You will find plenty of time, as the essays need not be sent in before September 1, and can be as long or as short as you please. Who will acquire the game this time?

Ever your affectionate

WHAT I HAVE LEARNED ABOUT THE WORLD'S PETITION.

BY B. VIOLA PROUSE.

PRIZE ESSAY.

The "Polyglot Petition," or the petition of many languages, is the greatest in length that has ever been circulated.

"What!" you say, "can it be any greater than that of the Chartists for the repeal of the Corn Laws."

Yes, it is even greater than this, not only in length but because the women of our country so feel the need of better laws that they start this around the world, petitioning the different governments to protect our homes by the total prohibition of these curses, the drink and opium trades, throughout all the territory over which their government extends.

Mrs. Mary A. Woodbridge, who has since died, did the work of sending out the petitions for signatures. They were taken in by Miss Alice Briggs and mounted by Mrs. Rebecca Shuman.

Mrs. Shuman began her work in June, 1891. The signatures came in fifty different languages and on all sorts and sizes of paper, which had to be trimmed and prepared for mounting on muslin, one half yard in width.

One edge of the muslin was trimmed with red ribbon and the other with blue, as red, white and blue are the colors of our country's flag and of our great temperance movement.

The first woman's name on the list is Miss Willard, the first man's name is Neal Dow.

Mrs. Shuman has spent about two years of steady work mounting this Petition which has cost her many a prick in her fingers, because it all had to be done by hand.

You need not look so surprised when I tell you this, for it is all true. Every stitch of this work, more than two miles long, was done by one patient pair of hands.

This Petition was signed by seven million people and over, one million of which were men. The oldest signer was aged ninety-three and the youngest (by permission) a little boy of seven.

A delegation of the most prominent white-ribboners, with Miss Willard and Lady Henry Somerset at the front, met President Cleveland at the White House with a copy of the Petition. They were cordially greeted, and the President gave an encouraging talk.

He did not sign it, but we hope that our President will be the first great government official to give it legal standing.

And now this Petition is ready for its journey around the world. It is upheld by more than seven million prayers, for we children who couldn't sign it, are lifting our hearts to God in prayer that it may have wondrous success.

Do you understand why we are so interested in it? If not, come with me into the home of one of my schoolmates, whose heart is broken because of the drink, then you will see clearly why we want a land free from this drink curse.

And now, God speed the day
When our great "Poly Pet,"
Shall sweep saloons away,
And pay the nation's debt
For wronging humankind,
Over land and sea;
And our reward we'll find
In the eternity.

LONDON'S DEMONSTRATION ON BEHALF OF THE ARMENIANS.

No place in the English-speaking world is, or has been for years, so much the center of reform meetings as St. James Hall, London, which has been called by many, "God's whispering gallery." The West London Mission, led by Rev. Hugh Price Hughes, sends out lines of light and leading to the ends of the earth, and has its center in this hall. It was fitting that the national Armenian meeting, the first of May, should be held in an entourage so suggestive of the best aspirations of the world's capital.

Conspicuous on the platform was the Archbishop of the Armenian congregations in England, who resides in Manchester, and three refugees from Armenia in their picturesque attire; but the meeting opened without prayer or music, and there were no decorations, except that on the face of one side wall was displayed in large characters the 61st Article of the Berlin Treaty of 1878, in which the European powers undertook to superintend the reforms demanded in the provinces inhabited by the Armenians.

A letter was read from Mr. Gladstone, in which he said that he contemplated with grief the infatuation of the Turkish government, determined, it would seem, to do everything to produce its own ruin. He also declared that this country would not shrink from her duty, and if other great governments remained inactive, it was perhaps most of all to be regretted on their own account. He expressed his hope that moral means might prove sufficient, but added, significantly, "If not, then by other means ample security will now be taken against any resort in the future to these deeds of shame."

When the Duke of Argyll led the procession of distinguished speakers to the platform, he was cheered in orthodox fashion, but the honors of the evening were accorded to three persons, two of whom were not present, namely, Gladstone and General Booth. Dukes, bishops, earls, archbishops, deans, members of Parliament flocked to the chairs reserved for them on the great platform, but the people's heart was not with them. The statesman who declared for home rule, the leader who organized the Salvation Army, the lady who leads the white ribbon host of Great Britain, represented movements that throb with the life of the people, and their recognition was emphatic and inspiring.

Dr. Percival, late master of Rugby, was one of the speakers. No American could look upon him without profound interest, for he is the successor of the immortal Dr. Arnold, who has been for a generation the ideal that teachers and professors throughout America have had before them, and which has largely formed their characters. He is a tall man with a fine, intellectual countenance which reflects heart as well as intellect. He declared that the worthlessness of the Turks' promises had been written in blood and fire in the highlands of Armenia, and stated that petitions sent out by him but a few days ago had already received replies from one hundred and ninety-two parishes. They wanted guarantees instead of promises. The Christian men and women of Armenia should no longer fear for themselves a repetition of the atrocities too shocking to be described.

When Lady Henry Somerset was introduced the audience arose and gave her by far the heartiest greeting of the evening. The Daily News, which is the organ of the dominant party in London, did not hesitate to declare hers to have been "the speech of the evening." Lady Henry said in part:

"The crescent of the Turkish Mosque has become the scimitar of the bloody-handed Turkish soldier. Henceforth that crescent stands out in the eyes of all nations as impossible to cleanse as the hand of Lady Macbeth; while the cross, gleaming on ten thousand church spires, sheds forth the mild effulgence of a beacon that means deliverance wherever its heavenly rays extend. Never were these two symbols of a dying and an ever living cause set over against each other in a contrast so vivid and significant as now. The martyrdoms of the first century in Jerusalem have been suffered again at Sassoun. The hills and valleys of Judea are hardly more sacred than the blood saturated hills and the valleys of Armenia.

"What was the crime of the Armenians? That they cherished in their brave and loyal hearts the gospel of peace on earth and good will to men; that the Bible was their most sacred possession; that the home life had one central figure rather than a group of women despoiled of their choicest heritage—the lifelong fidelity of one man to whom their own had been faithfully pledged. This was the stone of their stumbling, the rock of their offence in the fierce eyes of their Moslem foe.

"For what did they die? They died that the gospel—which raises woman up, and with her lifts towards heaven the world—might have free course to run and be glorified. They died that the untrammeled, beneficent, consecrated life of England's purest womanhood might slowly come to women in their own beautiful and pleasant land. For they knew as we do that even as the progress of a June day is traced on the earth's map by the sunshine, so the widening way of a free gospel is traced by woman's happiness and manhood's exaltation. For them already Christianity had done much; for us it has done more; to them the tender dawn had come; to us its noontide splendor.

"It is fitting that an English woman's voice should be lifted for the Armenian women in this great circle of England's power, culture and opportunity. A hundred thousand women wearing the white ribbon—emblem of purity and peace—are invisibly present with me as I stand here trying to represent their holy indignation and burning love for their sisters yonder in the clutch of the harem-despot at Constantinople.

"The watchword of our great nation to-day should be not 'peace with honor,' for these are words that in presence of the lamb upon Armenian hillsides, to which no wind is tempered, become a reproach, if not a blasphemy; but rather, let us cease to cry peace, peace, when there is no peace, and lifting up our hearts to God for power, let men and women throughout the English-speaking race, in broad America and in Great Britain, highly resolve that the rallying cry of Armenian deliverance shall be peace with purity, peace with fidelity, peace with loyalty, firm and unfaltering to the gospel of Christ and of the Golden Rule."

The Duke of Westminster, who defrayed the expense of the meetings, moved that petitions be sent to both Houses of Parliament, and that the resolutions passed be signed by the Duke of Argyll and presented by a deputation to the Prime Minister, and that copies be forwarded to the Marquis of Salisbury and Sir William Harcourt.

The most impressive incident of the evening occurred when Lady Henry Somerset referred to the little mother, hunted like a partridge on the hillside, whose baby was tossed on the bayonets of the Turkish soldiers, and turned to a young Armenian woman wearing her native costume, whose dark, handsome face had in it the pathos of the awful scenes in which she had so lately suffered. She did not understand a word that was uttered, but when a sign was given for her to rise, she did so with great modesty, and the pathos of her look and attitude, and the tender tones of Lady Somerset produced such an impression on the audience that hundreds were in tears. At the same moment her husband, a grave young man, rose with the instinct of protection in his face, and remained standing near his wife, the two making a picture on the hearts of the people that bodes no good to the bloodthirsty Bashi-bazouks.

It is well for Great Britain that she has well-nigh forty millions of people on a spot of ground not larger than the state of Georgia. Just as in an ant-hill the tremulous antennæ pass the message almost instantly to other members, so the pulsations of public sentiment, going forth from the great heart of a representative meeting like this held in the center of London, consolidate the power and purpose of the entire nation, and fling it, like Napoleon's old guard, on the evil of the hour. It is only with this fact kept in view that the significance of the St. James Hall demonstration can be realized by Americans, handicapped as we are by the immense space over which our population is scattered, and the complex mass of humanity that must be moulded and fashioned before we can reach beneficent results.

THE PAN AMERICAN CONGRESS.

The announcement for the Pan American Congress to be held in Toronto, Canada, July 18 to 25, contains a promising outline of the more complete program to follow. Rev. Samuel G. Smith, D. D., pastor People's church, St. Paul, Minn., is president of this significant and auspicious gathering, and all who have ever sat under the power of Dr. Smith's strong and stirring personality are pre-assured of the success of this undertaking to which he has put his hand.

Representative laymen and clergymen from every county, province and state of the two Americas, and governmental delegates, as well as delegates from religious, educational and charitable institutions, are expected to be present. The congress is to be all-inclusive, as the following table of sections shows:

1. Authors, editors and publishers.

2. Educational section, including colleges, academies, seminaries and schools.

3. Philanthropic section, including hospitals, asylums, orphanages, homes, reformatories, etc. To this section the state, county and municipal governments will send specially accredited delegates from all over the two Americas.

4. Woman's section, including temperance work, rescue work.

5. Denominational section.

6. Young people's section, including young people's societies, Sunday-schools, kindergartens, missionary societies, etc.

Protestants, Roman Catholics and Hebrews, the three leading religious sects of America, will find representation in the congress.

There is large hope for the world in the fact that religion is coming out more and more from the pew, the cathedral aisle and the temple to examine under the glare of the secular day the vast and bewildering problems, social, economic and moral, that are turning their stony, sphinx-faces upon their victims. Prohibition through legislation and enlightenment through education, shed but a bare glimmer of light upon the darkness, revealing the darkness unto itself but not casting it out. The Light of the World alone can dispel the night. Above and beyond and before all else the world needs Christ. By various methods, through opposing creeds and conflicting dogmas this sect and that have striven to show Him to the world. It is only of His graciousness that it has recognized Him, not because of, but in spite of these strange habiliments in which they have clothed Him. But the better era has dawned. Gentile and Jew and Romanist see alike the disease that afflicts humanity, the symptoms of which crop out in social evils, moral obliquities and intellectual blightings. When by council together they come to see what Christ saw when He wept over Jerusalem, then will they unite in crowning the One altogether lovely as King, and through His rule—i. e., the application in all life of His laws—the vexed questions shall find solution and rest.

THE METHODIST EPISCOPAL CHURCH IN OHIO VERSUS THE LIQUOR TRAFFIC.

We rejoice beyond power of expression to be able to announce the action of the presiding elders of the Methodist Episcopal Church in Ohio. These men have issued an address through the official organ of the church, The Western Christian Advocate, calling upon the membership of the church to follow out the very plan which we have more than once suggested to Christian voters, namely, to follow the lead given by liquor dealers and vote only for candidates who will be true to "God and Home and Native Land."

The appeal begins by saying that the writers recognize that "our state is approaching the severest contest ever had with the liquor power," . . . that "next winter Ohio must fight with the liquor power such a battle as Indiana fought last winter. . . A new legislature is to be elected. Every vote the saloon can control will be cast for candidates pledged to protect the liquor traffic. We appeal to you as God-fearing, order-loving citizens of every party, to subordinate all minor differences, and to support only men for the legislature who you know will stand firmly for the people's right to control this great evil. Over and above all partisan strife, we plead the cause of righteousness, temperance and good government. . . Too long has the liquor traffic controlled our legislation. God's word has said that 'out of Zion shall go forth the law'; and it is high time that the churches, by careful, prayerful and united effort, should put men in authority who will rule in righteousness, and will enact laws that will be for the true welfare of the state. . . Let it be our watch-cry that in these closing years 'the saloon must go.'" The address further pledges that the presiding elders will endeavor to hold, or cause to be held in every charge, a service for the presentation of this subject.

This address has the true ring to it. In the first place it recognizes the actual responsibility of the church of God in the matter. In effect it declares that the church like the individual must "not only be good but be good for something." It takes the resolutions which, as Mary T. Lathrap used to say, were "sky-rocketed miles above the smoke of the conflict," brings them down and puts them into actual operation. Then the plan is practicable. It asks no one to break with his political party except upon this one question. It simply asks Christian Prohibition Democrats and Christian Prohibition Republicans to say to their respective parties, "We will vote for no man simply because he is on the ticket. Unless he stands squarely on the temperance question, our votes go for another candidate."

If we mistake not, the politicians of Ohio have such a problem before them as politicians have seldom faced before. With liquor men and Christian voters arrayed against each other in deed and in truth, the Ohio politician is indeed to be pitied. If not only Methodist but all denominations of Christians shall rally to this noble call as they should, the doom of the liquor traffic in the Crusade state is sealed. (When Christian voters say "the saloon must go," it will go.) As we once said in these columns on the supposition of just such a stand as the Christian voters of Ohio are now called to make, the political parties will be forced to choose deliberately between the votes of liquor-dealers and the votes of Christian men, and it does not require a prophet's vision to foretell what will be the fate of the party that chooses the former.

We fancy that if the liquor-dealers of Ohio were to meet in convention now they would not say as they did last fall, "Our only enemy is the W. C. T. U." The presiding elders of the Methodist Episcopal Church at least, would be added to the list and we hope that such will be the response to this appeal of these godly men that not only the entire Methodist Church but all denominations of the one church of Christ in Ohio will be recognized as the bitter, inexorable, invincible foes of this instrument of Satan.

THE PURPOSE OF HIGH LICENSE.

Our attention has recently been called to an editorial discussion of the effect and purpose of high license in the Detroit Tribune. The editorial was called forth by the report that under high license law in Detroit three hundred saloons had quit business. The Tribune remarks that if this is true "high license need not wait any longer for its vindication," and proceeds to discuss the real purpose of high license thus: "It may be a shock to extreme temperance workers to hear that high license proposes rather to preserve than to destroy the liquor traffic, and that prohibition is the farthest from its purpose. That is the fact, however. No fault has ever been found with the saloon except on account of incidental evils. It seems reasonable to suppose that there may be saloons without drunkenness, if there be surveillance close enough to prevent the improper sale of beverage. A very close surveillance may be maintained if there are not too many saloons."

The Detroit Tribune has evidently never had any personal acquaintance with "extreme temperance workers" and has never read their organs. "Extreme temperance workers" will receive no "shock" whatever in hearing that "high license proposes rather to preserve than to destroy the liquor traffic, and that prohibition is farthest from its purpose." These workers found out long ago to their bitter sorrow that this was the actual effect of high license and, as liquor men made the same discovery quite as soon as their opponents and at once set up their standard for high license, we have known this many a year that high license was advocated for the purpose of preserving the liquor traffic and increasing its "respectability." It is not the "extreme temperance workers" but the moderate ones, those who take "calm views" of the temperance question, who will be "shocked" by this admission of a liquor paper. For ourselves we give the Tribune our sincere thanks for making this statement. We have been trying for many years to convince good people who would really like to do away with the liquor traffic but are not "extreme temperance workers," that high license was not the smallest step towards the destruction of the liquor traffic.

The Tribune also shows that it is not well up with the temperance movement. There was a time when the chief complaint against saloons was that they caused drunkenness. But this "incidental evil" is no longer the chief quarrel which we have with the saloon and the liquor traffic, of which the saloon is only the skirmish line. The fatal crime of the saloon is that it is a drunkard-making institution, and we cannot see that any amount of "surveillance" can change its character in this respect. For this reason "extreme temperance workers" will continue to work for the utter destruction of the liquor traffic, nor will they be deceived into supporting high license as a means to that end.

ANOTHER NEWSPAPER SENSATION.

A short time ago the newspapers of the country were full of accounts of a murder case in Kansas, in which, it was asserted, the actual murderer was acquitted and another man convicted on the ground that the latter "hypnotized" the former into committing the deed. The judge who presided over the trial has made a statement of the case in a legal journal, in which he says, "The question of hypnotism was never raised, never was insisted upon, either in the evidence, the arguments or the instructions." The case, it seems, was simply this: McDonald, the perpetrator of the act, was tried before one jury and acquitted, while Gray, the instigator of the deed, was tried before another jury and convicted, and the supreme court of the state, upon appeal, confirmed the verdict. Whether or not McDonald was rightly acquitted does not appear, nor does it concern the present inquiry. Under the present limitations of the jury system, no sane person will venture an opinion concerning the decision of a jury without a full knowledge of the case. But, whatever the merits of the decision, having been acquitted, McDonald could not, in accordance with one of the fundamental principles of our Anglo Saxon liberty, be again put in jeopardy of his life for the same offence. He was a young man about twenty-one years of age, and of a yielding disposition, in the employ of Gray, who was a man fifty-seven years old and of indomitable will. The origin of the false and mischievous report that hypnotism was the deciding plea was that the counsel for defense remarked, "We might almost say that Gray possessed hypnotic power over McDonald," and when the latter was acquitted a reporter, on the scent for sensations, wrote up a graphic account of the trial, making the statement which has been going the rounds of the press.

We make this explanation because some persons have distressed themselves with the fear that we were about to return to a species of the old Salem witchcraft craze, while many papers have indulged in animadversions upon the deplorable ignorance of Kansas courts. It has usually proved impossible for the correction to run down the error, but we deem it our duty to do what we can to strike down this mischievous falsehood.

A Kansas paper well says: "One permissible query in this connection is, why a presumably intelligent individual will undertake to write for public print upon a subject that he knows nothing whatever about."

ALCOHOL AND CRIMES.

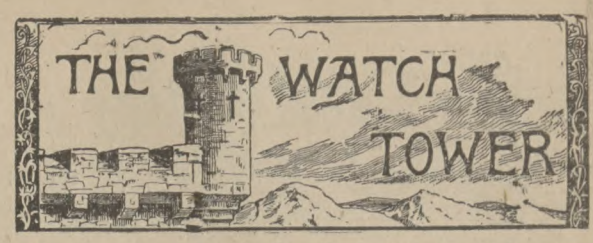
If there is one phase of the liquor evil more than another which it is important to keep before the people, it is that of the relation of alcohol to crime. We may talk in a general way until the crack of doom about the liquor traffic as a criminal-maker, and while a few people will be more or less impressed, the vast majority will remain unmoved. We may talk about the scientific effects of alcohol upon the human system, physical, mental and moral, from every platform, and while most people who hear will believe, they will, as far as votes are concerned, remain indifferent to personal duty.

It is when we bring the question down from generalities to particulars, bring it nearer home, so to speak, that real arousement begins. Mrs. Stowe's book, "Uncle Tom's Cabin," did more towards freeing the black man than all the platform speaking and newspaper writing of anti-slavery advocates, because it dealt with individuals; it brought the question close to the hearts of the people. The record of crime is not a pleasant one to read, but if we can waken public thought and kindle public indignation against the liquor traffic by bringing before the people some of the horrible and unnatural crimes which are the direct result of alcohol, that work should not be neglected by the reformer. And this is the purpose of Dr. Oswald's articles on "Alcohol and Crime" now appearing bi-weekly in our columns. They show in a forcible manner the direct influence of the liquor traffic in the production of crime, and cannot fail to stir up a spirit of protest in the mind of every unprejudiced person who reads them.

This nation does not hesitate to voice its indignation concerning the Armenian atrocities—how long, we wonder, before it will take note of these American atrocities? All Christendom is roused to interference by the crimes of the Turkish government; how long before it will cast the beam out of its own eye and take cognizance of the horrors perpetrated in a Christian land by a power legalized and protected by a Christian government? We would not have the Christian world abate one iota of its sympathy for Armenian citizens, nor of its interest in the "Armenian Crisis in Turkey," but we would have it manifest an equal aggressiveness toward the despot at whose dictum citizens of Christian nations are massacred soul and body every day. Let us then keep before the people of this land "the specified indictment of despotism and its unavoidable evils," hoping thereby to arouse the masses to a declaration of independence from the tyranny of the rum power.



Another of our Jennie Casseday's sayings which comes to me with a new meaning since she has gone beyond, is one which in the rush of busy lives we are all apt to forget: "If I am able to see visitors at all," she used to say, "I try never to excuse myself when well enough to bear it—to those who come to me. It is not as if I could go to them just when and as the fancy suits me; they seek me, you see, and there must be some reason for wanting, and God sends each event and each caller into our lives. I believe I can do much for my Master by being ever ready, no matter what the other calls upon time and strength, to meet with a cheery welcome all who come to me."

John G. Woolley's sentiments on the unfermented wine question accord with those of the National W. C. T. U. In a great meeting in Chickering Hall, New York, recently, he declared: "The communion of the Christian churches of this country to-day is not safe for you or for me. It ought to be swept away. About sixty thousand gallons of alcoholic wines are annually dispensed in the churches in this country. A man who recently returned from the Holy Land reported that he had found seven barkeepers in Nazareth, the birthplace of our Saviour."

During the "hard times" of the past two or three years, English travelers in the United States have been returning to the "old countrie" with words of commiseration for the poor workman in America. "Oh, yes," the tourist sagely remarks, "you pay higher wages here, but just see how much more it costs the workingman to live. In the end his British brother will save more than he." "True," the American replies, "but if the workman in this country would be content to live in the same style as does the laborer across the water, he could lay by a great deal more than he." The following illustration is in point: "A Scotsman and a Yankee were arguing in America the other day about the relative advantages of the two countries. Sandy pointed out, as an instance of the superiority of his native land, that he could get a much larger quantity of oatmeal for a shilling there than he could in America. "If you could get so much more oatmeal for a shilling," retorted the Yankee, "why did you not stay there?" "Ou, ay, man," answered the canny Scot, "that's just it—I couldna get the shullin'."

Dr. Herrick Johnson, the well-known Prohibition Presbyterian preacher, upon being asked, "Shall women preach?" replied, "Yes, in her personal illustration of the passive virtues, meekness, gentleness, patience, forgivingness, purity and suffering love, which Christ exalted far above the heroic and aggressive class, and upon which He put undying honor by His life and death.

"Shall women preach? Yes, in the home, making it an outer court of heaven and fragrant with the Name that is above every name.

"Shall women preach? Yes, in society, by ostracising the lepers that would foul its amenities and sanctities, and by lifting up to the sight and heart of all worldly mindedness, purity, humility and a brooding heart, which were Mary's crown and glory.

"Shall women preach? Yes, if the Lord wants them to, and they can bring credentials stamped with heaven's sign and seal. An officially ordained ambassador must prove ambassadorship. Any tyro knows that.

"What, then, will the Presbyterian church do? Change her standards lest she be found fighting against God."

I was reading a lecture by George May Powell not long ago on the subject, "Getting Rich," and was forcibly impressed by a thought presented. After speaking of the dangers of accumulating wealth to the soul of the person interested, Mr. Powell goes on to state that "by all odds the greatest creators of healthy national wealth, in proportion to the money spent on them, are Christian missions." Among these he included the W. C. T. U., saying also that the liquor traffic dreads the white ribbon movement more than any other aggressive force abroad. Why is this? The wearers of the white ribbon are few of them rich in worldly goods, nor could they be since their "all is on the altar," for the world's release from the curse. Ah, there is the secret. Their power is in giving—themselves, their money, time, talents. Thus they make many rich and are a recognized force. Whom the Lord makes rich is rich indeed; who builds and hoards for himself rears a tottering edifice on a foundation of sand.

On Duty.

THE BEAUTY OF PATIENCE.

BY HESTER M. POOLE.

(Concluded.)

Impatience ruins the health and mars the features; patience heals and beautifies.

However much Christian scientists have carried their beliefs or doctrines to excess, the fact remains one that the most conservative cannot deny,—that the spirit or mind exerts a tremendous influence over the body it animates. And ofa ll the hetcheling and wearing processes in mental activity, that of impatience, and its grown-up brother, anger, are the worst. The blood becomes acrid and bitter, and all sorts of functional disturbances follow. A network of fine wrinkles covers the features, the brow contracts, the voice grows harsh and imperious. Such inroads the most transcendent beauty is powerless to resist, and such inharmony of nature poisons the very springs of life. There are no cosmetics like serene and loving trust, and a patience that is kindled from that long-suffering grace that envelopes the universe with its divine tenderness.

As an example of patience in one who usually exhibited the opposite characteristic, we have a picture of Carlyle after the destruction of the first volume of the French Revolution. During four busy years he had wrought upon this masterpiece, and exulting at its completion, he loaned the manuscript to a friend. Through the carelessness of a domestic, the fruit of his long toil was used to kindle a fire.

Shocked into silence at the great calamity, Carlyle quietly set about the laborious task of re-composing the entire volume. The man who embittered his own life and that of his wife by fretfulness and complainings upon trifling matters, rose to the level of the occasion before a great misfortune. What a pity that a virtue of which he was so heroically capable, could not have been shown in daily life!

He who is impatient with the shortcomings of others seldom turns his microscope of faults upon his own lapses from rectitude. If impatience were directed to our own infirmities of disposition, with the end of curing them, then would it change from a fault to a virtue.

The value of this quality of mind is well illustrated by the slow methods of the scientist. How many years did Darwin study the evolution of species before he dared form a theory, much less publish it to the world? How toilsome and slow has been the development of astronomy, of chemistry, of mechanics, of electricity. Hardly a day passes but some new application of forces coeval, with the very beginning of the universe, startles the world.

A sublime patience inheres in the order of the Divine Mind, a patience that should fill us with admiration and awe as well as incite us to imitate, in a feeble way, a beneficence that is majestic beyond speech.

The millions of years before this earth was ready for the advent of its master, the immortal mind of man, no scientist can compute. The time is now generally acknowledged to be almost beyond conception. The slow, rolling ages witnessed the development of the mineral and the vegetable kingdoms, before matter was prepared for the animal creation. Yet again an enormous period before God "breathed into his nostrils the breath of life and man became a living soul." The divine idea, the image, during these ages, sublimely existed within the Maker of all things; "Yet, without haste, without rest," slowly they grew according to the Divine plan, and behold! all things are proceeding to the preconceived issue. And we, short-sighted creatures, shall we doubt or dare to be impatient, we who can see so little way into that eternity that stretches behind us and before? We can only, like children with their earthly parent, obey and love and trust. Not for us is it to bicker and complain.

If there be any truth in evolution it applies to the moral equally with the natural progress of the race. With the unfolding of the material resources of the planet there is also the unfolding of the finer, sweeter and higher portions of our human nature. Blossoming outward and upward is the brain of man with the increase of the ages. Finer and finer grow the issues of life. Mankind is more alert to moral questions, more sensitive in regard to duties as well as rights.

Therefore, comrades in the long march across the arid deserts of life, let us take hope and be patient.

There be a multitude that falls along the way, burned with the fever heat of passion or stricken with icy blasts of want and woe, but the proportionate number is decreasing. Not rapidly, God hath not wrought in the past in such manner.

But the oases are nearer together; they are more fruitful, and their boundaries are gradually extended. There is more verdure along the way, and cooling fountains are nearer to the path. Woman, stepping out of the rut in which she has always trodden, dares take a long, free breath, gird on her sandals of endurance and walk beside her friend and companion. It is her gentle touch that shall carry healing to the weak; it is her hope and helpfulness that shall make all the desert blossom as the rose. Woman, inspired by a celestial tenderness, bringing her loftiest intuitions, her inexhaustible faith, her wonderful persistence to the moral evolution of the race, exhibits the grandeur of her character in a patience in reform that is matched by no other work that has ever been done on this round globe on which we dwell.

Therefore, my sisters, in this great temperance movement, patience, and yet again, patience!

It is an educational movement, educational in every sense of the word, and in all connected with it. The more it is studied, the more it grows upon the student.

It is found that temperance is greatly a matter of development. In it are involved harmony of faculties, moral perception and obedience, self-control, in fact, all things that make up a strong, well-balanced character. A high regard for the good and happiness of his fellows, once developed, and no man could engage in any enterprise that would entail degradation and misery upon the humblest of his brethren.

But we must have patience with those whose moral faculties are yet undeveloped, with those not yet unfolded into the life of the spirit. Such have been born blind, and their eyes are not yet couched so that they can see the beauties of the higher life.

Those who have glimpses of the sublime working of principles and the Providence that underlies them, believe that

"Before beginning and without an end,
As space eternal and as surety sure,
Is fixed a power divine that moves to good,
Only its laws endure.

"Out of the dark it wrought the heart of man,
Out of dull shells the pheasant's penciled neck,
Ever at toil it brings to loveliness
All ancient wrath and wreck.

"It maketh and unmaketh, mending all,
What it now doth is better than hath been,
Slow grows the splendid pattern that it plans,
Its wistful hands between.

"This is its work upon the things ye see,
The unseen things are more; men's hearts and minds,
The thoughts of peoples and their ways and wills,
Those, too, the great law binds.

"Such is the law that moves to righteousness,
Which none at last can turn aside or stay,
The heart of it is love, the end of it
Is peace and consummation sweet, obey!"

MISSISSIPPI.

THE TWELFTH ANNUAL CONVENTION

of Mississippi W. C. T. U. opened its first session, on May 4, at 8 p. m., in the historic and beautiful city of Natchez.

A cordial welcome was extended by the mayor and the Methodist minister and by Mrs. Stanbitz, president of the Natchez union.

The venerable and beloved Dr. J. B. Stratton, who has been pastor of the First Presbyterian church in Natchez for fifty-two years, gave the benediction of his presence, and the opening prayer. The responses were of an informal character. Mrs. Curlee, of Corinth, responded on behalf of convention, making, as she termed it, her maiden speech, though her temples are sprinkled with gray.

She remarked, "Inasmuch as two hundred extra clerks were required to furnish liquor to the members of Congress on the Sunday before their adjournment, resolved, that the same members be returned next year, the capital be converted into a Keeley cure and treatment furnished free—for same."

Mrs. Katharine Lente Stevenson and Mrs. Lide Meriwether were introduced to convention, and after a few appropriate words, were followed by Miss Belle Kearney, who showed conclusively that the Christian people of the land were responsible for the perpetuation of the liquor traffic.

Our Mrs. Mount drew all hearts to her by the thought that she was presiding for the last time (as she expects to leave the state), and received abundant assurance that her faithful and unremunerated labors were appreciated.

On Sunday afternoon Mrs. Stevenson preached a most effective sermon, urging continual growth in Christian character, even unto the stature of a perfect man in Christ Jesus. As this was the first sermon ever delivered in Natchez by a woman, we are glad to chronicle that she found her way to the hearts of her large audience, who were most favorably impressed by this winning woman.

At night Mrs. Lide Meriwether spoke to a full house on "Personal Liberty." Her witty sallies, her sarcasm and her forcible, logical presentation entertained and convinced her interested hearers.

Monday morning the roll-call was answered by delegates from the following unions: Corinth, Shannon, Okolona, Starkeville, Greenville, Vicksburg, Edwards, Rodney and Natchez, with several delegates-at-large. Y delegates came from Port Gibson, Vicksburg and Natchez. We were much disappointed at the small number of delegates. Natchez being, as it were, side-tracked from the main lines of travel, was probably one cause of it.

The corresponding secretary reported fifty unions; six hundred and fifty active members; five new unions and seventy-five new members for the past year.

On Monday afternoon, after close of business session, Mrs. Annie E. Harper made an address, warmly urging work in mothers' meetings.

On Monday night the Y's took possession of the hall, converting the stage into a bower of beauty, with a profusion of flowers and palms and banners, and fairer still, the forty young girls principally from Natchez Y's.

Birdie Gore, a sweet young girl, who has passed her life in an invalid's chair, but like Jennie Casseday, has lived a song in her blessed influence, welcomed the convention in behalf of the Y's—very touching, and long to be remembered by all who heard her.

Miss Belle Kearney presided, with the attractiveness which characterizes everything she does.

Mrs. Stevenson responded to a call, and won laurels for her beautiful talk on the coming man and woman and the going man and woman, and established herself securely in the affectionate esteem of all present.

Mrs. Meriwether on Tuesday night gave a strong address on "The Other Half," which, though not fully indorsed by all her audience, prepared the way for an arrest of thought on the suffrage question, besides giving a delightful entertainment, despite their convictions. "The world do move."

The plan of work committee laid a strong program before the convention for work another year, which was adopted. Some of the recommendations were from the excellent address of Mrs. Mount and the report of the corresponding secretary, Mrs. Somerville.

The McComb union received the banner for most work done during the past year. Natchez and Vicksburg followed as next contestants.

A Demorest medal contest for great gold medal, which was won by Miss Cora West, of Durant, concluded the exercises of convention. Miss Anna Simonton is the official superintendent of this department for the state.

Stanton College gave a recital complimentary to the convention which was much enjoyed, and reflected great credit upon that excellent institution.

The following officers were elected for another year: President, Miss Belle Kearney, of Flora; corresponding secretary, Mrs. N. N. Somerville, of Greenville; recording secretary, Mrs. Annie E. Harper, of Fayette; treasurer, Mrs. W. H. Ker, of Natchez; Mrs. M. B. Curlee, of Corinth, vice-president-at-large.

The convention adjourned delighted with Natchez and her hospitable people, and satisfied that there was good work done though representation was so small. The next convention will probably meet in Jackson in May, 1896.

NEW YORK STATE NEWS.

It has been my good fortune to visit a number of the local unions in our state since my last letter was written, and I have gained much information thereby. I only wish I could tell some of the pleasant times I've had, but I remember that this space belongs to the work and not to my personal experiences. I find a growing interest and cause for encouragement almost everywhere. The "temperance tide" is rising.

The union at Greece, Monroe county, is receiving new members, and I am led to believe that if other unions could follow their plan in keeping our cause before the people, they would be benefited. This union has held a public temperance meeting once a month for ten years. Think of it, oh, ye of little faith!

The local union at Mt. Upton writes, "faint yet pursuing"! I doubt the "faint" part, but the "pursuing" is all right, for after a rousing public temperance meeting the sentiment of the place was such that a no-license commissioner was elected by a good majority. The union has sent literature to the mining camps several times.

Montgomery county, organized last September, has held its first semi-annual convention at St. Johnsville, and with marked success. The president, Mrs. Frances A. De Graff, is the right woman in the right place, and the corresponding secretary, Miss Luella J. Snell, proves her fitness for the position by her promptness in sending a report. Everything passed off beautifully. Mrs. L. P. Davies, of Herkimer, gave a most interesting address in the evening. There are four W's and two Y's in the county.

Westchester county held a fine school of methods at the county headquarters at Yonkers. These meetings now take the place of the semi-annual conventions formerly held, and the workers are better fitted in this way for carrying on the work. Miss Helen A. Rollins, county president, presided. "Mothers' Meetings" was presented by Mrs. E. C. Underhill, and a paper prepared by Mrs. J. C. Fernald was read, after which "Parlor Meetings" occupied some time very profitably, Mrs. Henry White leading. Mrs. C. J. A. Jump, our state secretary of the Y Branch, was present and gave a beautiful Bible Reading in addition to a fine address. Mrs. Emilie Martin, National superintendent of purity in literature and art, presented that department. Then the Loyal Temperance Legion came in for a share of time and attention, Miss Bell leading in an animated discussion in which several participated. The evening was devoted to a medal contest in which there were fifteen contestants. Mrs. Burgess presented the medal.

Friday morning several other departments were discussed, and a beautiful Bible reading was given by our state president, Mrs. Mary T. Burt, to close the morning service. In the afternoon Mrs. Burt conducted a "model union" as a lesson in parliamentary drill which was both enjoyable and instructive. Following this Mrs. Nelson, of Poughkeepsie, gave an address on "Giving," the address being made to Mrs. Burt, and was accompanied by a gift from the local unions of the state, in response to a circular sent out by Mrs. Nelson for the purpose of raising a fund to send Mrs. Burt as delegate to the World's Convention in London. It was received with much emotion, but with a beautiful expression of thanks from Mrs. Burt, telling how much it meant to her to be able for the first time to visit her father's home, and to represent New York state in the great Convention. One hundred and thirty-seven delegates and visitors were present, this county being especially favored in having so many of our notable state workers present at one time in addition to the loyal county workers.

The semi-annual convention of Tioga county W. C. T. U., held at Richford, was an occasion of unusual interest. The spirit of consecration came upon the women in the devotional service, led by Mrs. E. Courtright, of Owego, and continued throughout the meeting. Rev. J. S. Mitchell, of Richford, Rev. Mr. Quimby, of Flemingville, and Rev. E. D. Hammond, of Newark Valley, were present, and gave stirring addresses. Papers on franchise, by Mrs. Coe, of Owego, and mothers' meetings, by Mrs. Belknap, of Campville, and the parliamentary drill, by Mrs. C. H. Lyon, of Richford, were very helpful.

The evening of the convention was devoted to the work of the Senior L. T. L. Mr. Leon Briggs, of Owego, gave good reasons for the existence of the Senior L. T. L., and Miss Marion Adams told of the doings of the Owego seniors in a charming manner. Mrs. Alice Brougham gave as a recitation, "One Standard for Both Sexes," by Josiah Allen's wife, and Rev. Mr. Hammond spoke upon the power of the young people in temperance work.

In addition to this county report, I wish to add that Tioga county is doing grand work for the L. T. L., and has also worked nobly for the scientific temperance education bill. Systematic giving is one of their hobbies, and the results prove the benefit of it.

Chemung county held its ninth annual convention at Millport, Mrs. Anna G. Baldwin, county president, presiding. The local unions responded to roll-call with an appropriate text of Scripture, thus making this part something more than a business matter. Helpful and encouraging reports came from the local workers, this being due, in a measure, to the faithful work of the county president, who has visited the locals during the winter, giving an address in each place, and thus not only arousing interest, but adding materially to the treasuries. A parliamentary drill was an enjoyable feature. Juvenile work was the subject uppermost in the convention, and was thoroughly discussed from every standpoint, the evening session being devoted to exercises by the L. T. L., in charge of the county superintendent.

The union at West Harlem has made extra efforts during the winter in behalf of scientific temperance instruction, under the leadership of Mrs. Susan Peck, and among other things has subscribed for several copies of the School Physiology Journal to be given to the teachers.

NOTES.

New York expects to send delegates to London and several have engaged passage. We bid them "Godspeed" and shall pray that all may be kept in the "hollow of His hand." The reception at Prohibition Park, Staten Island, on Tuesday, June 4, will doubtless be largely attended by delegates from various states. Mrs. Boole is chairman of arrangements.

Mrs. Pritchard, our state superintendent of purity in literature and art, is receiving the hearty indorsement of ministers and other prominent people, and organizations in her efforts to secure a law that shall better protect the form of woman from indecent exposure upon the stage or bill boards. One lady expressed her sympathy in the form of a check for fifty dollars to help pay for printing, postage, etc. That's the kind of sympathy that counts. Would we had more "consecrated pocket-books."

Our Y's have recently held a state conference at Schenectady, in which various phases of Y work were discussed and plans laid for the future. A debate by the young men of Union College was a novel feature, and an address by Mr. Shiro Kuroda, a Japanese student from Amherst, was exceedingly interesting. Mrs. Tenney and Mrs. Annable each gave an address, and the state corresponding secretary gave a song service in the evening. Miss Rhena Mosher was present and reported some of her work in this state. She is organizing Y's in schools and colleges and giving public addresses whenever desired.

Mrs. Mary Clement Leavitt will be in New York in May, and will hold a series of meetings. In June she will give six days in Syracuse. The women of Syracuse, under the leadership of Mrs. Mary D. Ferguson, are keeping up an active, vigorous campaign, and they are reaching out the helping hand all the time. On April 17 they gave the people of the Rescue Mission a song service, which I had the privilege of conducting, and in addition to this they presented the mission with five dollars to assist in carrying on its work.

We all feel deeply the loss of W. Jennings Demorest, and are saddened by the call which took him from us, but surely it can be said of him, "he being dead, yet speaketh," and the grand work which he has carried on for years will tell for time and eternity. "His works do follow him." J. N. Stearns, another veteran, gone. How fast the ranks are filling up on the other side. "What I do ye know not now, but ye shall know hereafter."

Miss Celia Hutton, of Penn Yan, has returned with health fully restored, after an absence of six months in the Bahamas.

On May 1st it was my privilege to visit Herkimer county convention, and while my stay with them was brief, yet it was enough to show me that this county, led by Mrs. L. P. Davies, is "marching on." Mrs. E. N. Burgess, of Highland, gave the evening address which was preceded by a half hour of song by your reporter. A goodly audience was present and evinced their approval of the prohibition sentiments by enthusiastic applause. Following this meeting I entered into a series of appointments in Oswego county which has not yet closed. I shall visit nearly every union in the county, holding a parlor meeting in the afternoon and a song service in the evening. I find some grand women in this county and some loyal workers. The unions are in a healthy condition and new members are being added. Mrs. S. M. Barker, the county president, has planned this campaign most perfectly, and everything fits just as she has planned it. She is a good general, and her constituency know it. My letter this month is a little late because of my constant journeyings.

Our state convention will occur somewhat earlier this year than we expected, because of the National being "moved up," but preparations are already going on and we look for a grand gathering at Rochester, September 24, 25 and 26.

SIFTINGS FROM SOUTH DAKOTA.

"Remember them that are in bonds as bound with them."

Springtime on the prairies is a season of activity. This is as true of the white ribbon army as of the busy farmers. County and district officers are busily engaged in preparing for spring conventions.

The annual convention of the sixth district will be held at Lake Preston, on June 12 and 13, that of the fourth district will be held at Britton on the 18th and 19th of the same month.

It is with deep regret that we learn of the inability of our president, Mrs. Cranmer, to be present at these conventions. Mrs. Cranmer has had a very arduous winter. During the legislative session at Pierre she and Mrs. Simmons were in constant attendance, striving hard to prevent the passage of the resubmission resolution and to further the passage of the equal suffrage bill. In March Mrs. Cranmer attended the Woman's Council in Washington, D. C., and on invitation of the National Suffrage Society, delivered an address before the council. She also made several speeches en route, one before the state normal school at Peru, Neb. As a result of her hard work, her health has become impaired and she now finds it necessary to take a period of complete rest. For this purpose she has gone to the sanitarium at Battle Creek, Mich., to spend the months of May and June. The benedictions of her constituency of white-ribboners will follow her with earnest prayers for her complete restoration to health.

In selecting the sanitarium as a place of rest and recuperation she has done wisely. The spirit of the institution is in strict harmony with the spirit of our organization. Indeed, its chief physician and manager, Dr. J. H. Kellogg, may justly be claimed as a helpful brother in the work, his extensive writings on hygiene, heredity, healthful dress and physical culture being in perfect line with the work of the W. C. T. U. His wife, Mrs. E. E. Kellogg, A. M., is the secretary of our National superintendent of social purity. She is a speaker and writer of great merit on topics connected with this department. Our white-ribboners can safely seek the sanitarium as "a shelter in the time of storm," the storm of life's wearing activities.

Our legislature last winter, as is known, passed by a majority of nine, a resolution resubmitting to a vote of the people the prohibition question. An examination of the wording of the resolution and of the methods of its passage by the legislature shows it to be defective in several particulars, failing to comply with the requirements of the constitution. Some of the best legal authorities of the state believe the bill to be void because of these defects, and that a vote under its provisions would be invalid. However, the white ribbon army of the state will be prepared for any emergency and will enter the battle for "God and Home and Native Land" with renewed vigor.

Equal suffrage failed in the legislature by only two votes in the house. The senate favored it by a vote of thirty-seven to six. The bill had many valiant champions. The Black Hills delegation worked and voted solidly for it with the exception of Mr. Patton. The rulings of Speaker Howard on the question were so obviously unfair as to call forth indignant criticism from the press and public generally.

Surprise has been expressed that the Black Hills delegation, from a purely mining district, were so vigorously in favor of equal suffrage. When questioned on the subject they gave as their reason the fact that their district, lies adjacent to Wyoming and that since the women there have entered into political power and sit upon juries, the tough element of that section pour over into the Black Hills of Dakota. Therefore, in self-defense they desire to seek relief from a similar source.

The workers and friends of the cause are in no wise cast down or discouraged. More was accomplished toward bringing the matter favorably before the people by the agitation in the legislature than by six months of ordinary campaign work.

Mrs. Anna Simmons, president of the E. S. A. and vice-president of our state W. C. T. U., is at present actively engaged organizing the western part of the state for suffrage work. Mrs. Simmons is an able, consecrated worker. A pleasing episode in her labors at the legislature was an invitation extended to her by the Speaker of the House, to offer prayer before that body, in the absence of the chaplain. This is the first honor of the kind accorded to a woman.

Other earnest women are engaged in organizing the eastern part of the state. Equal suffrage is one of the sure things in the near future in South Dakota. With the incoming of that reform will appear for the first time, the permanent outgoing of the liquor traffic. The mothers of the land are praying "God speed the day."

Mrs. Emma Myers, state corresponding W. C. T. U. secretary, has been selected by the Chautauqua board of directors to conduct the school of methods at the Lake Madison assembly this year. The same management has assigned one day to the women exclusively, to be known as "Woman's Day." A suffrage speaker of national repute is expected to be present and address the assembly upon that subject.

Encouraging reports from the W. C. T. U. field come in from all parts of the state.

McCook county, Mrs. Eva Myers, president, reports a unique gold medal contest. The contestants were all young men, and all possessors of silver medals won in former contests. The exercises were held in the G. A. R. hall at Salem, and drew the largest audience ever seen there. The efforts of all the contestants were highly commended. The medal was awarded to J. Lenox Ward.

Brookings union held an interesting "old folks contest" a short time ago. The recitations were not all temperance pieces, but one of Demorest's took the prize.

A successful county convention was held at Elkton, April 26, closing with a Demorest contest, which was the fifth held in that town. Brookings high school has also been engaged in the good work, and will hold a gold medal contest soon.

Aberdeen Y's, under the leadership of Mrs. Fred McArthur, are doing efficient work. The society includes in its ranks several of the public school teachers of the city. The superintendent, Professor Gross, is an honorary, and his wife an active member.

The Northville union, organized recently, with Mrs. Rev. Cory, president, has started a reading-room, and is doing good work along other lines.

The Springfield union is gaining in strength and popularity. Memorial exercises in honor of Mary Lathrap were held recently. Dainty invitations were issued, and a large audience was the result.

Sioux Falls reports most faithful L. T. L. work under the management of Miss Karo Smart, who is the daughter of our efficient state recording secretary.

Marshall county has been very successful in enforcing the prohibitory law. This is due largely to the fearless stand taken by one man, the youthful pastor of the Presbyterian church, Rev. D. M. Butt, rightly named "Daniel." As no one else seemed willing to take the disagreeable steps necessary to close the surreptitious places of illegal sale of liquor, he courageously undertook it, thereby bringing down upon his head vials of wrath from the whisky element and corresponding gratitude from law-abiding citizens.

A druggist in Britton, persistently violating the law, has just had his permit to sell liquor for medicinal purposes cancelled. He is now prohibited from selling liquor for any purpose in this state for five years, and any violation of this restriction will place him in the same category with other illegal sellers and liable to the same penalties.

Webster reports a Demorest contest, successful in every respect, Miss Maggie Cowan winning the medal. Seven temperance lectures have been held in this town, three of which were the unique scientific lectures of the Rev. E. O. Taylor. Concerning the work of this gifted brother, our state president says: "Rev. E. O. Taylor, who has been in South Dakota a number of months, did a grand work. Words of commendation come to me from all parts of the state. Scientific temperance instruction has received a new impetus. His lectures are helpful, scholarly and interesting. The singing by Mrs. Taylor and the readings by their daughter were much enjoyed. Rev. Taylor and family will always receive a cordial welcome in South Dakota."

The interest in the Temple work since the appointment of Mrs. Harza, superintendent, has been greatly increased throughout the state. Brookings takes the lead. A Temple pledge of one hundred dollars is nearly completed. Twenty-five wheels are out.

The stringency of hard times owing to the poor crops of late years is felt throughout the state, restricting white-ribboners along this as well as other lines. We are hoping that our giving ability may be greatly increased this year by a bountiful harvest.

News in a Nutshell.

At Goshen, Ind., recently, a good audience greeted Mrs. Charlton Edholm, who gave an address on purity, arousing much interest in her subject.

Mrs. Lillian Hollister, a well-known Michigan white-ribboner, has been elected Supreme Commander of the Ladies of the Maccabees of the World.

Yorktown Heights, N. Y., union at its meeting May 8, passed resolutions of appreciation and sorrow on the death of Juliette Purdy, superintendent of mothers' meetings, and a faithful worker.

Under the direction of New York state officers, Miss Rhena E. Mosher is visiting schools and colleges speaking on Y work. The students are interested, and at many schools have promised to do some temperance work. A Y of twenty-six members was formed at Cohoes.

At Suffield, Conn., those interested in neglected children of parental homes are considering the expediency of establishing a home for girls—aged eight to twelve. Most of these unfortunates do not need to be sent to the reform school, but few find places in Christian homes, for the reason they are at a difficult age to be trained.

The Omaha Bee has swung into the popular line and came out recently with a "Woman's Edition." The women of different organizations in the city united in the work of editing the various departments, society "stars" putting their pen strokes beside those of reform "leaders." Every such movement as this attracts a new set of observers and the seed is sown for woman's cause that does not all fall upon stony places.

It may interest many to know the names of the little boy and girl who led the children's procession at the dedication of Willard fountain in Chicago, and pulled the white ribbons, releasing the flags of Spain and the United States which veiled the fountain. They were Harry Prentice and Ettie Johnson, Loyal Temperance Legioners, and will never forget the great honor which was theirs on that happy occasion.

"Dear readers of The Union Signal," writes Mrs. E. L. Wood, state superintendent of literature, Omaha, Neb., "you who are in happy homes, if your valuable literature along all lines of temperance work, after being read is not already predestined, I beg of you to remember the rural unions of Nebraska. The Union Signal, your own state paper, any and all, will be joyously welcomed." This appeal will not be ignored, we are sure.

To Americans going to London an opportunity is offered for a suburban home at Reigate, a name rendered familiar to all white-ribboners because it is the home of Lady Henry Somerset. It is known to many that last winter she lost her butler at Eastnor Castle, who had been in the family for more than twenty years and was very much beloved. His wife and little son have now removed to Reigate and Mrs. Woodford has opened a house for a limited number of lodgers with or without board. Those desiring further information please address Mrs. Joseph Woodford, care Lady Henry Somerset, Reigate, England.

Mrs. Robert Greenlee, husband and family left Chicago this spring for an extended tour around the world, during which they will visit the Hawaiian Islands, Japan, China, India, Java and Ceylon. Mrs. Greenlee, who is treasurer of the Central W. C. T. U., and a devoted worker in the missions of that union, will call upon white-ribboners in the lands she will visit, having obtained a complete list of addresses for that purpose. Her daughter, Miss Grace Greenlee, is an able member of the Chicago Willard Y whose flower mission superintendent she has been. Thus do the bands of ribbon white tighten the tie which binds "around the world."

The Nebraska State Journal of June 5 is to be brought out by the women of Wesleyan University in the interests of that school. This promises to be a phenomenal "woman's edition" of especial interest to white-ribboners the world over. Among contributors, some of whose articles are already in the hands of the editors, are our own Miss Willard, who writes on the World's Convention; Lady Henry Somerset, Mrs. Leavitt, with an article on "Hawaii;" Miss Frances Russell, on "Dress Reform;" Mrs. John A. Logan, on "The Power Behind the Throne;" Miss Lulu Green on the Y. W. C. A.; Mrs. Lorenzo Dow McCabe on "Indian Schools;" Mrs. Jennie Fowler Willing, "A Chapter from an Unpublished Book;" Mrs. Isabel Barrows on "Armenia;" Mrs. Helen Gougar, on "The Woman in the Lecture Field;" Miss Jennie Smith, Mrs. Caroline Woodward, Mrs. Emily Huntington Miller and many others equally well known are to be represented. It will be a veritable literary magazine and will be furnished for five cents. The proceeds go to help the struggling Wesleyan University whose chancellor is one of our best friends, and his wife a prominent member of our organization. Copies may be ordered from Miss Corinth L. Crook, University Place, Neb.

AGE OF CONSENT AND WHITE CROSS.

Dear Sisters:—The interest of the country is now centered on age of consent legislation. The House of Representatives in Connecticut has just passed a bill raising the age from fourteen to sixteen with an amendment which, it is believed, will in no way impair its efficiency. No one opposed the age being raised to sixteen, many advocated its being raised to twenty-one.

A very hopeful sign of the times is found in the fact that the young men students of Storrs Agricultural College petitioned that the age should be raised to twenty-one. With hoping hearts the white ribbon women of Connecticut await the action of the Senate in regard to supporting the bill as passed by the House.

We have been pushing the work of the purity department among women in the organization of mothers' meetings and have found them to be most helpful. But as we advance in this line of work we are more and more impressed with the thought that education is much needed among men. Husbands, fathers, brothers and sons need to be informed along the lines of thought taken up by the wives, mothers, daughters and sisters. The idea of a single moral standard is gaining ground, and we desire to enlist the true manhood of our land, which is only waiting an opportunity to join in this onward movement for righteousness. The National superintendent of the purity department has long desired to push the work of the White Cross, and has been looking about for the right man to act aggressively in this line. She feels that she has at last found one, and gladly announces to all who are interested in this movement that Rev. J. B. Welty, of 1106 Bales avenue, Kansas City, Mo., has consented to act as general secretary of the White Cross branch of the purity department. He will be glad to answer correspondence and assist in the organization and management of White Cross societies everywhere. I bespeak for him the earnest coöperation of all superintendents of this department, state or local, present the subject to your unions, and let us stir up a general interest throughout our land, and by a union of forces help to bring about the day, so longed for, when there shall be but one standard of morality for all humanity, and that the one given by God himself. Send to Mr. Welty for circulars for distribution among workers. Make him feel at once that he may count upon you for sympathy, for coöperation and moral support. During the five months of this year now left us let us make this work tell.

LOYAL TEMPERANCE LEGION.

NEW SUPPLIES.

For a long time complaints have been coming to us in regard to our L. T. L. badges, and earnest desires have been expressed for something more satisfactory. We have recognized the reasonableness of these requests, being ourselves convinced that there was great need for a badge better in quality and smaller in size.

The matter was brought before the conference of L. T. L. state superintendents, held in connection with our Cleveland Convention last November. The result was the adoption of a new badge, which the W. T. P. A. is now prepared to furnish at the following prices:

|---|---|
| German silver, silver plated | $ 10 |
| Sterling silver | 25 |
| Sterling silver, enameled | 50 |
| Gold | 1 50 |
| Gold, enameled | 1 75 |

GRADUATES' BADGES,

in all the above materials and prices except the first. The form agreed upon was a shield, as being suggestive and somewhat less common than the cross. This having been adopted by the state superintendents is now the only official badge of the L. T. L.

We could not hope to please every one in making this change. Already objections have come in regard to the shape, size, price, etc. That the taste and convenience of all may be met the W. T. P. A. will keep in stock, for the present, at least, the Maltese cross which has been so long in use, but it is our earnest desire that the new shield will so make its way into favor that it will in time supersede entirely the Maltese cross, so that we may not have the incongruity of the same organization represented by badges of different shapes.

We call the special attention of those who object to the new badges to the following points:

THE MANUFACTURER,

Mr. William C. Finck, is an earnest Christian temperance man who supports a mission and carries it on in his own city. We feel sure that both his word and work are entirely reliable. He manufactures all the Epworth League badges, and is one of three manufacturers who furnish all the Christian Endeavor badges. He supplies the proprietors of the Youth's Companion with the immense number of silver and gold premiums that are given to the subscribers of that paper.

We consulted Mr. Finck in regard to various materials for the cheapest grade of badges,—aluminum, white metal, nickel plate, etc. He assured us that his large experience had proved that German silver, silver plated is the most satisfactory; that he makes bushels of these badges, and has no complaint in regard to them. They must, of course, be rubbed occasionally, as the silver ware in our homes must. If this is done frequently a dry flannel will probably be sufficient for the process. We are assured that these new shields are very much better in quality than the old Maltese cross, Mr. Finck saying that he never makes anything so poor as that.

THE PRICES.

We must, of course, expect the price to be governed by the quality, and usually the better article is the cheaper in the end. We feel confident that the same quality of badges cannot be obtained for less price elsewhere, because we think we can trust

Mr. Finck's word and his wide experience in these matters.

Our thought in regard to the various qualities is as follows: That our Juniors will largely use the ten cent badges; that many of our Seniors will choose the twenty-five cent and some of them the fifty cent badges; that many of the superintendents will wish to wear the gold badges, and that these will also be used for premiums and rewards. It is hoped that all our graduates will supply themselves with one or another of these varieties.

For those who must have a cheaper badge than any of these the maltese cross will be kept in stock as stated above. The ribbon badges will always be on hand, as they are so desirable to be worn with the pins on special occasions.

THE SIZE.

This is a matter of individual taste, but personally we have had great objection to the conspicuous size of the former badges, as giving an air of cheapness and display. We think they must be specially objectionable to our older Seniors. If we were to suggest any improvement in our new badges we would have them still smaller, rather than larger. Many of the badges worn by the Christian Endeavorers look very diminutive beside our new shields.

INTRODUCTION OF THE NEW BADGES.

This must necessarily be attended with some confusion, as is the case with any change, but this is no reason why necessary changes should not be made. There is no obligation for all the members of a Legion to be supplied with the new badges because some have them, although this is desirable. Where it can be afforded the Legion can do much good by donating the older badges to some company newer and poorer, which can hardly procure them at any price. The state superintendent of Nebraska, who has made an earnest appeal for help, will no doubt be glad to tell any superintendent where such gifts can be sent, and there is also much need of such help among the colored Legions of the South.

We wish to thank the W. T. P. A. for the trouble and time they have given in the perplexities connected with this change of badges. We trust that our Legions will give them substantial proof that their labor has not been in vain, by the orders sent in for the new shields.

Treasurer's Corner.

Remember, dear comrades, that the custom is now becoming established in the National W. C. T. U. to ask each member of a local white ribbon society to send on each birthday, in token of her gratitude to God, as many pennies to the National treasury as she has lived years on this earthly ball. Again we say, remember. This little deed faithfully followed out, would, financially speaking, transfer our society from crutches to wings.

Ever yours affectionately,
Frances E. Willard.

The time of conventions is drawing near. The state treasurers are knitting their brows—watching every mail for the coming of the dues from district, county or local treasurer as the case may be. She is quietly footing up receipts and expenditures and often her spirit is anything but quiet. Here is a letter from a county treasurer saying: "Inclosed find check for $—— balance of dues from our county. I am sorry that the amount does not quite equal our total for last year. There has been no real falling off in members, but some of the local treasurers have been slow in collecting and remitting, and hence the apparent loss. I delayed sending as long as I dared, hoping to hear from other local treasurers, but knowing your books will close the 15th, I send what I have." What do a few such letters from county and district treasurers mean? It means humiliation to the state officers, discouragement to every worker in the state, possibly a deficit in the treasury, and that is not all, it reaches to the National and the World's. There is not the increase in membership that our new unions promised, because of the apathy and carelessness of a few of the older unions. Who is to blame? The local treasurer when urged to collect dues from every individual member says: "They know that they are members and ought to pay their dues without being asked. I do not like to dun them." So she waits and waits and dreads to remind them and they, dear souls, cannot tell whether they paid in January or July, nor whether they paid last year or the year before. It is very easy to say they ought to know and remember, but most of them are busy women with many things on their hands, and beside they have the feeling that anything that is not worth asking for is not really worth having and so they wait to be reminded. It is a part of the duty of a treasurer to collect the dues and quite as important as that she hold the funds safely and is conscientious in paying them out according to the rules of the society. When every local treasurer does this then the state and National treasurers will have less worry. Will not each local treasurer take the list of members and work until every one has "paid" opposite her name on the roll?

A letter has come to Headquarters from our corresponding secretary, telling us of her southern trip. She had already given twenty-one addresses, attended thirty-two meetings, organized four unions and traveled over two thousand one hundred miles. Truly, this will do great good. She will return before the treasurer leaves for the World's Convention, and while she has had hard work and plenty of it, we trust the change will do her good. We shall all welcome her back to Headquarters.

Organizers' Corner.

The last time I occupied this Corner I was among the snowdrifts of Northern New York with the earnest, intelligent white-ribboners of Clinton county, where we held thirty-one meetings and organized seven new unions. Going from there to Washington, D. C., I enjoyed the last day of the Woman's Council, and met many of "our own," who had been looking after the Great Petition and representing our cause in that great body of representative women of the nation. It was my privilege to address one ladies' meeting in Washington before going to my next engagement in Charlottesville, Va., where one parlor and two public meetings were held, all being very enthusiastic.

En route for Arkansas we stopped at Asheville, N. C., where we met our Mrs. Helen M. Barker, who was speaking to good audiences and greatly advancing our cause; at Knoxville, Tenn., where the woman's edition of their city daily was exciting the admiration of all classes; at Harriman, where the beautiful W. C. T. U. temple was filled with a large and attentive audience; at Chattanooga and Nashville, Tenn.; at St. Louis and Kirkwood, Mo., holding meetings at all these points except Asheville. At every point we found the women doing real aggressive work in some of our departments. In Arkansas the state president, Mrs. Fanny L. Chunn, and her noble coworkers had planned well for our three weeks' campaign, closing with the state convention at Clarksville. In this state we organized five new unions, including a Somerset Y at the Arkansas Cumberland College. The police matron law has just been secured here, also a law raising the age of consent to eighteen. The Y's in Little Rock have a secretary at headquarters, and are planning grand work for the year. We held five meetings in the city under their auspices, and five under the auspices of the W's, each giving a large reception in two delightful homes to your unworthy organizer, at which she was privileged to meet hundreds of the most refined and consecrated ladies of that charming Southern capital. At one of these receptions the beautiful grandson (eight months old) of my hostess, Mrs. Clara McDiarmid, was dedicated to the white-ribbon movement, and became an honorary member of the Y's.

Leaving Arkansas April 18, I reached Columbus, O., in time to speak there on Sunday and hastened on to New York for a week's work in Genesee county, organizing three more unions before reaching home. I am now resting for a few days at the seaside, in the grand old prohibition state of Maine, and will tell you of the work here next time. Let us rejoice that so many organizers are in the field, and pray for a great ingathering of workers this year.

Yours in white ribbon bonds,
HELEN L. BULLOCK.

Jennie was learning to read and spell, but it was very hard for her to remember what her teacher told her about pronouncing a double letter when she came to one. She would say "a a" or "e e" or "t t" instead of "double a" or "double e," etc. Her teacher had one day drilled her considerably on this matter in spelling. Shortly afterward Jennie was called upon to read. The paragraph began: "Up, up, Lucy," and Jennie read it triumphantly: "Double up, Lucy."

"I want more!"—and Frances pouted.

"You can't have more now; but here is a wishbone that you and mamma can pull. That will be fun. You pull one side and I'll pull the other; and whoever gets the longer end can have her wish come true. Why, baby, you've got it! What was your wish, Frances?"

"I wish for some more chicken," said Frances, promptly. She got it this time.

'Lisbeth Wilson. A Daughter of New Hampshire Hills. By Eliza Nelson Blair (Mrs. Henry Blair).

Mrs. Blair's "touch" in this story is that of a true and wise artist, who from everyday subjects can make a picture fair to look upon and full of truth. Amid the homely scenes of life in New Hampshire, in the early days of Wesley's "doctrines," Mrs. Blair sets her sweet girl-heroine who is as a rose among thorns, for all the tender love of her young heart was surrounded by the ancient doctrine of foreordination. Her lover is a Methodist and thus they are separated by the stern and conscientious father. The story is sweet and sound, natural but thrilling. It is enriched by word sketches of those old days when quiltin'-bees and huskin's alternated with spellin' and singin' school. Mrs. Blair's pen can draw with equal skill a picture of the shifting lights on the granite hills, a hunter with his dogs, or the love-light on the faces of a noble man and maiden.

Make Way for the King. A series of forceful and inspiring addresses delivered in the Bromfield Street church of Boston, by Dr. Flavius J. Brobst, of Chicago. The keynote of the book is struck in the text of the first chapter,—"And I saw, and behold a white horse: and he that sat on him had a bow; and a crown was given unto him: and he went forth conquering, and to conquer."—Rev. 6:2. Dr. Brobst is a master of vigorous portrayals and very powerfully he holds up for the consideration of his readers the King, Christ Jesus, presenting His royal power and royal claims upon all that is. The addresses are illustrated by incident and anecdote drawn from a wide range of nature and life. Their foundation upon Bible truth is shown by numerous foot-note references. The volume contains 248 pages printed in clear type, is elegantly bound in royal colors to harmonize.

The Story of Sonny Sahib, by Mrs. Everard Cotes (Sara Jeannette Duncan) is a beautiful story of Indian life. Sonny Sahib, the little English hero, is the son of an English commander whose wife died just before the massacre of Christian people on the 15th day of July, 1857. The baby was kept by his Indian nurse, Tooni, and thus saved; was afterward chosen as companion to Moti, the son of the Maharajah. The story of Sonny Sahib's return to his countrymen, and at last to his father is of absorbing interest and written in a unique and exceptional style.

Only Ten Cents is one of "Pansy's" ever welcome stories for young people, yet so full of helpfulness and inspiration that older people may read with most profitable enjoyment. The story hinges on the investment of ten cents by a little invalid girl in material for a Scripture motto to be "worked" in cardboard and sent in a box of gifts to some poor people in a far-away state. The motto was, "Blessed are the pure in heart for they shall see God." None but Mrs. Alden could weave so charming a story out of such simple facts,—but that is one of the secrets of true genius.

For Thin Children.

Children are always thin and pale when they do not assimilate enough fat. This seems strange, perhaps, but it is literally true. Unless there is a healthy assimilation of fat food the blood becomes depleted, tissues waste away, vitality becomes low and the body languishes for the need of proper nourishment.

Scott's Emulsion

is useful to children, especially in two ways. It is Cod-liver Oil emulsionized, thus being easily assimilated and rendered palatable, with the Hypophosphites of Lime and Soda added to tone up the nervous system and nourish the bones. This combination of these potent nutrients is just what thin children need to give them flesh, color and vitality. Almost all children like it.

MONTHLY READINGS.

The Bible Reading for May is by Mrs. Mollie McGee Snell, and the subject is

THE LORD'S PRAYER.

All Bible students have tasted of the rich spiritual food which is so abundant in this, the "universal prayer," and Mrs. Snell's exposition of it impresses us more than ever with its illimitable heights and depths, and will help us to comprehend more fully the heart significance of a prayer that is so often upon our lips.

The Responsive Reading for May deals with

NARCOTICS,

and is prepared by the W. C. T. U. specialist in this department, Mrs. E. B. Ingalls, than whom no one is better qualified for the task. It is a valuable contribution to the literature of that important department, and every local superintendent should see to it that her union uses this reading. Unions that are not regular subscribers to the monthly Responsive Readings should send for a supply of these and send soon.

HAVE YOU READ "HOW I LEARNED TO RIDE THE BICYCLE."

By Frances E. Willard.

I had a quiet little laugh all to myself at thought of our leader turning that mind, so bent on questions deep and high, to a mere matter of wheels going round. But I might have known that the wheels she sets going move in no common path, and their revolutions set things and thoughts in motion of which one had little dreamed.

Thus it has proved in this case, and if "Gladys," the "shying steed," should have rest for the remainder of her days, the reading and thinking world owes her a debt of gratitude because of the quaint and rich little volume which could never have been written without her aid.

We always knew our leader was a philosopher and an analyst, but these flying wheels have whirled her into new ground, and many who have paid little heed to her rare voice as it has rung out the call to the battle of reforms will smile at the flashes of wit, and catch inspiration from the words of wisdom she flings back to us as she rides past on her obedient charger.

"Since Balaam's beast," says this wheel-tourist as she takes her way, "there has been but little authentic talking done by the four-footed; but that is no reason why the two-wheeled should not speak its mind."

So she interprets the wheel-wisdom thus: "Two things must occupy your thinking powers to the exclusion of every other thing: first, the goal; and second, the momentum requisite to reach it. Do not look down like an imbecile upon the steering wheel in front of you—that would be about as wise as for a nauseated voyager to keep his optical instruments upon the rolling waves. It is the curse of life that nearly every one looks down. But the microscope will never set you free; you must glue your eyes to the telescope forever and a day. Look up, and off, and on and out; get forehead and foot into line, the latter acting as a rhythmic spur in the flanks of your equilibriated equine; so shall you win, and that right speedily."

No pen like Miss Willard's could set off the humorous side of wheel experiences, yet through all is the testimony of the power of mind over matter, thus: "I finally concluded that all failure was from a wobbling will rather than a wobbling wheel. I felt that indeed the will is the wheel of the mind—its perpetual motion having been learned when the morning stars sang together. When the wheel of the mind went well, then the rubber wheel hummed merrily; but specters of the mind there are as well as of the wheel."

But aside from the fine philosophy, the happy humor and the welcome wit, there is a prophecy of the impetus given to woman's progress through these silent steeds. That the leader of her century in thought and enterprise should have found health and freedom and happy thoughts while conquering Gladys, surely means that to you and me, Gladys' sisters and cousins shall be heralds of a release from many a restraint that is holding us back from our true heritage as women.

Speed on, Gladys! Health and happiness to thy rider—may we follow her way!

A Wheel Within a Wheel

HOW I LEARNED TO RIDE THE BICYCLE

BY

Frances E. Willard

In her inimitable style Miss Willard tells in this dainty little volume her experience in learning to master a "steel steed," and as she graphically portrays the various situations leading from many failures to ultimate success, she has interwoven in delightful "side-talks" some exceedingly helpful and practical suggestions as to how failures and discouragements may be turned to success in life, never losing opportunity, as is her wont, to say that which ennobles and uplifts. It is really a fascinating little volume, appealing strongly to all that is best in physical and moral development.

HEALTHFUL WOMANHOOD AND CHILDHOOD.

BY HENRY BIXBY HEMENWAY, A. M., M. D.,

is a book containing plain talks to non-professional readers, and is the outcome, as the author himself states, of requests for a book which should tell in plain language those things that every woman should know about her physical being and the care of children. Dr. Hemenway believes that "the proper study of womankind is woman"; that purity will result from light, truth and knowledge, and that impurity, with its consequent suffering, is largely the outgrowth of ignorance upon questions concerning the physical organism and its relations. This very necessary knowledge the author aims to convey, and to convey in such a manner as shall give to the reader a more exalted conception of the bodily functions. He emphasizes the importance for both mother and child of the study of creative life; points out the prominent part a woman's dress plays in the production of disease and unhappiness; discusses marriage from the standpoint of a physician rather than that of a moralist or poet, and gives invaluable advice in the bringing up of children.

This book in the hands of an intelligent mother would, we think, prevent much needless sickness for herself and her children. It has been Dr. Hemenway's wish "to write a book which might be profitably read by all classes of society, and that, being read, it would help each to lead a more perfect life." And we think his wish finds its consummation in this volume of nearly 300 pages.

"THUMB NAIL SKETCHES OF WHITE-RIBBON WOMEN."

This interesting and useful little volume has been brought out in new and enlarged form, and is now ready for orders. Besides brief biographies of World's W. C. T. U. General Officers and superintendents and many presidents of National and Colonial auxiliaries, it gives sketches of white ribbon leaders in Great Britain and Canada, our own National officers, state presidents, organizers, evangelists, pioneers, promoted comrades and other leaders. It is a book of 125 pages and beautifully illustrated, containing nearly forty half-tone cabinet-size portraits. A book that aside from its direct and personal interest to all white-ribboners, is bound to prove of immense value to local workers in advertising speakers and in introducing to the general public through the press some of our representative women.

Let the men wash,

if they won't get you Pearline. Let them try it for themselves, and see if they don't say that washing with soap is too hard for any woman.

This hard work that Pearline saves isn't the whole matter; it saves money, too—money that's thrown away in clothes needlessly worn out and rubbed to pieces when you wash by main strength in the old way. That appeals—where is the man who wouldn't want to have the washing made easier—when he can save money by it?

Beware Peddlers and some unscrupulous grocers will tell you, "this is as good as" or "the same as Pearline." IT'S FALSE—Pearline is never peddled; if your grocer sends you an imitation, be honest—send it back. 456 JAMES PYLE, New York.

BIBLE READING FOR JUNE.

The subject of the June Bible Reading is

The Divine Keep,

and it will, we feel sure, be heartily welcomed by our women everywhere. It is prepared by the well-known and well loved leader in this department,

Mrs. Hannah Whitall Smith,

and reveals, as do all of Mrs. Smith's Bible expositions, a wonderful grasp upon the heart of the Infinite, and a clear perception of the needs of the human soul only possible to one possessing the "open vision." Like all this author's Bible Readings, it will help us to know the Lord better and, therefore, to trust Him more as our "keeper."

Responsive Reading for June.

The promised reading on Penal and Reformatory Work, by the National superintendent of that department, having failed to reach us, we substitute therefor one arranged by Mrs. A. Swan Brown, entitled which will be found very suggestive to local workers. With a little change this Reading might be made of service in a program for parlor meetings or other entertainments.

HAVE YOU EVER READ "HIGH JOE," Or The Logger's Story?

W. F. Ogilvie, late chairman of the Pierce county Prohibition committee, of Wisconsin, just after a camp meeting there, says:

"I talked with quite a number of the ministers on the grounds, and they all agreed that 'High Joe' is to the Prohibition cause what 'Uncle Tom's Cabin' was to abolition. It is the greatest vote-maker of our times."

Illinois W. C. T. U. president writes:

Coming home one day very weary . . . I took up "High Joe" for an accompaniment to my rest. I intended to read only a few minutes, but so interested did I become in the hero of the story—so thrilled by his strong arraignment of the liquor traffic—that I completed the "o'er true tale" before I laid down the book. The author has certainly added a helpful book to the prohibition literature of the day. It is a timely warning against the foe of the home, and will surely not go unheeded by the youth whom we hope by thousands will ponder its truths as they read the intensely interesting pages. Sincerely yours,

Louise S. Rounds.

Signal Notes.

Cincinnati has an institutional church in the heart of the city, doing a noble work.

In 1890 the total colored population of the United States was seven and one-half millions, or about twelve per cent of the whole population.

The federal statute of 1890 makes all liquor sent into a state for any purpose subject to the laws of such state, "enacted in the exercise of police powers."

The British naval estimates for 1895 and 1896 are nearly twenty million pounds—an unprecedentedly large amount, which is anything but encouraging to friends of peace and economy.

Last year the American Society for the Extension of University Teaching gave one hundred and thirty-five courses of lectures, listened to by over twenty thousand people. As a great educational movement the work of this society is parallel to that of the Chautauqua circle.

The picture circulating plan has been adopted by Hull House, Chicago. Their collection consists of about fifty copies of standard works of art, colored prints, photographs and water-colors framed. Each picture is loaned for two weeks. Excellent care is taken of them by the borrowers.

Following the appointment of Miss Jane Addams, of Hull House, as street and alley inspector in one of the most unclean wards of Chicago, comes that of Rev. Herman F. Hegner, of Chicago Commons, another social settlement, to the same office in another ward. This is a move which will bear fruit in cleanliness, which is next to godliness.

The Sapporo, Japan, Y. M. C. A. is composed of twenty members, most of them students in the college of agriculture. By giving entertainments with the magic lantern in Sapporo and adjacent towns, they have already earned about 300 yen, which amount has been contributed to the Red Cross Society and the needy families of soldiers. The young men continued their helpful work until the cruel war was over.

Mrs. J. W. Andrews, who visited Ramabai's school at Poona last year, reported at the seventh annual meeting of the Ramabai Association, held in Boston, recently, that the school is flourishing under the wise and faithful rule of Ramabai. There are now fifty-seven pupils, forty-three of whom are widows, and a kindergarten, with twenty-six pupils. These girls will go out from this school with hope and power to become capable workers in professions and in homes.

That was an excellent move on the part of the Cook County Sunday-school Association, which at its last regular monthly meeting strongly recommended all Sunday-school officials in other cities and at country points, to send word to some church or Sunday-school officer in the vicinity of Chicago to which their members move when coming to this city. If this is done the hand of welcome will be at once extended and strangers will feel at home and be helped in various ways.

A distinguished old-line Republican of the staunchest order, a member of Congress and the man who nominated Abraham Lincoln for the presidency, stated within this year to a young man who sought his advice, that he would counsel him to join the Prohibition party, for he believed it represented the rising hopes of the best people in the United States, and would slowly but surely come to power. He thought he was too old a man to change his political affiliations, but young men should look towards the future and not to the past.

In his recent work, "American Charities," Dr. Amos Warner, professor of economics and social science in the Stanford University and former superintendent of charities in Washington and Baltimore, makes many commendable comparisons and suggestions. He speaks especially regarding the care of homeless children, and proves that great injuries are done them in the great crowded institutions, where development is hindered. Comparing the plans of New York and Michigan, he finds that in 1892 the latter had only six hundred children supported at public expense to the former's twenty-four thousand! In Michigan the children are sent to a state public school until they can be placed in private families. In New York they are committed, if possible, to an institution controlled by persons of the same religious faith as their parents.

Publisher's Notes.

FRUITS AND HOW TO USE THEM.

BY HESTER M. POOLE.

Mrs. Poole claims that grains and fruits afford every element needed for the nourishment of the human frame, and that wheat, apples, berries, peaches, etc., furnish rich, pure blood, which is sustenance for strong muscles and sound physical economy.

The subject of food has an ethical significance, as the diet has its effect on the temperament, and also a refining or debasing influence, and in reading this book one thinks not only of the ethics of food but also of the poetry, as fruit, in its bloom and fragrance, is certainly the most ideal sustenance of which it is possible to conceive. In reading this little volume, one wonders why man ever thought of slaying a living creature to sustain his own life, with all else that nature affords for that purpose.

This book has a poetical charm, as it idealizes the real, and turns, with an alchemy of the author's own, the necessary tasks of the preparation of food to an art of ethical import and beauty in daily life.

A NEW DEPARTURE.

Varied are the suggestions which come to the Publisher's department, and to meet the wishes of our constituency we are issuing some new pamphlets in a tasteful setting, and with a cover of pretty, enameled paper. The first of the series is "The Crusade Psalm" and "Not to be Ministered Unto but to Minister," two Bibl Readings, the former by Miss Willard, the latter by Lady Henry Somerset. Send five cents for a single copy and receive a pamphlet that you will be proud to present to your friend, and pleased to see upon your library table.

The edition is limited, that we may test the demand for a higher grade leaflet, and we hope the size of the orders received will justify the extension of the series. Price 5 cents, single copy.

SINCE OUR LAST ISSUE.

Miss Abigail Dodge grows daily weaker.

Lord Gough, hero of India, died May 31.

Hostilities of war have recommenced in Formosa.

Miss Emily Faithful, a noted English lecturer and publisher, died in London, June 3.

Mrs. Mary Carlyle Aitkin, niece and amanuensis of Thomas Carlyle, died in England, June 2.

Dun's Weekly Review of Trade for June 1 reports unusual signs of encouragement in revival of business.

Thousands of pulpits in the Old and New World discussed Christian unity June 2, at the request of Dr. Henry S. Lunn.

The extreme heat in Chicago last week produced many cases of prostration. The hottest weather ever recorded for the month of May prevailed for several days.

The state temperance union of Kansas has issued a call for a mass-meeting at Topeka, July 4, to take action concerning the defiance of the prohibitory law of the state.

The national council of Canadian women in session at Toronto last week condemned the publication of patent medicine advertisements and sensational accounts of crime.

Turkish officers forcibly invaded the residence of foreign envoys in Moosh, and every indication prevails of a war against all Christian powers on the part of the Mohammedans.

For the first time in sixty-seven years, the orthodox and Hicksite Quakers gathered in one body in New York city, May 29, to celebrate the founding of the yearly meeting in the province of New York.

Walter Q. Gresham, Secretary of State, died in Washington May 27, and was buried in Chicago, with military honors, May 30, the President of the United States and all his Cabinet accompanying the body to Chicago in a private funeral train.

NATIONAL W. C. T. U. CONVENTION, BALTIMORE, OCTOBER 18-23.

The National Convention will meet in Baltimore, Md., October 18-23. The dates are earlier than usual, but the Baltimore committee of arrangements feel that the change is necessary, owing to local meetings, so the above dates are settled. Every indication is for a large Convention.

THE Industrial Home for Inebriate Women, projected by the B. W. T. A. last year, will be in readiness in June, and many of our members will have the opportunity to see it opened by some high dignitary. Lady Henry Somerset is also to unveil the Children's Fountain, an exact duplicate of the Willard Fountain in Chicago, and the child who has brought in the most pennies towards its purchase will assist in this unveiling. Exeter Hall has been secured for a great farewell meeting to be held June 23, the Sunday following the Conventions. Miss Willard will preside, and it will be one of the old-fashioned love feasts of the white ribbon women.

THE Chicago Woman's Club has freed itself of all prejudice by adopting last week the following by-law: "The qualification for membership shall be character, intelligence and the reciprocal advantage of membership to the club and the individual, without regard to race, color, religion or politics." This is the result of a proposition last fall to admit an educated colored woman, Mrs. Fanny Williams, to membership in the club. Her name was at first rejected, but according to the new by-law, she or any other woman, white or black, who meets the requirements of "character and intelligence," may become a member. All honor to the Chicago Woman's Club.

DECORATION Day, 1895, will long be remembered as one of remarkable national harmony. For the first time since the civil war, the heroes of the blue and the gray came in social and brotherly reunion in the city of Chicago. Men and women of the North and the South met in the shadow of a common sorrow and a common hope to celebrate the thirtieth anniversary of the close of a great battle, each generously extending to the other the possession of a conscientious following of duty. Never before has it been so heartily demonstrated that we are all Americans, all brothers and sisters, and that ours is a union forever. White-ribboners have long felt this and it rejoices our hearts to know that it is being realized by the veteran leaders of our body politic. How General Grant would have rejoiced to have seen this day! He saw it with a prophet's eyes, for just before his death he wrote, "I feel that we are on the eve of a new era when there is to be great harmony between the Federal and Confederate soldiers."

IT is delightful to see the interest evinced in the Temple by the children. Their sturdy little shoulders all seem to be united in one great effort to free our beautiful building from debt. They are spinning the wheels along and promising far greater effort when vacation time comes. The older heads and hands are also planning and doing, and in one day last week sent in one hundred and twenty wheels well filled. But still the proportion of unfilled and unreturned wheels to those sent out is very large (more than nine-tenths) and we urge upon our good women to do quickly what they can do. We know full well that a hundred other duties press sorely upon them, but these can be accomplished better with the wheel task out of the way. If the thousands of women who love Mrs. Carse and appreciate her burden could know how helpful every filled wheel is to the Temple, they would not longer delay. The generous offer by temperance friends of three prizes of one hundred, fifty and twenty-five dollars to those sending the largest number of filled wheels is a source of great encouragement and we trust will be faithfully worked for.

MISS WILLARD and Miss Gordon have been for some time at Eastnor Castle, hard at work preparing for the June Conventions in London. Miss Willard has completed her book of "Hints and Helps for the White-Ribbon Army," and it will be published in time for those meetings. It is entitled, "Do Everything: a Manual for the World's White-Ribboners," and on the title page she has placed this motto: "The joy of life is doing good according to a plan." The book is fittingly dedicated to "our round-the-world missionaries." A little book by Mrs. Elizabeth Wheeler Andrew is also in press, and will serve as a companion volume to that of Miss Willard's, for it gives the origin, history and methods of the W. C. T. U. Mrs. Andrew has prepared an "up-to-date" account, largely from her own field notes, and it will be an invaluable handbook for our workers. These two little volumes, with the "Thumb Nail Sketches," just issued by the W. T. P. A., are to be on sale in London at the great meetings, and will make up a workers' library of great value for everyday use. They will serve as a lending library to the great vacant-eyed public that asks, What is the W. C. T. U. doing? and we hope "our folk" will keep them moving from hand to hand.

MRS. LIDE MERIWETHER, president Tennessee W. C. T. U., sends us the following good news: "Let the whole white ribbon army rejoice with us! The black cap is taken from the head of Tennessee after a patient and persistent fight on the part of her white-ribboners for nine years. We cannot award too much praise to our brave and patient superintendent of legislative work, Mrs. Emily Little, of Nashville, who for the last four years has stood upon that watch tower. All that woman could do she has done, and I hereby thank her from my inmost heart and in the name of every mother in the state." The bill provides that the nature of alcoholic drinks and narcotics, including cigarettes and their effects upon the human system shall be taught as thoroughly as other regular branches, that no certificate be granted to any person to teach in the public schools who has not passed satisfactory examination on these subjects. The bill goes into effect January 1, 1896. Tennessee is the third state to pass the scientific temperance instruction bill during the year 1895, the other two being South Carolina and Indiana. There now remain but two with the "black cap"—Arkansas and Georgia. We rejoice with Mrs. Meriwether, Mrs. Little and Mrs. Hunt over this latest victory.

DURING the past week scores of white ribbon delegates, bound for the great W. W. C. T. U. convention in London, have been wending their way eastward visiting old home scenes and friends, preparatory to leaving their native land for two or three months. Four leaders went from the Temple. Mrs. Barker and Miss Stewart started on Tuesday, the former to visit her aged mother in South Richland, N. Y., and the latter her relatives in Toledo, O. Mrs. Grow departed on Thursday for a few days' rest with her daughter in East Hartford, Conn., and Mrs. Edholm on Friday, having a few engagements en route. Those of us who remain behind will fortunately find our hands so full of pleasant labors that we will not have time to feel lonely, and our thoughts and prayers will be constantly with the precious cargo on board the Berlin, which sails June 5. Miss Jennie A. Stewart, whose pen is uncommonly facile, will be the special correspondent for THE UNION SIGNAL during the entire trip. Her first letter, descriptive of the farewell meeting in Prohibition Park, and the sailing of the steamer, will appear in our next issue. The World's Convention will be fully reported in our issue of July 11 or 18, and the Grindelwald conference in the following issue. Other letters will appear and our readers will have highly entertaining and satisfactory information concerning the party and the tour.

THE GREAT PETITION.

BY MRS. H. F. THOMAS.

What is this that moves the nation,
With a strange, new thrill of wonder?
Voices of ten hundred thousand
Raised to break rum's bands asunder.

Marvel of this century's progress,
Heart-throbs, tears and hopes and groaning,
Gathered in one vast Petition,
Like the cry of nations moaning.

Hear, oh, Christ! Look down, ye angels,
Hearts are moved to desperation,
Alcohol has slain its millions
'Neath the flag of every nation.

When! Oh, when, is victory coming?
When will burdened voices calling
Shout so loud that earth shall tremble
And rum's Jericho be falling.

Stand firm all who wear white ribbons,
Now is not the time for doubting,
March on boldly, God is leading,
Soon will come the time for shouting.

"WE'RE ALL BRETHREN."

In Two Chapters.

BY ESTELLE MENDELL AMORY.

Chapter I.

"That's the fifth call fur money within a week, an' from folks as I never seen or e'en heard tell of," said Deacon Newton to his good wife, in a thin, wiry voice, as he finished reading the letter she had just brought him from town. "What are their reading rooms, coffee houses and free hospital beds an' sich things ter me, I'd like to know, way off there in the city?" and the tender appeal was cast with its unlucky mates into a pigeon-hole of the old desk—a desk on which he had written and signed many a money-making document.

"The world is round, Amos, and we are all brethren," returned Mrs. Newton, with a tender look on her benevolent face.

"There's more sentiment 'n' sense in sich talk, Maria," was the testy reply. "You know as well as I do, them institutions ain't got no concern fur us, an' let them as lives there an' gits the good on 'em look out fur 'em. I allers gin ten dollars ter the support o' the minister, an' five ter home missions, an' chip in ter the collections, an' if every one 'ud do the same, there'd b no need o' this everlastin' beggin'."

Mrs. Newton ventured no response to this familiar recapitulation, but bit her lips with a weary smile as with an aching heart she wondered, as she had so many times before, if the wealth she had so diligently helped to accumulate must always be invested in bank stock and first-class mortgages, with only a few hard-squeezed dollars for the "causes that need assistance."

With all their thousands and all her years of hard, unceasing toil, she had ever been a cringing beggar for everything beyond the very simplest necessities for family use. To keep up her dues in the Ladies' Aid Society, the missionary circle and the Woman's Christian Temperance Union, she had done plain sewing for her neighbors or made shirts for their own hired men, for it took more courage and perseverance than she could command to obtain the necessary sum from her liege lord. And even with the money thus earned she not infrequently heard about her "foolish waste of means and time on things as ud never come back to her."

"Is there nothing that will unlock his heart and purse?" she queried as she sat there looking over the several appeals her husband had received. In an ill-humored, closer-fisted mood than ever he had taken his hat and gone to the barn. How her tender heart throbbed with generous desire and ached with humiliation at her wrongfully empty purse as she read those calls for help from the Temperance Hospital, a reading room, a rescue mission, etc.

Yes, and there was the Temple Beautiful; a devoted white-ribboner in the county, knowing of Deacon Newton's wealth—but only somewhat of his "closeness"—and of his wife's loyalty to the cause, had written, asking him to surprise and make happy this faithful soul by placing her name on its sacred walls.

Poor Mrs. Newton's tears fell fast at this. Oh, how often had she longed to be a generous contributor to this wonderful faith undertaking, but she would sooner have thought of asking the stony-hearted mines for an offering than him. And that any one had the "nerve" to ask him for one hundred dollars to place her name there almost took away her breath. She did not wonder now that he had been unusually close and grouty the past week.

"Bad news, mother?" asked a handsome, noble-browed youth entering the room at this point and seeing the moist eyes.

"Oh, no, nothing new," smiled the fond mother, "though it seems pretty hard and bad that all our money should be doing no one any good when there is such great need."

It was not necessary that more should be said, for Robert Newton too fully understood his mother's feelings. Ever since he could recollect anything, he had seen her "grieve over the situation," and now, as so many times before, he comforted her with the assurance "that when he got to earning money she should have all she wanted for her missionary work and things."

"And I guess father'll let me go," he added, kissing the wet cheeks with animation; "he says he don't know as I'll have a better chance to get a start in business."

"Since this is your heart's desire I shall try to be reconciled—but I shall be very lonely, Robert—and—then—the city is so full of temptations," replied the mother with quivering voice.

"I suppose it is, mother; but if I tend to business I won't find much time to be led astray," was the cheery response, "and since father's going to be so generous with me, I'm bound he shall not be sorry, nor you, for letting me go."

Robert was not the son of Mr. and Mrs. Newton's "old age," but of their mature years; and he was the only person, or object, that had ever aroused the emotion of generosity in his father's morbidly penurious heart.

Robert's two sisters who were considerably older than he, and were now "married and settled in life," had never made a successful plea for anything from playthings to educational "advantages"; but with the deacon's boy, his only son, it had been strangely different. His desires had but to be mentioned to receive gratification,—even to the one that would take him from his father's presence and the home. His tastes pointing to a business career as his natural calling, he had received a thorough training at a commercial college; and he was rejoiced, of course, when through an old friend of his father's he received a call for his services from the Stock Exchange in Chicago.

We may not depict the loneliness of the Newton home with Robert gone. He was its life and brightness—the one object of mutual pleasure and attachment for the deacon and his wife.

But this severed bond was naturally somewhat healed by his frequent letters, full of delight at his position and prospects, and when he wrote that he had become a member of the Young People's Society and Bible class, the mother's anxious heart sobbed a prayer of gratitude, and beat easier.

"He is safe now that he has chosen good company," was her consoling thought.

Robert had been gone about a year when a something in or about his letters caused his loving mother to be anxious. At first she did not dare mention her fears to her husband, they were apparently so groundless, but when the letters became infrequent and brief, the father likewise became anxious.

"But you must remember, Maria, that it's a very busy season now," he said—though to comfort and relieve himself as much as his wife.

Then more frequent and more affectionate, if possible, became the home letters. But soon they ceased to bring any response at all. Then anxiety gave place to the certainty that something was wrong.

"He is sick, I know he is," cried the mother, "or else he's got into trouble of some kind and is afraid to let us know," she added to herself. "Do write your friend, Mr. Warren, Amos, and find out."

"Mr. Warren has been away from there this six months."

"Then go, Amos, go at once, and let us know the worst," she begged.

THE SOCIAL AND ECONOMIC USES OF UNFERMENTED WINE.

BY JEANNETTE G. HAUSER.

Unfermented wine is now generally considered by church members and the advocates of temperance as the only safe and proper wine for the communion table, but that it ought to have a wider use for social and economic reasons is as yet but dimly seen by few and positively denied by many good, well meaning people. As it required and still requires much argument and instruction to persuade as to its appropriateness for the holy communion, so it may need a far greater effort to show how beneficial it may be as a daily drink for humanity at large. But because of the difficulty, we as temperance reformers must not shirk a plain duty. First in our own ranks we must meet honest objections.

Above the din of the objectors' voices against the social use of unfermented wine there rises one note clear and strong, "Avoid the appearance of evil." It will ring longest and justly. It is one of the difficulties which must be met so that "our good shall not be evil spoken of." We must add wit to wit and invention to invention, we must use money and influence and brave misrepresentation that we may seize from the grasp of evil and long association with the most debasing influences this rich and good gift of God, the fruit of the vine, and place it once more among the blessings for man, among the best economic products of the soil. It cannot be done in a day, but ultimately we shall inaugurate a new era or rather bring back an old one when the fruit of the vine shall make glad the heart of man and God. The heart of man in its right use, and the heart of God in that His creatures find the "blessing in the vine" instead of turning it into a curse.

It can no longer be claimed that fermentation or distillation is necessary to the preservation of grape juice in the condition of must. The vast fruit canning industry proves that all fruit juices may be preserved for years without a trace of alcohol. Tomatoes, peaches, apricots, green corn and peas are all more quickly perishable than grapes, and yet hundreds of thousands of tons are preserved fresh and cheaply for home consumption. Many housekeepers know by experience that grape juice may be preserved, by boiling and bottling, for months or years, to be produced from the store closet a most delicious drink at any time, and invaluable in cases of illness or debility. The preservation of unfermented wine "has become a great enterprise in England enlisting millions of capital." The must, with a slight addition of antiseptic to preserve it on the sea voyage, is transported from Italy to England and there refined and bottled. The same process could as well be carried on in wine growing countries, with the result that the product would be much cheaper. But the practical aid of temperance people is required; as producers, because the alcoholic wine manufacturers are not ready to take it up, and as consumers, that the industry may be sustained.

A new name is needed for unfermented wine. Five syllables is too long. It should be a Greek or Latin generic name, one which Italy, France, Spain and English-speaking nations can accept, and which is capable of union with other adjective nouns which may indicate different kinds of unfermented wine. There are obvious mercantile reasons for such a name.

As one means of avoiding the appearance of evil in the use of unfermented wines, either at home or in public places, a new style of drinking glass and decanter, or receptacle of graceful and attractive shape for grape juice must be produced in our glass factories. The shape of the drinking glass should be as definite and clearly distinct from those used for beer, port, champagne and liquor as these are from each other. Just here a thousand good people exclaim, "Why not drink it from a common tumbler?" To answer a question with a question, why do you have different sorts of glasses for custards, ices, sherberts? Why have tea cups and coffee cups? All of these drinks might be taken from one plain style of cup, for instance, a tin cup; why not? There is a fitness in things, even in the manner of drinking water, tea or coffee, and we may as well recognize it in regard to grape juice. We shall win by good taste and pleasure given to the eye those who would reject ugliness, and the assurance in a distinct cup that our liberty should not be misjudged.

"But why do we need unfermented wine as a drink?" asks a great host. "Have we not tea, coffee, milk, chocolate, lemonade and good cold water? If other drinks do not agree with the stomach, water is plentiful and best of all."

We, who are the integers of the great World's W. C. T. U., must soon learn to look beyond our individual tastes and to the needs of more than this section of the northern belt of the temperate zone. Possibly we do not feel the need of another drink, particularly of one whose name, wine, sends a shudder through the heart, and yet it is a question if properly preserved grape juice as a drink, taken in the place of the vast quantities of tea, coffee and ice water now in use might not add years of healthful, happy and useful life to thousands who are now querulous and all but useless dyspeptics. Chemists, physicians and many learned treatises point out most clearly that, "there is no vegetable fluid which contains so nearly all the elements, or organized substances which are required to nourish and warm the body of man as unfermented grape juice." Dr. Richardson says, "the constituent parts of blood and of the expressed wine are strictly analogous." Tea, coffee, chocolate and lemonade, chemically considered, bear no comparison in value as a food product to that of unfermented grape juice. We send millions of dollars to the Orient for tea and coffee, rejecting and discouraging as far as possible this more valuable product. Is it not the duty of temperance people to become intelligent on this subject, to foster what may be a great industry and source of vast wealth on our own shores, and which as a food product shall add much to our nation's health and happiness?

In California at present there are over two hundred thousand acres under vines, producing fifteen million gallons of wine annually. But because temperance capitalists and temperance consumers are indifferent and unknowing as to the social and economic benefits which this grape juice might confer upon our people, this wealth is given over to King Alcohol and a wine syndicate, which has recently contracted for nineteen million gallons of wine to be delivered within three years. We might add to this source of our wealth other wine-growing sections of our country, and also vast tracts lying idle, which are best fitted to grape culture, but from which temperance people are debarred by the prevailing sentiment against extensive grape culture. So strong is this that on many vineyards in California lemon trees are being substituted for grapes. When these come into full bearing, the American people will have to sit up nights to eat lemon pie, for lemonade is mainly a hot weather drink and harmful if taken in quantity.

In wine-producing countries, as Italy, Spain, Portugal, Germany and France, our temperance work can make no headway and is laughed to scorn. We ask them to give up wine, to root up their vineyards, but show no better product. Until we are prepared to accept the conditions of climate, soil, altitude and productions with which God has endowed them, and demonstrate the better way to use these gifts, our temperance work among these nations will be in vain. When we accept the vineyards producing so wonderfully in those fair lands, as a gift of God, "with a blessing in it," and can go to them with perfected methods of preserving grape juice without fermentation, leaving in a far more healthful state that which is already food and drink, then may we teach practical temperance to those nations, and in other wine-growing countries. In Italy thousands live on coarse bread and the light sour wines which retain much of the nourishing qualities of the grape. They could not exist on the same quantity of bread and water.

France produces nearly a billion of gallons of wine annually; Spain and Portugal export hundreds of thousands of gallons; Germany ranks high as a wine-growing country; in some parts of Greece "wine is cheaper than water." Yet in all these countries this most nourishing of vegetable juices in vat and still must part with the greater portion of its best elements to be replaced by the product of their death, alcohol.

At present unfermented wine is too expensive for ordinary use, but as the demand arises for it, as newer and simpler methods of preparation are proven practicable, as the growth of vineyards is encouraged and as soon as competition takes hold of an evident demand for unfermented drinks, the price will fall to that which may bring it within the reach of all, even more than the less nourishing tea and coffee.

A NEW PROSE IDYL.

BY FRANCES E. WILLARD.

Those of us who have long known and loved the wife of the United States senator who has been our foremost champion for twelve years in the highest legislative arena that the nation affords, feel a warm interest in her new book entitled, "'Lisbeth Wilson, A Daughter of New Hampshire Hills." It is dedicated as follows: "To my husband, whose life in peace and war has been given to the honor and service of the dear old state, and to my son, this story of New Hampshire is inscribed." That husband, who was one of the heroes of the Civil War, has stamped his mind and conscience deep on the records of the American Congress. That son inherits the noble qualities of both parents; he graduated with honor from Dartmouth College, and is a rising young lawyer in Washington, D. C.

Many of our older women will recall the charming response made by Mrs. Blair to an address accompanied by a bouquet of flowers that was presented to her when the National W. C. T. U. met in the nation's capital in 1881. As Mrs. Blair never speaks in public this came in the form of a letter from which I make the following extract:

"Mrs. Chapin and the Ladies of the South:—Saturday evening the cheers and hearty good-will manifested by you all melted my heart. No one could have appreciated the gracious sentiment of those flowers more than I did. They stand for mutual confidence and love; let them be for a sign between thee and me, and between thy people and my people. The love of woman has always been a great factor in affairs civil as well as religious, and between us, whose swords have severed and wounded, it is eminently fitting that this strong force should unite to heal. Come and see us; what you did for Miss Willard in the South shall be done for you in the North. If you think us cold and stern, look on us in our homes; you will find that in the crevices of our rough ledges the harebells grow; and all along our highways bloom the forget-me-nots."

Mrs. Blair is the daughter of a minister, and knows right well "by heart" the bitter theological controversies that, in a previous generation, hardened the hearts of kindly men and women toward each other, and solidified the very blood in their veins. She has witnessed the blight of that man-made exegesis that took for granted that, whatever he was not, a man was always "master of his own house," so that the subjection of women became a cardinal doctrine in the churches of the "Standing Order."

And here we have a book crystallized out of the character, conscience and keen observation of a woman most unworldly, yet by knowledge and experience a woman of the world. Whoever wishes to know the true inwardness of New England life—its daily doings, its light and shade, its good and bad, its grandeur and its pettiness, its strenuous will, shy sentiment, deep heart—will find all embodied and described in "'Lisbeth Wilson." Never was individuality more clearly etched, or the perspective of events better maintained. The flavor of the New England home vernacular is rendered to a dot. Pithy phrases abound; homely figures of speech are loaded with good common sense. "The strength of the hills" is here, the murmur of the streams, the fascinating odors of the forest. Within the home what immaculate cleanliness, what comfort, what repression. No character in the book is more heartening than that of Lettice, the native "help" of the Wilson family, who "talks up" to its tyrannical head with a wit and logic that outrun the wisdom of the gentle mother and the beautiful, heroic daughter. Indeed, Lettice gets the better of the old man in words and ways that do one good as it doth the upright in heart. And neighbor King, the mighty hunter, with his knack of saying the inevitable best thing, and making people "do his way" without being aware, these typical characters are but pendants to the central figures, 'Lisbeth and John, whose pure and holy love is set upon by the old father's determination that "a young man who does not believe in the 'decrees' shall never marry into his family."

We cannot, however, refrain from rejoicing in this public manner over the fact that in these days of decadence and dolorosity Mrs. Blair makes her story end happily for all concerned. We owe her a debt of thanks for having given us a prose idyl whose music ripples on as brightly as a brook of her own New Hampshire hills. It is a religious book, but wholly free from cant. Its inspirations will lead any who follows them to the heights of wholesome character and to a true and tender faith in Him who is the world's Ideal, even Christ, our Lord.

WHY I AM A VEGETARIAN.

BY J. HOWARD MOORE.

Many vegetarians eschew flesh for hygienic (selfish) considerations. They do not feel that it is unbecoming to make their stomachs graves, but they think it is unhealthy. Others are vegetarian for ethical considerations. Hygienic reasons are visible to them but secondary. I am an ethical vegetarian. I eschew flesh for the benefit especially of the creatures whose corpses I would otherwise gnaw. To my mind it is just as demonstrable that it is wrong to slay an ox for fun or food as that a human chattel is hideous. They are both phases of the same selfishness.

I am a vegetarian because I believe that our present day ethics was evolved from that puerile and medieval assumption that all other kinds of creatures and all worlds were created especially for the species homo. Evolution has taught us the kinship of all creatures. The ancient hiatus between man and the other animals has been effectually sewed up. The ox man enslaves and slays and the poor reptile that wriggles in his pathway are his brothers, partaking of his nature and sharing his destiny.

The doctrine that on mankind's account all the rest of the animal world came into being and that all other animals are mere hunks devoid of all psychic qualities found in man is a doctrine about as sagacious as the old geocentric theory of the universe. Whether we realize it or not, the doctrine is not one whit less heathenish than the doctrine of the ancient Greeks, Romans, Jews, et al., that they themselves were the pets of the gods and all the rest of mankind were soulless "barbarians." The industrious bee, the civilized ant, the devoted steed, the mischievous ape, the irascible serpent, the sagacious elephant, the beautiful gazelle and the great honest ox have within them in embryo all the emotions that roll through the soul of man. Fear, love, fidelity, hate, joy, selfishness, curiosity—are all found everywhere and they are the same passions that heave your breast and mine. The faithful dog who stood over the lifeless body of his master grieving for recognition and starting at every flutter of his garments, till he himself died of starvation, was just as noble as if he had all his days walked on his hind legs and worn a cane. The honest ox is not less honest because he is a quadruped. The wild bird who takes her life in her wings to save her nestlings from the voracious serpent, and the mother-bear away on the Arctic snows, who allows herself to be massacred in order to save her child, have just as genuine mother-love and love just as sacred as that which burns in the breast of woman. The ingenious ant which tends its fields, gathers its harvests, keeps slaves and armies and goes to war and performs about all the antics of civilized man, except maltreating the females and drinking gin, is no less civilized because it is miniature. And the Christian who goes to church on Sunday and wails long prayers, and on week days beats his oxen over the face with a walnut whip handle or lashes the flanks of his overburdened horse till the strained tendons are ready to snap from their attachments, or goes out with gleaming knife and massacres and devours his naïve fellow creatures, is no less infernal because he teaches himself that a deed that is ruthless when done to himself is perfectly fair when done to a dog.

I am a vegetarian, because anything else is hideous and unnatural. The vegetal world contains all the elements necessary to human sustenance, and in a much more prime condition than they are found in the diseased tissues of our mistreated servants. The belief that we can not have peach in our dimples and diamonds in our brains without dead bodies in our digestion is a belief having no foundation except ignorance. Vegetal fibrin is identical with animal fibrin, and vegetal casein is identical with animal casein. The vegetal world, in fact, is the natural storehouse, and the only original storehouse from which animals may derive energy. No animal can produce protoplasm, which is the basis of all life; this is a function of the plant, and of the plant only. All an animal can do is to take it after it is produced and burn it up. Animals are simply locomotives consuming the otherwise squandered energy which plants slowly catch from the sun. It is a beautiful process—plants storing up energy from the soil and sun (the inorganic) and handing it over to the animal, and the animal using this energy and then completing the circle by sending the elements back again to the inorganic. And it is an impropriety in nature, whereby animals violate this beautiful arrangement by turning round and swallowing each other.

Act toward others as you would that others would act toward you, has been the basic precept of the morals of the generations. This wonderful rule has been mouthed and mouthed since the days of Confucius, two thousand four hundred years ago. But it never has been lived. "Do as you would be done by." Certainly! But to whom? Each class or swarm has been its own little pet coterie to whom it, after a fashion, observed this rule. Slavery and slaughter have been the rule toward every one else. The Troglodytes hunted the Ethiopians in four horse chariots with as little compunction as Americans hunt the wood-deer to-day. A Roman could take the life of his Gallic slave with as much impunity as an American can slay his bovine servant to-day. Yet to kill a Gaul was murder as truly as to kill a Roman. It hasn't been very long since all the Christian nations hunted their dusky brethren in Africa, and sold and loaned and lashed them as we do the horse to-day. All these crimes are now matters of course to us, but we are daily doing crimes as knavish as Troglodyte ever committed. It is the same old story. We carry our eyes in the back of our heads. We can see behind us but not around us. After so many centuries of infamy we can see the solidarity of our species, but we are such babies we cannot see the solidarity of all the animal world.

Of course the apology of the criminals has always been the same as it is to-day—that the crucified creatures were of a different order of beings—that a chasm yawned between the persecutors and the persecuted—that there was not a solidarity. The Gaul had no rights because he was a "barbarian," and the fact that he had a nervous system and a love of existence had nothing to do with it. The Ethiopian and the woman had no rights that were inconvenient to respect, because they had no soul and because their subordination was God-ordained. And the honest ox and the faithful dog have no rights to-day, because they were made to be murdered!

I do not eat my fellow creatures for the same reason I do not enslave my brother or treat my sister as an appendage or otherwise monopolize the sweets and opportunities of the planet—because I believe in a rational application of the Golden Rule. There are on this bal billions of beings. They are my fellow creatures. I do not want them to live simply as conveniences for me. I do not want their pleasures, and I do not want them to drink my sorrows. I want simply my own, and I am perfectly content to rob no one. In the wonderful words of another: "I never want happiness that gives another pain. I wish not happiness from others, only happiness out of the bosom of the great All, which comes like the red flowers of the oleander."

WILLARD HALL, NOONTIDE LINKS.

For four days we listened to the splendid eloquence of that prince among thinkers, Wilbur F. Crafts, and wished that by some act of ours Willard Hall might become one great phonograph, reproducing his word mosaics for the cheer and guidance of the weary toilers yet to come. Here are a few of them.

. . . . . .

"The self-respecting workman should resent any propaganda that makes too much of mere physical comfort."

. . . . . .

"The rich man who knows nothing but the art of money-making is to be pitied by the workman, whose work is not his world, who goes from it at sunset to spend his evenings with Longfellow and Tennyson and Curtis and Motley and Isaiah and John and Jesus."

. . . . . .

"Such a man will say to the devil of materialism, who bids him make bread out the stones of riot, that man can not live by bread alone."

. . . . . .

"Let us be like the bird, one moment lighted
Upon a twig that swings;
He feels it yield, but sings on unaffrighted,
Knowing he has his wings."—Victor Hugo.

. . . . . .

She was a resident of the Empire state, and homeward bound. She said: "I have one hundred loyal temperance children in my care, and I would tell them about this Temple and bear them some word from you." So the leader wrote: "The children hold to-morrow's secrets, God bless them, and straightway there rose before me another Temple, whose altar stones dripped red with blood of bird and beast, but the Holy Boy, disputing with the wise men there, was, and still is, 'the Hope of the world.'"

LATHRAP CHAPEL CORNER-STONE.

Editor Union Signal:—"Happy Harriman" has this last week of May known a great joy. The corner-stone of Lathrap Chapel has been laid with appropriate and impressive ceremonies. Before the laying of it (which occurred on Wednesday afternoon, May 22,) at one of the great commencement gatherings of our American Temperance University, Harriman people subscribed over half a million brick for building the chapel, thus testifying to their interest in its erection, and their devotion to its purpose. They will contribute still more towards the Lathrap Chapel fund.

The corner-stone services closed our commencement exercises, which had been of great variety and had given especial satisfaction. They began properly on Sunday with three sermons in the W. C. T. U. Temple; continued Monday with the final examinations, followed by song and speech from the Silver Lake Quartette and Rev. Dr. Mead at night; were made emphatic for temperance on Tuesday by the addresses of University Prohibition Day, as Tuesday is designated, Dr. J. B. Grow, of New Jersey, Dr. T. C. Carter, of Tennessee, Dr. C. H. Mead, of New York, and Vice-chancellor Hopkins occupying the morning and afternoon hours; were given the proper scholarly quality Tuesday evening by the address before the literary societies by Rev. D. J. C. Allen, of Brooklyn; grew popular in the sense of general participation, after that address, through the brick subscriptions asked and obtained before the large audience was dismissed, and culminated on Wednesday with the graduation efforts of a class of twelve in the forenoon, succeeded at 4 p. m. by the laying of the corner-stone.

Providence gave us perfect weather for that occasion. Sweeter air and bluer sky never made the heart glad. The day was a benediction. And who will ever forget that scene, as they beheld it,—the earnest assemblage gathered by the foundation walls, the azure deeps above them, and the green mountains uplifted around—a picture in blue and emerald, in beauty and majesty and splendor such as would have rejoiced the poetic soul of Mrs. Mary T. Lathrap, and would have inspired her prophet's tongue. How General Fisk, too, would have reveled in it, and how would his eloquent lips have found expression fit for such a time and place! Mrs. Fisk was there, and spoke, as at the graduation exercises a few hours earlier she had spoken, out of a full heart. The moment was most impressive when she referred to her husband's patriotic devotion to his land and flag, and besought the young manhood before her to be loyal to God and country, and when, in quick response, the University Cadet Corps, present under arms, gave her the military salute and dipped before her their beautiful silk banner in graceful and reverent respect.

The corner-stone of Lathrap Chapel really constitutes the formal beginning of Fisk Memorial Hall, since the chapel is to be a portion of, or inseparably connected with, the magnificent architectural pile that shall bear such name. While the chapel has its own distinct proportions and individuality in the building plan, it rises from a foundation common to the whole, and already wholly complete. Thus the laying of its corner-stone marked also the formal consecration of the splendid site for both memorial edifices—the chapel, in memory of Mrs. Lathrap; the hall, in memory of General Fisk—and marked the beginning of both superstructures.

Brief addresses were made by Chancellor Spence, Vice-chancellor Hopkins, Judge James Sevier and Dr. Carter. In the box, set in the corner-stone, were photographs of Mrs. Lathrap and General and Mrs. Fisk, copies of The Union Signal and the Voice, with local literature and a copy of "Wealth and Waste," the first text book prepared under the auspices of the University.

The enrollment of the institution reached three hundred and forty-four the past year, and this surprising number promises to be increased the year to come. It surely will be if the chapel can be completed for occupancy next fall. Now that the bricks are pledged for it why may we not receive pledges from our friends of the W. C. T. U. to lay those brick? As wages are here it costs about $2.50 to lay one thousand brick. If five hundred unions would contribute each the cost of laying one thousand it would be timely and appropriate assistance. Ten cents each from only twenty-five members of each union would cover the amount suggested from each. Are there not five hundred unions scattered throughout the north and south and west who would like to have part in this way in this memorial to Mrs. Lathrap? It would not tax one of them or a single member of them. It would be of lasting benefit. The influence of the gift would last for generations. May I not ask responses to this suggestion?

EN ROUTE IN MISSISSIPPI.

Dear Union Signal:—A night's run from Chattanooga put me in Jackson, Miss., on the morning of May 3d. There I was met by Miss Katharine Markham Power, and taken to her charmingly hospitable home, which became forthwith "my own Mississippi home." Miss Power is a young woman of whom the world is destined yet to know more fully, although she has already conquered a good portion of its territory through the unprecedented success of her unique paper, Kate Power's Review. She is of charming personal appearance and magnetic personality—a genuine Southern type. Although not a white-ribboner, she, in conjunction with Rev. M. F. Harman, had undertaken the arrangement of my meetings, and secured the Capitol building for both afternoon and evening. Alas, from various and varying causes, the W. C. T. U. is at low ebb in Jackson, and the merest handful came to both meetings. We had an informal talk together in the afternoon, and in the evening discussed the organization in its broad outlook; one or two members were secured, and a firm resolve recorded to "try again." One delightful incident was the unexpected appearance of Miss Belle Kearney, en route for the state convention. We passed the night together in goodly white-ribbon fellowship, and started the next morning for Natchez. Here, at one point or another on the road, we met the majority of the officers and delegates, and were a right merry, though very much dishevelled party by the time Natchez was reached.

An incident growing out of this trip is such a good joke I feel as if I must share it. As you doubtless know there is a very marked prejudice in parts of the South against woman's suffrage and a strong corresponding conviction that the W. C. T. U. has injured its usefulness through the adoption of this department. Naturally, therefore, an opponent of suffrage sees all white-ribboners in this light alone and reads his own preconceived opinions into his judgment concerning them. When our dusty, grimy, bedraggled party, many of whom had traveled all night, reached Natchez, there was a gentleman of that city on the train. He said to the president of the local union the next day, "Well, I came down with your delegates yesterday. They all looked like suffragists and Northern women except one, and she was a typical Southern woman." When asked to describe the dress and appearance of the "typical Southern woman" he described the most ardent suffragist and only Northern woman of the party—your humble servant. Was not that delicious, and does it not prove how purely imaginary are the old lines of demarcation and how rapidly the W. C. T. U. is helping to obliterate them?

The state convention will be described in these columns by the "News from the Field" reporter, Mrs. Annie M. Harper. I need only say in passing that, although small in numbers, it was a thoroughly enjoyable convention. The spirit of the white ribbon is the same everywhere, and I had only to enter the doors of Institute Hall to feel at home. The Natchez homes were most gracious in hospitality, and the exercises from first to last were helpful and inspiring. It was a great pleasure to meet and hear Mrs. Lide Meriwether, and to feel that her force as a speaker is increasing rather than diminishing as the years go on. Y evening was charming. Miss Kearney presided in her bright, graceful, gracious way, and the welcoming speech of Miss Birdie Gore, from her invalid's chair, from which she has never moved except as carried in strong arms, was a thing to be forever remembered.

Mississippi sustains a great loss this year in the removal of its president, Mrs. Mount. For seven years she has led the forces bravely and self-sacrificingly, and has endeared herself to each and all. The women felt as if they could not give her up, but were obliged to submit to the inevitable. They showed their wisdom in choosing for her successor one of the most brilliant and efficient women in the National organization—Miss Kearney. She did not know how to accept in view of her other duties, and yet the call seemed so imperative she dared not disobey. Mrs. Curlee was made vice-president-at-large to represent the president in the event of her necessary absence, and results have proven the wisdom of this course. At the time of her election Miss Kearney had given up all thought of going to London for the World's Convention, but an imperative cablegram makes it impossible for her not to go, and she has, therefore, most hastily decided to sail on the Berlin. I am sure her loyal constituents will be willing to surrender her for a few months for the sake of the larger outlook, and meantime Mrs. Curlee, and the most efficient corresponding secretary, Mrs. Somerville, will not only "hold the fort," but march out upon the enemy.

I found Natchez a charming old city, and despite the dust, greatly enjoyed my drives in the vicinity. One of my keenest delights was to see the home in which that woman of the great heart and great brain,—Mrs. Harriet B. Kells, was born—and to meet so many of her warm personal friends and admirers. Mississippi still bears the imprint of her work, and no state was ever more truly loyal to a gifted daughter.

From Natchez, after a night of rest in Jackson, I went to McComb City, the banner union of the year. After an evening address in the opera house, and a meeting with the L. T. L. the next day, I went to Magnolia, where I was the guest of the Methodist pastor, Rev. Mr. Edgar, and where I found the town not only ready, but eager for a union. The next morning at nine o'clock I organized one of the most hopeful unions I have ever seen, and I do not say that because they honored me by giving it my name, but because of the quick, responsive way in which they accepted suggestions and set themselves to work. From Magnolia to Hazlehurst, where, also, I was the guest of the Methodist minister, Rev. R. W. Bailey. He was in attendance upon the state Epworth League Convention, so I filled his pulpit in the morning and spoke upon the organization in the evening. I attempted to organize, but alas, Hazlehurst has witnessed the deaths of two or three unions and is not easily moved to action. I could only sow the seed and trust to future harvesting.

Back again to Jackson, where the failure of the previous meeting was splendidly atoned for in the kindly appreciative audience which met me in the Christian church. The next day I took the westbound train, crossed the Mississippi at Vicksburg, and traversed Louisiana, through its wealth of semi-tropical forests till Shreveport was reached.

I left Mississippi with a genuine regret, for I had learned to love its stately forests, its wealth of roses, and above all, its gracious, kindly hearts. And so I said, not "good-bye," but auf wieder sehen even as the Natchez convention sang me out of its doors to the sweet, sad strains of "God be with you till we meet again." Whether here, or "at Jesus' feet," that meeting will surely come.

Yours to serve,
Katharine Lente Stevenson.

SEVERAL GOOD SUGGESTIONS.

Dear Union Signal:—I wish to "second the proposition" made in May 23 number of The Union Signal by Mrs. Margaret A. Lake, under the caption "American Medical Association."

The suggestion is, "that at the gathering of the National W. C. T. U. in Baltimore, in October, the subject of total abstinence for the individual, with its whys and wherefores, be prominent in most alluring fashion." A society lady, an earnest Christian, living in one of our Western cities, said to me not long since: "I fear some of our good people are taking a backward step in regard to total abstinence. I have been offered wine at several ladies' receptions this winter, and my husband and I have dined where wine has been served in the homes of church members. I dread the 'coming out' of my son and daughter under such circumstances."

I am convinced that we have lost from our ranks many excellent women, and have never gained many more, like this one quoted, because they have not been able to tread the dizzy maze of the legal and political phases of the "Temperance Reform," now so familiar to our leaders, and the weak point in our National Union is that individual members of our local unions are not thoroughly and intelligently grounded in the reasons why they are abstainers, and why everybody else should be.

I trust, too, that our "program makers" will have presented in practical form the suggestion made some time ago by Dr. Bushnell, to the effect that each strong elderly union be asked to "mother" some young union, specially when these latter are in "missionary territory." Let us make the work of the locals a strong point in this coming annual meeting. Every one should be a power, and every member a power in her community.

And while my pen flies on, please let me suggest that there is a vast amount of territory yet to be possessed even in the United States of America, and much of it is "missionary territory." I move a missionary organizer be appointed whose expenses shall be paid out of the treasury, so that she need not be unduly anxious to make public addresses for fees or collections to maintain herself, but may be free to do what is more important, secure, by individual contact, and instruct women who will be good local workers. I have a great concern that we need to develop the individual more. I hope somebody will indorse this position, or won't, or something, so that we can have an expression of opinion and explain ourselves more definitely if necessary.

Yours in the work,

Franklin, Ind. ALICE R. PALMER.

A MODEL INDIAN UNION.

DEAR UNION SIGNAL:—As our UNION SIGNAL correspondent was not at our state convention, I fear she may fail to tell you of one union of which we are specially proud—our Indian union, of Warm Springs, Ore., a mission under the United Presbyterian church. This union was only organized about six months ago. The organizer, Mrs. Unruh, wrote me that she feared the Indian women were too poor to pay even six months' state dues per member, and I wrote back that, under the circumstances, if they could just pay enough to have representation it would be all right. But, lo! at the state convention we discovered that this union of nearly sixty members has paid state and National dues for the whole year—over eleven dollars. They also had prepared themselves a banner, which they, by request, sent up to the convention, and was exhibited at the evening mass-meeting, and created the most intense interest and enthusiasm—a real Indian banner, prepared by the Indian women. It is of beautifully tanned or dressed skin, eighteen by twenty-seven inches (the usual shape of our W. C. T. U. banners) and with a border of some kind of soft fur around the edge. On the banner are skillfully embroidered Indian symbols. In the center is a white star—the Indian symbol of light—for said they, "the temperance light has come to us." At the bottom of the banner is an Indian "pipe of peace," but around the "pipe of peace" is coiled "the black serpent, intoxicating drink." Above the "pipe of peace" is a tomahawk—the Indian symbol of "war"—but around the handle of this tomahawk is tied a beautiful bow of white ribbon, to show that "the only war they will now engage in is the peaceful W. C. T. U. battle against King Alcohol." Is it not a beautiful thought? But to me one of the most touching designs of all was that, at the top of the banner was beautifully embroidered a spray of the "white narcissus," "in honor of the fact," say they, "that our chieftain, our state president, is Narcissa White-Kinney." Don't we do well to be proud of such a union? Before our state convention this union held a meeting, and extracts from their speeches were translated and sent to us, as few of them can talk English. Here are some of them:

"There is a great difference between a white woman and an Indian woman till both are drunk, then there is no difference."

"It is said we are a dying race, but whisky kills us Indians off faster than anything else."

"We are glad so many women are working to destroy whisky, and we hope we will hear from the big meeting at Roseburg" (our state convention).

At our annual meeting we created this year a new department—"work among Indians." Our state convention was one of the most successful, enthusiastic and harmonious ever held in Oregon or elsewhere, but as Mrs. Nash, our state reporter, will report it, I will say nothing more of it. NARCISSA WHITE-KINNEY.

AMERICAN ACADEMY OF MEDICINE.

DEAR UNION SIGNAL:—The twentieth annual meeting of the American Academy of Medicine was held in Levering Hall of the Johns Hopkins University, Baltimore, immediately preceding the convening of the great American Medical Association, reported last week. Among the papers read and warmly indorsed, was one by Dr. De Lancey Rochester, of Buffalo, N. Y., on the "Proper Teaching of Physiology in Public Schools as a Means of Preventing Intemperance and Disease." Its discussion was coupled with that of one on "The Economics of the Social Evil," by Dr. Woods Hutchinson, of Des Moines, Ia.

The members of the Academy generally agreed with the opinions expressed in these papers—that the remedy lies in the home and school education, and copies of the papers were ordered by the meeting, sent to the leading periodicals of the country in order to have the news of the physicians made as public as possible. Another of the papers read was on "What Shall we do with our Alcoholic Inebriate?" The following were among the conclusions reached by the doctor: "The method usually in vogue, of a fine and slight imprisonment, does not reclaim the individual nor reduce the number of inebriates. No good reason exists why the insane should receive more humane care than the alcoholic inebriate. The cost for erecting, equipping and maintaining hospitals for the inebriate would be reimbursed to the state by the lessened expense now caused by the murders, suicides, thefts, arsons, accidents, disease and poverty brought about by permitting the inebriate to run at large."

No mention is made, in the press report from which the above is taken, of the conclusion of conclusions that seems inevitable in considering the "alcoholic inebriate" and the grewsome results of "permitting him to run at large" and the question naturally arises, Why not bring the same practical common sense to bear in considering the "alcoholic inebriate," and alcoholism in general, with its results usually worse than death, that you would bring to bear, good medical friends, in the consideration of other virulent diseases, small-pox or cholera, for instance, and their might-be victims?

Baltimore, Md. MARGARET A. LAKE.

DEAR COMRADES:—Our faithful friend in Washington, D. C., Mrs. Margaret B. Platt, gives us some practical words concerning HONORARY MEMBERS.

"The importance of securing honorary members can scarcely be overestimated. Judging from the reports from all quarters of the field this wing of our army has been neglected. Bear in mind, sisters, the honorary member is, or will be a voter. In what better or surer way can we hope to win him for our principles than through membership in our organization. Many times I have thought that if men who denounced the W. C. T. U. and ridiculed her methods could be persuaded to attend some of our meetings, could come into closer touch and a better acquaintance with this great body of Christian women, they would cease their denunciations and become our friends, if not our converts.

"I am convinced that numbers of men who may not agree with us in all points would, if properly approached, give us their membership, because they cannot help feeling that no matter what our personal differences of opinion may be, the W. C. T. U. stands as the uncompromising enemy of the saloon and the steadfast defender of the home, and as such deserves the support of every man who truly loves his God, his home and his country.

"Once a member, he can not fail to have an added interest in our work, and must, of necessity, begin to receive a new education, provided the local union does its duty by him. He must, then, receive especial but very quiet attentions. He must be invited to attend the meetings. His presence must be secured at an occasional meeting where the program has been prepared with a thought for his particular mental and spiritual needs, though he must never suspect that to be the case. With a view to his future usefulness in the ranks of the home protection army his moral vertebra must be strengthened and his intellectual appetite judiciously stimulated with the finest preparations in our literary materia medica, which, under God's blessing, is doing so much for the healing of the nations. These can be safely used specifically or empirically, but must be given with discretion in small doses at first, with a careful eye for resultant symptoms. They will never fail to be helpful if rightly used.

"The honorary member can be an important factor in the work of local unions, in case of a no-license campaign, a movement against a local saloon or any definite, aggressive work. The advice of men interested in the cause, and who are identified with the organization is to be sought for and appreciated; and if they have a membership interest they will have the cause more sincerely at heart and be more anxious to secure outside aid in every laudable way. The honorary member should be made to feel that he is something more than merely an appendage to the local unions, added for the sake of the financial benefit that may thereby accrue to the treasury. The good or ill will of one certain man in the precincts of some local union may make or mar the success of that union. Then be very patient, very wise, very kind, very winning, and no matter how stinging a provocation to anger may be given, retain through all the spirit of love and true Christian courtesy, rendering in all cases good for evil, remembering that it is love—'the greatest of these'—which is to win the world for our Master.

"There may be many ways in which the honorary member can be useful, and he is generally pleased to be in service. He can often render very material aid in securing the use of halls or churches, or the services of speakers. He can aid in preparing an evening's entertainment (especially if he have any musical ability) and if it be a prohibition program he may gain some good, new thought thereby. In short, we need the help of our brothers in every way. By bringing them into membership we bring them into closer relation with our great principles and put them in the way of becoming champions of our cause. A union of forces is needed. Let us make a concerted effort to win our brethren. One hundred and fifty thousand new honoraries means an incalculable amount of added influence, interest and success."

Shall we not unite forces during these summer months when many plans for other consecutive work will be interrupted, to win to our ways a host of honoraries?

TEMPERANCE TEMPLE ITEMS

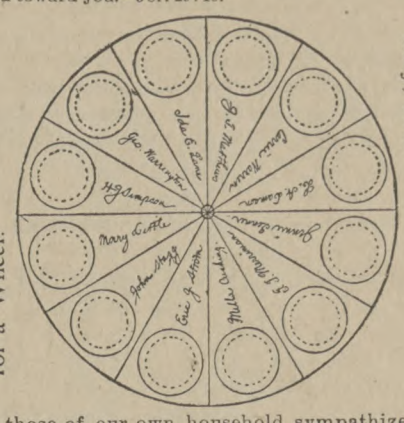
BY MATILDA B. CARSE.

PRAYER.—O Lord, remember me, and visit me.—Jer. 15:15.

PROMISE.—I will visit you, and perform my good word toward you.—Jer. 29:10.

The great Wheel race has started. Won't YOU join it....Send for a Wheel.



$100, $50, $25 to the three who fill the most Wheels by January, 1896.

When those of our own household sympathize with us, and try to help bear our burdens, it gives us wonderful cheer and comfort; but when one whom we have never seen, and who has only heard of our trials, comes forward with aid and sympathy, our heart is touched to the very core, and we feel that the Christ love knows neither race nor country, but all are one in Him. Thus the writer felt on receiving a letter from Mr. C. I. Adama von Scheltema, Arnheim, Holland, from which the following extract is taken: "I see no way to give you any assistance in your admirable Wheel work, and yet I am anxious to show my interest in your splendid endeavor for the success of our great and holy cause. I send you the inclosed coupon ($15), due July 1, on my Temple Trust Bond. I wish I was able to do more, but my means are very limited, and only by living in the most simple way do I find myself able to follow your example in a very small degree. Yet if every one did all he could, how much more the work of the Master would flourish. My best wishes for the success of the Wheels. May the endeavor of the young people become a blessing to themselves, and form them into heroes in the prohibition and franchise war." It will be remembered that Mr. von Scheltema is the leader of the temperance movement in Holland, and almost entirely supports the work there out of his own private means.

Mr. Wilbur F. Crafts, the fearless and able leader of the Sunday observance movement, has been giving a series of meetings in Willard Hall on Sociology during the past week to a deeply interested audience. He presented us with two very old coins for the Temple; one was a $2.50 gold piece, the other a fifty cent piece. He said he thought them too sacred for any use but the Temple. Mr. N. F. Woodbury, Auburn, Me., found on his bank counter two or three years ago $1.85 left by some unknown person. "Now I have concluded," he writes, "that it had better go to help the great work in which you are engaged."

Mrs. H. M. H. Wheeler has just sent forty filled Wheels from the Taunton, Mass., W. C. T. U., with a promise of soon sending the balance. Miss Amelia J. Kilborn, Lee, Mass., sends a filled Wheel and says: "One of the names on the Wheel, Martha Swan, is that of my grandmother, a beautiful old lady one hundred and two years old, and a member of our union." Miss Kilborn adds: "I hope soon to return nine other Wheels that I have given to friends to fill, and more are called for. I inclose fifty cents for stamps for twenty-five wheels." We thank Miss Kilborn for her interest and aid, and hope she may attain the marvelous age of her grandmother. Miss Kilborn asks: "Can money sent in Wheels be counted toward a union's hundred dollar pledge when premiums are also given for the Wheels? Yes, but each Wheel will only count a dollar on the pledge. A dear old saint writes: "Please send me one of those famous Wheels, I will send for more when it is filled. I should have sent before only was waiting for some one in our union who I know could do better than I can, for I am sick and old and poor."

Mrs. H. P. Cummings sends $50 on the hundred dollar pledge of the Waco, Mass., W. C. T. U. Mrs. Laura Cunningham sends $30 on the pledge of the Good Will, So. Dak., W. C. T. U.; $29.50 is sent through Mrs. J. W. Bloehn on the pledge of the Wooster, O., W. C. T. U. The state treasurer of New Hampshire, Mrs. Abby E. McIntire sends $25, the gift of the Franklin, N. H., union, to be applied on the pledge to the state tablet. The Carthage, Ill., W. C. T. U., through Mrs. I. L. Botts, sends $15, which completes their hundred dollar pledge. This brave union's work for the Temple is not ended, however, for Mrs. Botts writes they are filling Wheels and mite-boxes, and many subscriptions are still to be paid. Mrs. E. R. Hall sends $10 for the Bedford, Ia., union; $10 comes from the White Sulphur Springs, Mont., union, through Miss Mary Holliday; $2.80 is sent from the L. T. L. of Shenandoah, Pa., and $4.50 from the Haledon, N. J., union. Mrs. Frances Carroll sends $49.80 in behalf of the Philmont, N. Y., union on their one hundred dollar pledge. The above amount was raised through mite box collections.

All orders for Temple Wheels and mite-boxes and everything pertaining to the Temple should be addressed to Mrs. Matilda B. Carse, The Temple, Chicago. Send two cent stamp for either the Temple Wheel or mite-box. Money orders and checks should be made out in the name of Mr. G. B. Shaw, treasurer, and sent to our financial secretary, Miss Sara G. Johnson, Room 1111, The Temple, Chicago.

A CALL TO SERVICE.

BY MRS. MOVEAN-ADAMS.

Oh, thou who wouldst a laborer be with God,
Win others to the path thy feet have trod;
Advance, advance, and keep thee to the task,
Give first, thyself, the service thou wouldst ask.
Let God speak through thee. Who would not rejoice
To be the trumpet for a Leader's voice?
Of such a temper, all of beaten gold,
That His true signals may through it be told;
Of such a form, without a fleck or flaw,
That it shall rightly sound His righteous law,
And shout, in clarion tones, distinct, afar,
"Enlist, enlist, and rally to this war."
Strive not to sound thine own poor human words,
Remember that the message is the Lord's.

"PRISONERS OF HOPE."

BY LADY HENRY SOMERSET.

[An interview with the Warden of Sherborne Reformatory Prison for Women. Condensed from The Woman's Signal.]

(Concluded.)

I looked into the superintendent's face, and when I noted the fine lines that anxiety and thought had drawn about her features, I remembered how Kingsley said that Frederick Maurice reminded him of the Apostle John, because he disbelieved in the representations of the Apostle given in art as of a smooth-faced boy. "The lines of care," he said, "are those that love has drawn, and the furrows mean the power of bearing the sufferings of others."

From the hall we passed to the dairies, all exquisitely neat and clean, and from thence to the kitchen, where we saw the baked beans that were about to be placed in the oven for Sunday's dinner. Every one who knows Boston will understand the appearance of the great brown jars filled with their nourishing contents and the pork placed in the center that flavors the beans. Immense steam cauldrons contain the coffee, which is made from rye. This is grown on the premises, and is lightly roasted, placed in sacks, and then steeped in cold water and afterwards made into coffee.

"I have found it," said Mrs. Johnson, "of the utmost value, especially to those who have been suffering from alcoholism, as it has a peculiar soothing effect on the nerves. Oatmeal is also invaluable in this way."

The beautiful white bread on the table showed with what care the food was prepared. It would have been impossible to have wished anything better on one's own breakfast table than the long crisp loaves that were ready for use.

"Have you no punishments?" I said.

"Yes," said Mrs. Johnson. "Of course we have. There is a work-room set apart for those who are sentenced to go thither, where they have to work without recreation for one week or two, as the case may be, but I seldom have to send an inmate there more than once. And there is the dungeon below that I will show you," and so saying we descended into the lower part to see the place that bore this formidable name.

"When I first came," she said, "the idea was entertained that we should require a number of such places, but I have found that one was sufficient and that it is generally empty. Still, there are some perfectly unruly wills that can only be tamed by being dealt with summarily, and by being shown that all bad conduct brings its own punishment. They are like children," she said, "only they have had years of want of discipline that makes the training all the harder, but it is wonderful what a little tact can do."

From the dungeons we went to the monster dynamo which manufactures the electric light, and the steam engines that drive the machinery. Afterwards we passed through the dormitories of Division 3, which are nearly the same as Division 4, only scantier furniture, no electric light, and no hours of recreation allowed in the dormitory. As we passed round the courtyard, Mrs. Johnson said, "I may sometimes be accused of sentiment, but I believe in cultivating the emotions as a necessary part of every human life. One time," she said, "there was a woman dying in the hospital. It was a summer evening, and she was lying by the window, and it suddenly occurred to me that it would be well that there should be a feeling of the oneness of the life throughout the community, and so I went into Division 4 and said, 'Girls, there is a woman dying to-night, and I want you to walk two by two softly across the courtyard and kneel under her window, and sing a hymn and say your prayers there instead of in your rooms.' In a moment," she said, "I saw the answer that met my request, and they filed out as orderly as nuns and did just as I said. It was one of the most beautiful sights I have ever seen. A woman was in punishment on the other side of the court, and she told me afterward that that hour changed her life—that as she watched those figures kneeling there and heard them sing and felt what the influence was, out of her darkness she first saw the ray of a new dawn, and that from that time she resolved to do all she could to help those who had the best interests of the women so much at heart. Sentiment is not sentimentality; it is a cultivation of the best instincts in human nature."

The saddest sight, perhaps—although it was a beautiful one—was the long nursery where the babies lived. The little white cots were arranged in lines, and beautiful children, all unconscious of their surroundings, were set on rugs upon the floor, or lying asleep in their beds. "These are babies," explained Mrs. Johnson, "born in prison or else brought here with their mothers. The women come here after their work, take their babies, and dress them and wash them. They are allowed to sleep with them; we bring them together as much as possible, for we believe it is wrong to separate the children from them, as it appeals to their best instincts, and we are able to help them very much in many ways and show them how to bring them up better than anything they have known." She told us some sad histories as we stood there, but while she, of course, is obliged to be aware of the stories that are connected with the children, on account of her desire to bring men to a sense of their responsibility and induce them to realize that they have to share the burden of the shame which they have brought on another life, she said, "I have made it a rule ever since I came to the prison to know none of the women's histories. A clerk keeps, of course, a record for the government, but I do not see it, nor do I allow any one ever to ask for what the inmates are confined. I believe in shutting the door of the past the day they enter here, and letting them feel that it is a reality that they have begun a new existence, and so I am able honestly to say, if any one asks me, that I know nothing of their history. Of course, the women tell me sometimes, but I do not encourage it. I think it is best they should feel that a curtain has been drawn which shuts it all out, unless I can help them in some definite way." I understood here the great secret of her success. From childhood we are accustomed to the régime that is continually harking back over misdeeds that ought to be forgotten, and there is nothing that is so likely to help shatter the broken lives as a realization that another chance has been given them, and the past is really gone.

The hospital, the dispensary of the lady physician, the library, were next visited, and finally we returned to Mrs. Johnson's house to take a hasty meal before chapel at six o'clock. We went to the vesper service. "Fully half the women," says Mrs. Johnson, "are Catholics, and on Sunday morning the priest comes to say mass at seven, and we have Protestant service at eight. He is a help to me in all ways, and I think it right to assist the women to carry out the duties of the religion to which they belong." The chapel is a spacious building, and on the platform on which stood the altar that is used on Sundays for the Catholic service was a harmonium, a reading desk and the chairs for the superintendent and visitors. What struck me most was the exquisite profusion of flowers which adorned it every Saturday night. It looked veritably like a spring bower, and in nothing do the prisoners take more pride than in the beauty of the decorations for their place of worship. Many of them, of course, assisted to grow the plants that adorn it. Two large oil paintings ornamented the opposite sides of the rostrum, one representing Christ with the woman taken in sin, and the other the Nativity, while in the centre was Carlo Dolce's head of the Virgin, surmounted by the motto, "God is Love."

I do not remember ever having been at a more impressive scene. Silently and slowly, with exquisite regularity, the women filed in the different divisions allotted to the grades to which they belonged, and as one noted their upright bearing, the carriage of the head and manner in which they were trained to hold themselves, one understood the force of the gentle discipline that was continually bringing an uplift into their lives.

It was the evening of their temperance anniversary, and after prayer and Scripture reading the two temperance secretaries—one of them belonging to the fourth and the other to the third division—gave their reports; clear-faced, blue-eyed, bright young girls who looked as though prison did not suppress that hope which should always spring immortal, and which it is a sin to crush out of life. There was not a prisoner who had her hair cut close, but all were neat, and, to all appearance, might have been in a training school for household service. Among them, of course, were many colored girls.

I was asked to speak, and I never addressed an audience with whom I felt in more profound sympathy. It seemed to me that here was leaven working indeed, that should eventually leaven the world's lump if only those who had gone astray could all be led along so easy a path and with such gentle influence brought back again into the ways of righteousness and peace.

At the close of the meeting a colored girl from the ranks of the "Trust Women"—a name by which the fourth division is known—stood below the platform and put her hand on the superintendent's foot and asked to speak with me. Leave was at once granted, showing how much confidence is reposed in the prisoners. Poor child, she only wanted to tell me how bad she had been and how much she hoped to be better. Mrs. Johnson explained that before she had left for Europe last year, she had not a hope that this girl could rise above the third division; but when Mrs. Johnson had come back she had met her with a radiant face, pointing to the red badge on her breast, and said, "See, I have done it, Mrs. Johnson; I have got to be a 'trust' woman!"

As I went into the darkness to enter the train that was to take me back to Boston, I felt more strongly than I have ever felt before how great is the responsibility upon every nation as to the manner in which it deals with those "prisoners and captives" for whom we often too perfunctorily pray. Are we forever to recognize the prison life as penal only, and will not the time dawn when a higher civilization will tell us that it must be reformatory if it is to build up the best interests of the people? God grant that such an institution may some day adorn England as it now crowns America.

WALKING IN HIS SHADOW.

BY LOIS L. SMITH.

[Reprinted by request.]

It was a hot September day, and it seemed all too soon for the summer visitors to be returning to the heated brick houses of their city homes. But the "season" was ended, papa had returned to business, the home-schools were open, and the non-residents of Ocean Grove were crowding every outward train. With sunburned faces and hands well covered with the "popular shade of tan," their spruce new suits, that had glistened in the June sunshine as they journeyed hitherward, grown limp and dull, if not actually "tattered and torn," by the wear and tear of two months' life at the seashore, the homeward bound procession pressed steadily through the great gates at Broadway and Main avenue from morning until night.

Taking an after-dinner seat on the east porch, that I might catch the ocean breeze, my attention was soon attracted by a mother and her little girl, scarcely more than three years old. Evidently they were foot-passengers to the railroad station. With one hand the mother carried a heavy traveling bag, and, with the other, she held a sun umbrella of ample dimensions; both hands being thus occupied, she was unable to lead the little one, who was following as best she could, and, as they passed me, I heard her say, "Walk in my shadow, baby, and you will not feel the heat." With a bunch of pretty beach grasses in her hand, and her dearest dolly hugged tightly in her arms, the wee toddler endeavored to obey. She drew nearer to her mamma, and so, "walking in her shadow," they went on out of my sight. But the sweet lesson that the incident brought to my spiritual apprehension remained like "dew upon the mown grass." As I looked after them with moistened eyes, I thought, "A man shall be as a shadow of a great rock in a weary land." "Because Thou hast been my help, therefore in the shadow of Thy wings will I rejoice." Be comforted, my soul! Be as a little child! Put away endless reasoning and philosophizing, and, amid the dust and heat of life's trials and sorrows, "walk in His shadow."

Baby knew nothing of the scientific facts about light and shade, but, as she heard her mother's voice, she looked up to her face, and instinctively drew nearer to her, until her shadow enveloped and shielded her from the fierce rays of the sun. Beloved, let us not think it strange, nor be amazed "concerning the fiery trials that are to try us, as though some strange thing happened unto us," but rather let us draw nigh to God as the little child drew near her mother, while our hearts cry out, "Be merciful unto me; O God, be merciful unto me! For my soul trusteth in Thee. Yea, in the shadow of Thy wings will I make my refuge, until these calamities be overpast."

In an article in the Strand Magazine on Sir Andrew Clark, the following incident is recorded as an illustration of the attitude the eminent physician took in regard to the use of stimulants: "A clergyman complained to him of feeling low and depressed, unable to face his work, and was tempted to rely on stimulants. Sir Andrew saw that the position was a perilous one, and that it was a crisis in the man's life. He dealt with the case, and forbade the resort to stimulants, when the patient declared that he would be unequal to his work and ready to sink. 'Then,' said Sir Andrew, 'sink like a man!'"—Classmate.

CHILDREN'S DAY CAROL.*

BY REV. C. B. BOTSFORD.

I.

CHILDREN, be joyful, exultingly sing,
Your best friend, the Saviour enthroned, is as King.
He reigns as Redeemer, for you intercedes,
Your Advocate, Surety, in love ever pleads.

RESPONSE.

We truly are joyful and gratefully sing,
Because our Great Captain is Zion's Great King;
Since He so befriends us, we will be His friends,
And heed the life-message He lovingly sends.

II.

Be grateful, dear children, your glad voices raise
In humble thanksgiving, devout songs of praise.
The Shepherd still cares for the lambs of the fold,
And now would caress you as children of old.

RESPONSE.

We will be Thy children, oh, Thou who art love,
Unspeakable Gift that was sent from above;
Our hearts are wide open, come in and possess,
We love Thee because Thou first freely loved us.

III.

Be joyful, dear children, and break into song,
You are the Lord's purchase, to Him you belong.
His love is amazing, amazingly great,
The price paid to ransom from your lost state.

RESPONSE.

O blessed Possessor! Possession how blest!
In Thee, dear Redeemer, we confident rest.
Those mansions so glorious that Thou dost prepare
For us, dear possession! by grace we will share.

IV.

All days are the children's for service and song;
To practice all virtue and vanquish all wrong.
In sweetness of spirit your voices attune
As roses commingle their fragrance in June.

RESPONSE.

Exalted Redeemer, our Saviour and Friend,
Our Advocate, Surety, Thou wilt us defend.
We worship, adore Thee, our chorals prolong
Thy cross is our triumph, Thy triumph our song.

CHORUS.

This day is the children's in which we rejoice,
And raise loud hosannas with heart-lifted voice
In sweetness of spirit our voices we tune
As roses their fragrance commingle in June.

HYMN FOR CHILDREN'S DAY.

Month of roses, warm and tender,
Month of sunshine balmy clear;
Dawns of glory, noons of splendor,
Hail! queen month of all the year.
Hark! from fresh young lips outringing,
O'er green fields and gardens gay,
Flute-like voices greet thee singing,
Month that bringest Children's Day.

Oh, happy moments, linger long,
Garlanded with light and song;
Birds shall lift for thee their lays,
Children's voices sound thy praise.

On the hills thy robes are trailing,
And the dews are at thy feet;
O'er thee fleecy clouds are sailing;
Perfumed airs about thee meet.
And the hours from out thy bosom
Fall like flowers along thy way,
But of all, the fairest blossom
Thou dost bring is Children's Day.

Blow, ye fragrant winds! O river,
Onward roll your dimpling tide;
Ye shall perish, but forever
Faith in Jesus shall abide.
For the joy of youth shall wing it
Round the earth till time is gray,
And the lips of childhood sing it
Many a future Children's Day.

THE DOLL CLUB.

Twelve little girls formed themselves into a club for the purpose of sending dolls to poor children. The mother of one of the girls suggested that they name each doll fo some one who had done good in the world. The girls liked this plan, and they had a fine time hunting up names.

One of the biggest dolls was called Florence Nightingale, for that good woman who spent so much time on battlefields and in hospitals, nursing the sick soldiers. One of the girls had a book that told the story of this dear woman's life, and she copied part of this on sheets of paper and pinned them to the doll's dress. Then they sent it to a little girl who had a sick mother to nurse.

In a Sunday-school paper they found a picture of Sister Dora, with a short account of the good work that she did. They cut this out and pinned it on a doll, and named her Sister Dora, and sent her to another child.

When they heard of a little cripple who loves dearly to sing hymns, they named a doll Fanny Crosby, and sent it to the little maid, with a collection of Fanny Crosby's hymns that they copied in a blank book.

They named another doll Louisa Alcott, and sent her, with a copy of "Little Women," to a dear little girl, only seven years old, who minds her younger brother and the baby all day, while the mother goes out to work. It took a good while for the club to save enough money to buy "Little Women," but the girls said that they thought it would be a lovely keepsake, and Annie could read it when she got older.

Frances Willard went to a little girl whose father had lately signed the temperance pledge, and with her was a bow of white ribbon for the little girl to wear.

Pansy was the prettiest of all the dolls, and she was sent to a chubby little four-year-old who has just begun to go to kindergarten.—Selected.

A LITTLE GIRL'S THEOLOGY.

An original answer was given in a New York courtroom the other day by a child of eleven, who was called in as a witness. Fearing that she was too young to understand the nature of an oath, the judge asked her to define it, and she replied:

"It is a swear."

"What do you mean when you say it is a swear?"

"Well, it is that I have to tell the truth."

"If you don't tell the truth, what then?"

"That would be a sin."

"What is a sin?"

"A bad mark from God."

The venerable chief justice was visibly touched at this answer of the child, and she was allowed to give her testimony. The jury gave a verdict without leaving the room.

JAMIE'S mother was reading a story to him, "And so Tommy went out to the moor," she read: "What is the moor, Jamie?" asked mamma. "A moo-er!" answered Jamie, thoughtfully: "why, I should s'pose it was a cow!" —Youth's Companion.

DEAR BOYS AND GIRLS:—I have been wondering which cousin would first notice a change which took place in our column several weeks ago when the group at the head disappeared and the above heading appeared. Who do you suppose it was? No less a person than Uncle Isaac and not a cousin at all! This is what he says:

It seems to me that Aunt Jane did a very wise thing when she gave that dozen Cozy Cornerers that had been kept so long in one position at the head of our column, an outing. The poor things looked so tired. Didn't you feel sorry for them? I did.

Is it any wonder poor old Aunt Jane wants to go to London after sitting so long in one place? Won't we feel lonesome while our Aunt is gone? And then she might get shipwrecked; but she will be in God's care, and we will all remember her in our prayers and ask our Heavenly Father to take all who go under His guardian care and in due time return them safely to us greatly benefited by their journey and the great meeting in London. May we not hope that their preaching and influence under God may be a great blessing to the wicked city and to the world.

Dear old Uncle Isaac has "let the cat out of the bag!" Yes, Aunt Jane is off for London town, and expects to see many things which will interest the temperance cousins while she is away. Your own letters will occupy the whole of Cozy Corner, so see that it is full, even if not running over as usual. I shall think of you all the time, and shall hope to find on my return many bright accounts of summer temperance work done by Cozy Cornerers.

Will you not remember in your prayers not only your Aunt Jane but also all the temperance workers who "go down to the sea in ships" and gather in London on June 14?

Good-by for a season. God make you faithful through the coming days to do His will.

Ever your affectionate

Aunt Jane

WHAT I HAVE LEARNED ABOUT THE WORLD'S PETITION.

BY ADDIE E. A. MULLINEAUX.—(AGED 10 YEARS.)

[ESSAY NO. 2.]

What I have learned about the Great Petition is by reading the Cozy Corner and Miss Willard's speeches; I think the Petition must be enormous from what Aunt Jane and Miss Willard have written. To think of all the paper that has been taken to get so many thousand names for such a grand and noble work! When Miss Willard and Lady Henry Somerset get through they ought to feel highly honored in carrying such a noble work from our nation (United States) to so many other nations.

Mrs. Mary Clement Leavitt, of Boston, first started with this Great Petition in 1884, spending about nine years in the work, traveling from nation to nation, holding meetings, making addresses, and presenting this Petition for signers, of which she got many. Following her in like work went Miss Jessie Ackermann, of California, Mrs. Elizabeth Wheeler Andrew and Dr. Kate Bushnell, besides many, MANY other women who loved the cause of right.

I learned through the press that President Cleveland received the Petition favorably; I hope many other president leaders may do likewise, but go deeper into the matter. I think President Cleveland would have slept better that night if he had just signed the Petition when Miss Willard and Lady Henry Somerset were there in the Red-room of the White House. I was so glad to learn that Mrs. Cleveland was a total abstainer and always turned her glass upside down; undoubtedly Mrs. Cleveland would have slept better also if she had signed it. Mrs. Rebecca C. Shuman has already spent two years of hard, earnest work putting the "Poly Pet" together on muslin, while there yet remains many thousand to be added in like manner. The next in order for the Petition is to go to London in June, 1895, and on, around the world. Oh! May God bless the effort abundantly.

Of course, your pledge card was among the thousands exhibited at the World's Fair. I wish that every Cozy Cornerer took The Young Crusader.

I like the Children's page very much. I am eleven years old and I have a cat that will drink nothing but sweet milk. I would like to receive a letter from some of the other nieces. I go to school and am in the fifth reader. After we write once shall we write right along?

OUR NATIONAL SIN.

"Many people claim that there is more drinking under the license system than there would be if we had free whisky." Thus writes a UNION SIGNAL reader who herself takes the stand "that drunkenness would not decrease with free whisky," and who wants to know our opinion on the subject. We hold it to be a self-evident fact that as long as we have whisky at all—whisky free or whisky bound—there will be no decrease of drinking or of drunkenness.

There are two senses in which the term "free liquor" may be used; (1) that referred to by our correspondent, "the glass and demijohn on every counter and intoxicants as free as water;" (2) free in the sense of being untaxed and its sale unlicensed. We see no occasion to discuss the probabilities of the increase or decrease of the consumption of liquor on the supposition of its being "free as water," for the reason: first, that it never will be free as water, nor does the most radical anti-license advocate, so far as we know, recommend such policy, and, second, that no intelligent person will deny that if alcoholic beverages could be obtained without money and without price drinking customs would be much more universal and drunkenness much more prevalent among all classes than it is to-day when liquor has a cash value.

Correctly stated, "the claim of many people" is, we think, that increase of drunkenness is greater under a licensed system than an unlicensed; that if no restrictions were thrown around the sale of intoxicants, but every man were free to manufacture whisky, and every merchant free to sell liquor by the glass over his own counter, that the traffic would be less of an evil than it is now under high license laws.

Now it can be readily shown by statistics that wherever there is traffic in intoxicating liquor, there drinking and drunkenness steadily increase. Whether the traffic be regulated or unregulated, whether it be free or taxed, licensed or unlicensed, there is what may be termed a natural increase in the per capita consumption. High license has up to date proved futile as a check to the oncoming tide of rum and ruin which engulfs so many of our country's brightest and best. It may lessen the number of drinking places—though even that is an open question—but it does not lessen the number of drinks sold, as the reports of distillery companies and brewers' syndicates clearly prove. Restrictions so-called, build up gigantic trusts and monopolies, and by their very nature conduce to increased consumption of liquor. Regulation does not regulate.

But on the other hand we see no foundation whatever for the claim that an unlicensed traffic would be in the least degree conducive to the increase of temperance and sobriety. The experience of France (noted editorially by THE UNION SIGNAL a few weeks ago) whose "wine merchants" pay no special license, is sufficient refutation of this claim, while in Great Britain where grocers and other tradesmen are permitted to sell intoxicants, facts testify to an alarming increase of drinking among women.

Then, both systems being equally ineffective as far as drinking is concerned, the question comes, which of the two should be adopted by a government which regards the liquor business as a "necessary evil"—license or no-license, tax or no-tax, revenue or no-revenue, a regulation system that doesn't regulate, or a policy that touches not the unclean thing? Surely a Christian government, if it does not touch it to abolish it, would do well to keep its hands off it altogether! If it confesses to an inability to crush the evil out of existence it can at least refuse to lend it a helping hand. If it cannot kill the monster at a blow it can at least refuse to foster and to nourish it.

As has been well said, our great national sin is not drunkenness, but the legalizing of drunkard-making. The great evil of high license is not that it fails to decrease drinking, but that it gives protection to the traffic and blinds the public mind to the fact that "revenue" derived from this source brings with it a curse, which is felt in every tissue and fiber of the nation's social and political organism. If this government—the people—would sever its connection with the rum power, if it would refuse to share its blood money or to "justify the wicked for reward," even if it should take no aggressive steps toward its abolishment, we believe it would not be long before the government—the people—would come to view the liquor traffic from the standpoint of the Prohibitionist, of the Christian temperance man and woman—as an unnecessary evil, an evil the overthrow of which means the adjustment of many a difficulty of these times which are now so painfully out of joint.

"RUN, SPEAK TO THAT YOUNG MAN."

The early days of May were made memorable to a host of people, markedly young men, by the Thirty-first International Convention of the Young Men's Christian Associations of North America at Springfield, Mass. An enrolled delegation of over seven hundred showed this year's representation to be a gain over any in the past.

The secret of the continued success of this Christian body of workers lies in that spirit which at the very opening of the convention "immediately . . . conferred not with flesh and blood," but set apart a "Quiet Day" to be devoted to meditation, self-examination and prayer. Following the formal opening of the convention Dr. Theodore L. Cuyler gave the young men a ringing word of welcome and wisdom: "Oh, boys, boys, do your social work, do your mental work, develop your muscular Christianity, but by and by this body you have trained and equipped with so much careful thought and work shall have turned to dust; and the soul for which Jesus bled and died, the soul that shall be summoned before the great white throne—what of it? What shall it profit if a young man lose his soul, or what shall the Young Men's Christian Association give in exchange for the soul of a young man? 'Run, speak to that young man.' Tell him 'seek first the kingdom of God and His righteousness and all these things shall be added unto you.' Let your motto be: Union in Christ for Young Men out of Christ."

Certainly, from recorded statistics this vigorous organization has seen a measure of success in "all these things," but whether its material riches remain a blessing or turn to a hindrance depends upon how they are held and used. Whenever a local association is found to be thoroughly alive, fighting sin wherever it has laid its grip on young men, there is an association which has held all its benefits second to its desire and work for souls.

The number of reporting associations is given as 244,-077, owning in association buildings and real estate, over and above indebtedness, $13,439,555. What an organized phalanx to present against the enemy of souls! Surely he ought to tremble before it.

As we read the outline of methods and means pursued by the associations, we feel a thrill of sympathetic understanding, since white-ribboners in the various departments of their work touch the path of their laboring brother very closely. For instance, both Y. M. C. A. and W. C. T. U. have taken up in an organized way the interests of the railroad man. As Dr. Cuyler aptly puts it, these organizations have "mounted a locomotive," and both woman's hand and man's are reached out to those who guide and follow the mighty iron horse.

"I can show you plenty of families where the Lord has taken away profanity and beer and cards, and has given them bread and coffee and the Bible and the Lord Jesus Christ instead," said secretary Hamilton in his report of Y. M. C. A. railroad work. Beside that may be placed the last brief statistical report of Miss Jennie Smith, our railroad evangelist, of some five hundred conversions among the "boys" for whom her prayers and tears and labors are so freely shed.

Chiefest of all the evils that stand in open array against the onward sweep of Christianity is the saloon, and the saloon's choicest and chiefly to be desired victim is "that young man," the very one for whom the Y. M. C. A. has declared its mission. Whenever through the redeeming influences of the Gospel a young man is saved, a blow is struck at the saloon. Whenever a saloon is closed, a saloon-keeper turned from dispensing poison to body and soul, to breaking the Bread of Life, a blow is struck for the safety of unnumbered young men.

Thus, whether the relationship be emphasized or not, these two organizations are "of one blood," a stalwart sister and brother, whose respective mottoes—ours, "For God and Home and Native Land," theirs, as recommended by Dr. Cuyler, "Union in Christ for young men out of Christ," have a kindred ring.

President H. M. Moore, of the convention, was asked if he knew why the new association building in Springfield was located as it is, and the information tendered was as follows: "We put it right between the home and the saloon so as to catch the young men before they are lost." Heaven's own pure benediction must rest on a site chosen as that was, and we send a cheer of comradely greeting to all such effort. Our organized motherhood and sisterhood with this organized fatherhood and brotherhood ought to mean much for the young citizenship of our country, and in those localities where the two coöperate, each giving equal recognition to the other's place in reform economy, there is large hope for a redeemed oasis in the rum-cursed desert.

NEW OCCASIONS.

"Because a man weighed down with his woes shoots himself once in awhile would you stop the manufacture of guns? Because a man hangs himself now and then would you stop the selling of rope? Because a man suicides occasionally by plunging into the river would you dry up the streams? Yet because some fool drinks himself to death you temperance fanatics would stop the manufacture and sale of liquor."

To a person who has thought even a little bit on reform lines such "argument" seems too weak and trivial to merit attention. If it were the argument of the liquor seller alone we could afford to pass it by as too superficial for consideration. But strange to say we not infrequently hear "good citizens" make excuses for the drink traffic upon similar grounds. Strange to say we often have to meet a like opposition to Prohibition from anti-saloon people—people who denounce the present system of licensed dram-shops and have nothing but censure and contempt for the man who permits himself to be enslaved by drink, but who, nevertheless, believe that liquor must be sold under some system.

Not long since in a public meeting of representative citizens in a small town we heard just this argument applauded by no inconsiderable number of them, which suggested the idea that perhaps only a small proportion of men and women outside temperance ranks realized why we "fanatics" were so zealously fighting the liquor traffic. And within the last few days we have heard the same argument from the lips of a man who is one of the prominent leaders in a movement to rid his town of saloons and who is an ardent "temperance" advocate on local option lines.

As long as such people—people who really deplore drunkenness—are under misapprehension concerning the aim and animus of Prohibitionists, we must perforce endeavor to remove it, and by constant, and to us wearisome reiteration, wear away—as the dropping of water wears away a stone—the wall of error which obscures the mental vision of so many otherwise good and common sense citizens. We must impress them with the fact that it is not only because "some fool" drinks himself to death that we are fighting the liquor traffic; it is not even because one hundred thousand "fools" go down to drunkard's graves every year in this nation alone; not because every three minutes some human being is slain soul and body by the drink demon—though this fact alone, if the evil could be traced no farther, should be enough to arouse every humane man and woman to aggressive action against the destroyer—but we have enlisted in the war against the rum power because its blighting curse rests upon sixty millions of people now living in this land, and upon many millions more of generations yet unborn.

We are arrayed against the liquor traffic not only because it slays one hundred thousand individuals every year, but because it directly ruins one hundred thousand homes, and its poisonous trail is directly or indirectly over every home in the land; because its paralyzing touch is felt in every phase of our social life; because the grip of its iron hand is on every political interest; because it is the most prolific crime-breeder and the swiftest poverty-producer that the world has ever known; in short, we are fighting the liquor traffic because it is the greatest stumbling block to national prosperity and the most effective bar to the moral and material progress of the human race ever devised by the great adversary.

We advocate prohibition not merely on the ground of protection for the "fool" who drinks to excess, not even from the standpoint of the greatest good for the greatest number, but on the ground of the greatest good for all—for the individual and for the nation; on the ground of protection for the present generation, and for that of generations to come.

If the stoppage of gun manufacture would increase the safety and happiness of the home and reform and transform our social and national life as would the stoppage of liquor manufacture, we should certainly be found advocating that policy. If the prohibition of rope-selling would give to this country and to the whole human race such an uplift as would the prohibition of drink-selling, we should certainly be found among the anti-rope advocates. And if drying up the streams would result in untold good to every man, woman and child, physically, mentally and morally; if it would add to human happiness instead of increasing human misery; if it was in harmony with the divine plan and purpose in the evolution and redemption of the human race, we should say, as would every other friend of humanity, dry up the streams.

We hear a great deal on Memorial Day and Fourth of July about patriotism, but the trouble is, it is a patriotism of a by-gone age. What we need to-day is a living patriotism, not a patriotism which feeds only upon memories, but a patriotism which is fully awake to "new occasions," and fully equal to them—a patriotism real enough and brave enough to meet these new occasions with the weapons of the new warfare.

AHEAD OF ONE'S TIMES OR BEHIND THEM.

In a previous number of THE UNION SIGNAL we mentioned the unveiling of a statue of Mrs. Emma Willard, at Troy Female Seminary, and the dedication of the Russell Sage Memorial Hall. Since then we have been impressed by the dedicatory address and some of the comments thereon that it would be well to call attention to the obvious lessons to be learned from the heroic life and work of this great woman. It would seem that the history of Mrs. Willard's enterprise, of the fierce battles which were waged to secure even the moderate education she asked for women and the universal recognition to-day of the rightness of her cause, would speak with such authority there would be no need of reiterating its teachings, but very many have only partially learned those teachings. There is probably no man or woman in any civilized land so benighted as not to stand to-day where Emma Willard stood over seventy years ago. But there are some, at least, who are little, if any, in advance of her position, who fail utterly to see that the movement which she inaugurated was only a beginning. Such people are found bitterly opposing the legitimate results of that movement in the present.

The dedicatory address was made by the well-known orator, Chauncey M. Depew. In the course of it he said: "We must especially recognize the debt which the women of the United States, and the men as deeply, owe to her. She was an apostle, an evangel, of the higher education of women; she had the courage to undertake, and the genius to see, the success of the effort. When there was naught but ridicule or denunciation for an enterprise, which it was predicted would break up the family and destroy the fireside, she, with serene faith and unfaltering purpose, set out to educate the girls who should dignify, adorn and elevate the home. She struggled for a quarter of a century before the country was aroused to the importance of the movement, and the sentiment had materialized in these great seminaries of learning for women which are now the ornament and hope of our period. Her influence did not stop here. It crossed the ocean; it broke down the prejudices and conditions of the most conservative nations; it created Girton and Newnham colleges under the shadows of Oxford and Cambridge, and it earned for them and their students equal advantages in the curriculums of these historic seats of learning."

It did all this, but it did much more, though such results were the farthest possible from Mrs. Willard's purpose: it set our girls knocking at the doors of every educational institution in every civilized land; it made them seek and obtain entrance to the professions; it has caused them to demand the ballot. Mrs. Willard did not foresee all this, she would have disavowed it as out of harmony with her views. Neither did Saul of Tarsus, when he yielded to the heavenly vision, foresee that he, the "Hebrew of the Hebrews, after the straitest sect of his religion, a Pharisee," would ever utter the revolutionary words, "There is no difference between the Jew and the Greek."

No one ever gave himself unreservedly to seek and to do the will of God that he was not led whither he had never dreamed of going, that he did not set in motion forces from whose ultimate results he himself would have shrunk back appalled. Mrs. Willard declared that "public speaking was no part of female education," yet the eloquent women on the lecture platform to-day, the "hosts" of women who are "publishing the tidings," are her lineal descendants, the legitimate, inevitable result of the reform in woman's education which she inaugurated.

To our mind, if modern women who are asking of the state the ballot, and of the church ordination to preach the gospel and admission to its councils, are fatally in error, then Emma Willard was the most dangerous offender of them all, for without her and her movement for woman's higher education the Susan B. Anthonys and Lucy Stones, and other women who are so disturbing the masculine conservatives, could not have been. The men, therefore, who lament the creation of woman's missionary and other benevolent societies because of the prominence into which they have brought women ought in all consistency to bewail the founding of Troy Female Seminary as the precursor of all the evils into which modern women are plunging society. It makes no difference, consistently with the logic of these men, what blessings the higher education of woman has brought to the home, it is to be judged by the one test of breaking down the doctrine of the subordination of woman. In their minds there is no room for the query, whether or not the subordination of woman may not be a mistaken doctrine, seeing a movement otherwise so beneficial seems to be utterly subversive of it.

On the contrary, however, we find these people lauding the cause but deploring the results. Some of the bitterest opponents of these modern women (who accuse these women, as Mrs. Willard's opposers accused her, of destroying the home) join in the unqualified approval of all the encomiums uttered concerning this great teacher and her work. Verily, now, as nineteen hundred years ago, "ye build the tombs of the prophets, and your fathers killed them," and in the generations to come your sons will surely build the tombs of the prophets whom ye persecute to-day.

From all this we learn the curious fact that, let them be born when they may, some people would always be born from fifty to a hundred years behind their times. It is sometimes said that it is a misfortune to be born ahead of one's age, to stand alone in the chill mists of the morning, misunderstood and unappreciated, even ridiculed and hated, by the world one seeks to serve. But, though the heart may sometimes hunger for human sympathy, though brain and hands may weary in the effort to lead others to the mountain peaks of vision, it is after all a glorious thing to stand, like Moses, on Pisgah's top with God and catch a vision of what is to be.

To us the hopelessly sad lot is always to stand in the valley, in the rear of humanity's advancing host, and to perceive in all its forward movement only retrogression and error. It is doubtless warmer and more comfortable in the valley. There will be no lack of friends, and the honored and well paid positions are chiefly to be found there and there is work to be done there, but it is negative chiefly in its character. It is the work of preservation. The inspiration of leadership, the building of the new and glorious future out of the decaying past is the work only of those who dare to stand upon the mountain top and open their eyes to behold the strange and startling things that future has to reveal. A misfortune to be born ahead of one's time! A thousand, thousand times, no! It is to be one of God's chosen, one of His elect, and, with the cheer of His comradeship, we may well forego human sympathy now, and wait for the children of our persecutors to build our sepulchres.

IT is editorially conceded by the Daily News, the most important liberal paper in London, that the speech of Lady Henry Somerset at the great national meeting in support of the Armenians held May 7, was the most impressive and the best received of any, although several of England's most famous orators were on the platform and two dukes and several bishops spoke. The meeting was one of historic importance and the subject is one of vital interest to all. When Lady Somerset referred to the Armenian mother only eighteen years old, that sad-faced woman arose. She was in a prominent seat on the platform and attired in her picturesque garb of the Armenian women. She did not lift her eyes, but stood there the Niobe of her pitiful nation. There was hardly a dry eye in that great audience, and Lady Somerset's voice was touched with tenderest emotion. The Methodist Times says, that "in the absence of Gladstone, no speaker could have expressed so adequately the feeling and purpose of the English people." No doubt many a thoughtful mind asked itself why the mere fact of sex should be permitted to deprive a country of some of its best and most statesmen-like minds and truest hearts in a crisis like the present. That this should have been the case so long will be the jest of happier ages. It is a token of esteem felt for our National President that she was made one of the conveners of this great national demonstration against the hateful Turk. It is not usual to include the name of a foreigner on such a list at such a time. But that word foreign will be weeded out of the dictionary some day. Already our sisters are writing us not to use it, but to speak of "distant" rather than foreign lands. And some day this will not be done, for the magic of invention will have brought all within speaking distance of each other.

BROOKLYN, N. Y., women have won a great victory. After June 15 five women will be members of the board of education; the petition signed by Mayor Schieren last week bore the signatures of five thousand cultured women. No worker for equal suffrage need be discouraged in these days.

OUTWARD BOUND.

(On the sailing of the Berlin.)

Bend blue and fair, O skies of June,
Ye winds and waves keep rhythmic tune,
As outward bound our good ship sails,
Lord of the seas give favoring gales.

Our women true and tried of years,
We send them with our prayers and tears;
Like doves of peace on each true breast,
The badge of sisterhood doth rest.

The tiny knot of ribbon white,
Like star gleams on the brow of night,
That links them in a world-wide band,
"For God and Home and Every Land."

Hopes of humanity are there,
Oh, pilot, guide with skillful care,
Until their feet shall touch the shore
Beyond the ocean's treacherous floor.

God of the nations, send Thy power
In that great world assemblage hour,
And brood with clearest light and love
Their blended prayers and plans above.

And let the causes that are Thine
Receive an impetus divine,
And earth move farther toward the light
Where gleam the knots of ribbon white.

For what are wise assemblies all,
Of men or women, great or small;
Unless Thy hand shall lead the host
The foe prevails, the day is lost.

EMILY BUGBEE JOHNSON.

There is unquestionably a deal of truth in the suggestion of Mrs. Rebecca Harding Davis that most of the fatigue and worry and prostration of women is due, not so much to the amount of work they do or the crowding of their lives, but to the fuss they make about it.

"Ninety Years of Noble Living" is the title of a white booklet I have just laid down after a most interested perusal. It is a printed account of the ninetieth anniversary of Mrs. Nancy Swift Hanchett, the mother of Mrs. Mary H. Hunt, known throughout our white ribbon ranks. The gathering of friends and relatives about this aged saint must indeed have been a memorable and touching one. Among the congratulatory greetings sent by those unable to be present was one from a grandson beginning thus: "From the founding of the empire of the first Napoleon to the war between Japan and China is a span of years few have been permitted to enjoy." Mrs. Hanchett has witnessed a great many "beginnings." Forty years ago when Mrs. Thatcher, her grandmother, was called on by her pastor to express her views on a portion of Scripture, he was criticised, but took a brave exception to the Pauline command, saying, "I consider this an exceptional case, and do not feel that I am disobeying the divine command." Could they but have seen adown the years a vision of the great-granddaughter, woman grown, swaying large audiences with the force of her persuasive logic! Ephraim Hanchett was first vice-president in Lyman Beecher's first temperance society at Litchfield, Conn., and "from that hour he became a determined foe to strong drink, when it was very unpopular to be a friend of temperance." Could he have seen adown the years and watched the progress of temperance as state after state has become "white" by making scientific temperance instruction a matter of law. Truly, heredity counts! But greater even than heredity is Christian training and prayer, as witness this testimony from mother to daughter: "When I think you are getting ready to speak somewhere to an audience, I sit and pray that God will give you a collected mind, that He will give you His message to the people; that He will give you power in presenting it, and His Spirit to convince the hearers. As I sit thus through the evening I think what you may be saying and pray that God will bless it." What a blessed crown to the ninety years,—to be able to pray the prayers of faith for the labors of those children who are what they are because of a noble mother's life.

TEXAS.

A BIRD'S-EYE VIEW.

Our work for the past month has been largely a "round up," as the cowboys say, collecting dues and making reports to the various superintendents.

The executive committee met just after the last report was written. Most of its proceedings are out of date but the most important one must be recorded, the election of Mrs. Helen M. Stoddard, delegate to the World's Convention. We are proud to have such a woman represent Texas in that great gathering. No one ever deserved a change and rest more than she does, after a hard winter's work at the state capital besides all the burden of keeping up the general interest in the work all over the state.

Iowa Park has a union of eleven members. They have interesting mothers' meetings, keep a wall pocket in depot filled with religious and temperance literature, and an L. T. L. which puts money into its treasury by giving entertainments.

Corsicana rejoices that scientific temperance instruction is so efficiently taught in her public schools, is taught four times a year in the Sunday-schools, and is emphasized in the young people's societies.

Gatesville union devotes a great deal of attention to the two hundred and sixty boys in the state reformatory, sending them five hundred and twenty papers every month. They are also grateful to the Waco Y's for papers received. Miss McVea visits the jail every week distributing an average of one thousand papers a year, and giving a Testament to every new prisoner.

Galveston sent one thousand forty-eight signatures to the great Petition.

Fort Worth had the honor of entertaining the executive committee.

Dallas is becoming very much interested in local option and many Prohibitionists propose to have an election soon. A brewer of St. Louis hearing of it wrote a letter to the Dallas News condemning this interference with American liberty and denouncing the preachers as "fanatics and hypocrites," to which the editor of the Texas Christian Advocate wrote a scathing reply.

Houston has become aroused to the necessity for municipal government reformation. Rev. G. C. Rankin, D. D., of the M. E. Church, South, has been preaching a series of sermons on the subject which has caused such an "arrest of thought" that gambling dens have been closed and gamblers have fled from the city. Dr. Rankin has in Houston, as in other cities, awakened the fear of the worst elements of society, the law-breakers, and naturally the love and admiration of the law-abiding.

Paris prison work is a large work. There are from one hundred to one hundred and fifty prisoners. The white-ribboners hold services in the jail every Sunday morning, distribute a great deal of literature and supply the prisoners with Bibles and Testaments.

San Antonio W. C. T. U. has devoted jail workers. The Y of San Antonio held a successful medal contest some time since.

West End L. T. L. has greatly increased in numbers, and the interest grows.

The medal contests have done great good in the community; several drinking men have reformed, and families have given up drinking beer from hearing the declamations studied at home. Miss Lizzie Hilliard won a medal at the April contest. At the May contest the medalist was Mr. Perryman, from Liberty. All the contestants were young men from Roy Peacock's school for boys.

Six medal contests have been held in Laredo seminary during the past year.

PERSONAL.

Mrs. Esther Jerrells, the venerable mother of our state president, has presented $100 to the Temple.

Mrs. Belle G. Bigelow, a cousin of Mrs. Stoddard, is a welcome addition to our ranks from Nebraska. She resides in Alvin.

Mrs. Belle Flowers, of Dallas, has returned to her Indiana home. She is a worker, and will be welcome wherever she goes.

PROMOTED.

Mrs. A. E. Montgomery, of Calvert, superintendent of Sabbath observance, a saintly woman, whose life was "hid with Christ in God."

Mrs. M. L. Driskill, of Corsicana, who could be illy spared from our work.

MASSACHUSETTS.

VETERAN ANNIVERSARIES.

These are the days of the veterans. The celebrations of Henry Blackwell's seventieth birthday, of Rev. C. P. and Mary Livermore's golden wedding, and of the forty-seventh year of Rev. A. A. Miner's pastorate, are among the most noted May occasions. Mr. Blackwell rounded out his seventieth year on May 4.

"Seest thou a man diligent in business? he shall stand before kings, and not before mean men." Henry Blackwell is a hero among the men and women who have stood for an unpopular reform. Mrs. Livermore, Mrs. Howe, and Hon. J. Q. Long, almost lifelong friends and co-workers, were not alone in realizing this. And so when Mr. Blackwell was asked to accept a public dinner which should testify the grateful appreciation of friends for his unwearied service in behalf of women, a host responded. Mr. Blackwell disclaims any honor or credit for himself. All belongs to Lucy Stone, "the dear and noble woman," he says, "who has been the charm and inspiration of my life for forty years." No one so much as Lucy Stone can appreciate the dauntless courage, the unselfishness, the loyalty of her devoted husband. Alice Stone Blackwell, the worthy daughter of this noble pair, as editor, writer, and speaker, partakes of the gifts of both. The "remonstrant" has yet to appear whose arguments are not demolished when she takes the field.

Mary A. Livermore, Henry Blackwell and Lucy Stone are commanding names in the suffrage reform. Mrs. Livermore was in the temperance work long before the W. C. T. U. was born. A Cold Water Army of 1,500 boys and girls was one of the results of early efforts. She was in good training, with sympathies enlisted, when called to lead the temperance workers in Massachusetts. For ten years she was the president of the W. C. T. U. and the members delight to do her honor. An outline of her life is one of continued, persistent and truly invaluable work. She has touched humanity at almost every point, especially taking the part of the poor and oppressed. No wonder there were thousands of hearty congratulations extended in the Melrose home on the afternoon of May 6. It was a truly serene summer day, typical of the summer afternoon and evening of fifty golden wedded years. At seventy-four Mrs. Livermore stands alert, sterling and strong, while many a younger worker has fallen by the way. So much has her thought and vigor impressed itself upon the life of her day that we never think of her as old, and will she ever be at rest?

The Rev. A. A. Miner has kept with his church his forty-seventh anniversary, and reviewed a career of great usefulness outside as well as within the limits of a parish. This stalwart Prohibitionist and preacher has been and is, untiring in efforts, legislative and philanthropic, for the bettering of humanity. During his ministry thus far he has attended 2,361 funerals and officiated at 2,974 marriages.

SCHOOL OF METHODS.

Suffolk county (Boston and suburban unions) held on May 13, a school of methods in Park Street church, giving a day to the consideration of departmental work. Illustrations were given of ways of carrying on the work in the different departments: Health and heredity, systematic giving, legislation and petition and evangelistic work. Also such questions were discussed as "How Prepare for Public Meetings?" "How make the Local Meeting Interesting?" This meeting was called because of the need of more time for the presentation of special subjects than can be obtained in the county conventions. Mrs. S. B. Shapleigh, county president, presided, and was assisted by Mrs. Fessenden. The departments presented were in the care of their superintendents (state), Mrs. Purington, Mrs. Delano, Mrs. Fessenden and Mrs. Bixby. The "school" was well attended and the experiment was pronounced highly successful.

FIELD WORK.

The Dorchester union arranged for a meeting May 1, and invited the master, teachers and pupils of the Henry L. Pierce school (one of the largest in Boston) to hear Mrs. M. E. A. Gleason upon "Narcotics." They came en masse and the scene was an inspiration—the thronging of bright boys and girls, interested and responsive to the truth about the noxious tobacco weed which is doing so much harm. Mrs. Gleason has been very successful in establishing "Anti-cigarette Leagues." She puts in an amount of work and earnestness sure to be productive of good results. Her call to the temperance work was more vivid and pronounced than is common. One of the pastors said of the above meeting, "The value of it cannot be estimated." Such workers and such work as the above hold out a good hope that lives will be sweeter and cleaner in the coming generations.

PENNSYLVANIA CULLINGS.

BRADFORD COUNTY.

On May 8, this county held its semi-annual convention at Columbia Cross Roads. It was an occasion of unusual interest and profit. Good work was reported from all the unions. Three of the unions have successfully engaged in "remonstrance work." An unusual number of public meetings have been held. Mrs. A. B. M. Holvey has given six addresses. Mrs. Helen Bullock visited Canton in the interest of the Elmira Anchorage, giving also an address in the interest of our work, thereby adding thirty-eight new members to the union as well as a large number of honoraries. The various unions have been specially active in petition work this year. Smithfield union has held four public meetings, and is preparing for another, at which the music, readings and recitations are to be given by the members of the Christian Endeavor and Epworth League. Mrs. N. L. Bird spoke in Litchfield, and secured a promise from the Epworth League (under whose auspices the meeting was held) to devote the first Sabbath evening of each month to temperance.

BLAIR COUNTY

secured the state president, Mrs. Anna M. Hammer, to lecture for them, also Mrs. Holvey, who did a grand work in arousing the voters to a sense of duty, and organized two new unions. Miss Crawford, state Y organizer, was also in the county. Altoona union held a gold medal contest to replenish its treasury. The Willard Y. W. C. T. U. held a literary entertainment, which was a success both socially and financially. They also held a millinery social, which netted them a handsome sum, and the W. C. T. U. held a parlor social and donated the proceeds for county work.

BUCKS COUNTY.

The semi-annual convention was held at Center Hill, the music being conducted by Mrs. Alice Erdman, state musical director. Margaret B. Lownes delivered a very appropriate address of welcome, to which responses were made by Miss Ida Corneil and Mrs. Mary C. Whallen. Among the many good things of the convention program may be mentioned the "Gleanings from State Convention," a well-written paper by Mrs. Rice, a lecture by Volney B. Cushing of Maine, and excellent reports of the superintendents. A memorial service in memory of Mrs. Rachel Wynkoop was held, at which many loving tributes were given. Mrs. Cynthia Holcomb, who has so efficiently guided the work as president for the past decade, resigned. Mrs. Emma D. Eyre was chosen to succeed her, Mrs. Holcomb being elected vice-president-at-large. A resolution of thanks was tendered to the retiring president. A resolution pertaining to vigilance in the work of purity department was also adopted.

The Yardly mothers' meeting, held May 1, discussed "Our Schools." About twenty ladies were present at this meeting. A great many valuable points were brought out and discussed. Mrs. Mary A. South is the efficient and valued superintendent of the Yardly mothers' meetings.

CLINTON COUNTY

held its sixth semi-annual convention at Flemington, at the home of Mrs. Watson Fredericks. About seventy-five ladies were present from the various unions. The devotional hour was one of deep earnestness and consecration. The afternoon session was well filled. Miss Kreamer gave an instructive talk on scientific temperance instruction, and Mrs. Ball, county president, read a very interesting and encouraging report. Miss Dornblazer was there direct from Washington, and brought news concerning the great Polyglot Petition. Rev. Biddle spoke commendatory words, and the Flemington choir rendered some fine music. Miss Dornblazer has been bereaved by the death of her mother, and the sympathies of all Pennsylvania white-ribboners will be extended her.

MCKEAN COUNTY.

A very able report of the convention held at Custer City was received after our last letter was sent and a brief report has been given in The Union Signal. Mrs. A. S. Benjamin lectured for the Bradford union.

The members of Smethport union presented Miss Burch with a copy of "A Great Mother," as a token of appreciation for the interest she has taken in their union work.

MERCER COUNTY.

Sharpsville W. C. T. U. held "The Deestrict Skule" to replenish their treasury and right well did they succeed, clearing over forty dollars for their work. Sharon union had Miss Vandelia Varnum to lecture for them.

PHILADELPHIA COUNTY.

This county, through the courtesy of Miss Hallmark, editor of "Woman's Page" in Philadelphia Press, has secured a half column of space for each Saturday, and each week contains notes from the various unions. The first Y held their fifteenth anniversary May 9. Mrs. Ida B. Cole addressed the meeting. This Y has in charge three Loyal Temperance Legions. Miss A. E. Thomas, its president, will attend the World's Convention and will act as press correspondent. West Philadelphia union held a successful musicale at their parlors, 3824 Lancaster avenue, and a delightful May festival, May 14. Madame Layah Barakat and family sailed for Syria, but hope to be present for next state convention. The German union is doing a good work among the Germans. Miss Suil, president West Philadelphia union, holds devotional meetings weekly.

NOTES.

State convention dates are changed to October 11–15. Mrs. J. Morrell, of Park Mutual union, Delaware county, Ann Eliza Chubbuch, of Towanda, Bradford county, Mrs. Carpenter, Factoryville, Wyoming county, and Mrs. Jerome John, Phœnixville, Chester county, are among the "promoted ones" who have answered the great roll call and received their reward.

Postals are now being sent to the various counties requesting news and we hope to make this column a success.

VIRGINIA AT WORK.

Our state president, Mrs. Jones, was present the last of March at the dedication of the memorial building, new headquarters for the W. C. T. U. in Neapolis. She also spoke in Danville, and on Sunday night to a large and attentive audience of colored people, of which she says: "Over one hundred men and women agreed to sign the pledge. Fully one hundred men pledged themselves to vote the whisky out of Danville, and about fifty men and women promised to act as missionaries in their places of employment, to induce their employers not to use intoxicating beverages, not even in cooking. The pastor promised to follow up the work in his church and let me hear from it." She visited several other places in the interest of our white ribbon movement before returning home.

"The Milkmaids' Interstate Convention" has been held in Charlottesville, under joint auspices of W. C. T. U. and I. O. G. T. It was much enjoyed by all and a nice sum was added to the treasury of each organization.

The Charlottesville L. T. L. is in a flourishing condition, having increased since last fall from a membership of twelve to forty-six. The Senior grade expect to study for diplomas.

Winchester L. T. L. has passed an examination on Lesson Manual, Volume 1, and has now taken up the second volume. The highest average in the class, ninety-five, was reached by Misses Cotta Richards and India Grimm.

New unions have been organized by our state organizer, Mrs. Newton, at Ivy Depot, Crozet and Louisa Courthouse.

Centralia, Bridgewater, Berkley, Stephens City and Lincoln unions have each recently held a medal contest. Interest in these contests is deep, and we rejoice that the work can still be continued, even though its revered originator has been gathered home.

At Cape Charles a strong W. C. T. U. has been organized among the colored people, which meets weekly, alternately in Methodist and Baptist churches.

Newport News union is raising money to erect a fountain, by which both man and beast may be refreshed.

The good work in the Florence Crittenton Home in Norfolk still goes on. Some day these noble, self-sacrificing workers there will hear the blessed Master say, "Inasmuch as ye have done it unto one of the least of these my brethren, ye have done it unto me."

Miss Frances H. Ensign is now in Loudoun county, strengthening the unions and organizing new ones. She will also work in other parts of the state for three more weeks.

Mrs. Wood, district superintendent L. T. L. work from Washington, addressed three children's meetings the last of April, under auspices of Lincoln W. C. T. U., held respectively at Lincoln, Percellville and Silcott's Springs. On May 4 this union celebrated its seventeenth anniversary by a public meeting with a literary and musical program which seemed to be enjoyed by all present.

May not our Virginia women, and in fact white-ribboners everywhere, make theirs the sentiment expressed in these lines given a short time ago in one of the W. T. P. A. Bible readings:

"Sin worketh, let me work too,
Sin undoeth; let me do;
As busy as sin, my work I'll ply,
Till I rest in the rest of eternity.

"Death worketh, let me work too,
Death undoeth, let me do.
As busy as death my work I'll ply,
I shall rest in the rest of eternity."

TENNESSEE.

PASSAGE OF THE SCIENTIFIC TEMPERANCE INSTRUCTION BILL.

The Tennessee W. C. T. U. has so long and so acutely felt the stigma of being on the list of black states that have no scientific temperance instruction in their public schools, that I write with pleasure to inform THE UNION SIGNAL readers that the stain has been removed, and that Tennessee will henceforth shine on the W. C. T. U. maps as a white state.

For years our white ribbon women, with Mrs. Little, our efficient superintendent of legislative work, and now our state corresponding secretary, at their head, have labored faithfully to secure the passage of this law. It passed the legislature that has just adjourned, with an amendment that the injurious effects of smoking cigarettes be also passed.

ITEMS FROM LOCAL UNIONS.

A goodly number of reports have come in of late, telling of good work for the Master in many localities. First, too late for my last letter, though intended for it, came a letter from our president, Mrs. Meriwether, sending in a report of the formation of several new unions. One at Knoxville, had already been reported from another source and notice of its organization was given in my last letter. Another was the report of the organization of a Y. W. C. T. U. at Morristown, by Miss Belle Kearney, with Miss Mary Hicks as president; Miss M. R. Thompson, corresponding secretary; Miss Ida Holloway, recording secretary, and Miss Josie McCaleb, treasurer.

A letter from Morristown gives also a report of the organization of this union, and tells of the good and acceptable work of Miss Kearney at that place. She spoke to a large audience, who were delighted with her splendid address. Ladies were sent through the audience after the lecture, with blank pledges, to which they received one hundred and ten signatures. They report a few faithful members who keep at work in the cause they love, allowing nothing to discourage them, or turn their faces the other way.

Mrs. Mary E. Williams, corresponding secretary of the Central Nashville W. C. T. U., sends in a good report of the work of that union. They still continue their jail, penitentiary and hospital work. Easter Sunday at the penitentiary the Lord's Supper was administered, and fifty convicts took part in the observance. They have paid from their treasury twenty-five dollars to the "Friendly Home," a home for ex-convicts. They have given fifteen dollars to the "Door of Hope," a home for fallen girls, and sent fifty dollars to the state president, Mrs. Meriwether. Their relief work, which is the union's greatest work, and in which they spend large sums of money every year, cannot be estimated, as the reports are not all fully in. But much has been done along this line in furnishing clothes, food and coal to the poor.

A report from Deer Lodge, tells of faithful work by a devoted few. They have been doing some work in the purity department, circulating a petition to the legislature for the passage of the seduction bill. They have revived their mothers' meetings, which they hope to make the strongest department of their union. Another letter from the same union, whose writer has her home in a logging camp, tells of good work done in the few intervals of rest that come in a busy life, but whose heart is so in the work that she must continue it under all circumstances.

The old Knoxville union sends in a good report. In March Mrs. Bullock was with them and delivered a good lecture, after which eighteen new members were received into their union. In the "woman's edition of the Knoxville Tribune, they had three columns, placing at the head of all the columns our scientific temperance instruction map, with a few lines explaining it, and the work along this line being done by the W. C. T. U. everywhere. In addition they had a number of spicy articles showing forth the work of all our forty departments. This paper had a large circulation. Much other good work is being done by this faithful body of women.

Jonesboro, notwithstanding the absence of the president and corresponding secretary much of the time during the past year, have faithfully held weekly meetings, and continued their work in several different departments. They have bought and paid for a good piano the past year. They are planning a series of entertainments to help raise money for their work. They have been circulating petitions for the passage of the seduction bill, and doing other good work along this line.

Harriman continues at work along various lines. They have been making some changes in their Temple interior, which would be better appreciated to be seen than to be written about. They are still laboring under the heavy burden of their Temple debt, and are continually planning to raise money for its liquidation. The L. T. L. piano has been paid for, and their last entertainment left a surplus in their hands and the little folks are jubilant. They have had two lectures, one by Rev. W. F. Abrecht, and one by Mrs. Helen Bullock. They have met regularly all through the past winter, unavoidably missing only a few meetings, with as good attendance as could be expected. They had memorial services for Mrs. Mary T. Lathrap, which were conducted in a touching and appropriate manner. They sent in the longest petition yet received for the passage of the bill making seduction under promise of marriage a felony. They have also secured many signatures to the petition asking for the passage of a scientific temperance instruction law, and many signatures to the Polyglot Petition. The time for their district convention was set for April 24 and 25, which I am sure was a success, though no report has yet reached me. Mrs. Thayer, district president, writes that the prospects for a rousing convention were very flattering.

We had hoped to secure the services of Dr. Mary Wood Allen for a number of lecture engagements in our state, the state superintendent of social purity in Kentucky, (whose address I have lost) and myself working together to get her in the two states. But circumstances beyond the control of either of us will prevent her coming for the present, which all must regret.

We have been doing all we could for our bill to make seduction under promise of marriage a felony. But the minds of our legislators are so engrossed with the gubernatorial fight that they seem to find little time for "small" outside matters. So we fear results.

COUNTY CONVENTIONS.

We who live by the calm Pacific, and listen to its murmurs, are not lulled to sleeping inactivity by its music, but are aiming to emulate its constancy.

"For each wave beat on the shore,
Records in action one deed more
To help the cause of right 'gainst wrong
And catch the sea's glad note of song."

Our counties are holding their annual conventions preparatory to the state convention, which will have become a part of history before this reaches the eye of the reader. We anticipate a capitol session at Olympia of our state workers.

THURSTON COUNTY

held its second annual convention in Columbia Hall, Olympia. The hall was elaborately decorated for the occasion. The stage with its flowers, potted plants and mottoes, was a bower of beauty.

The program of Wednesday afternoon consisted of devotional exercises, appointment of committees, and the forceful address of our efficient president, Miss Emma E. Page. This was followed by reports of officers and of superintendents of departments, an address on purity by Mrs. Sarah L. Seward, and one on "Good Citizenship," by Mrs. Ella F. Stork. At five o'clock the convention adjourned and repaired to the parlors, in response to an invitation from the Demorest contestants, of Olympia. The parlors were beautifully decorated, and the tables prepared for the two hundred guests were artistically arranged. A dainty menu card was placed at each plate. This banquet was under the chairmanship of Miss Edna Robertson, the grand gold medalist, who presided with charming grace and dignity.

The evening lecture by Senator Eshelman was also under the direction of the Demorest contestants, Miss Edna Robertson presiding; subject, "Christian Citizenship." The Thursday morning session consisted of further reports of superintendents, five-minute talks by the presidents of local unions, election of officers for the ensuing year which resulted in the unanimous, enthusiastic reëlection of Miss Emma E. Page as president; Mrs. Luella Rutledge, recording secretary; Mrs. Lily Hall, treasurer. After election an interesting model union was held under the directorship of Mrs. M. A. Shaffer, of Tacoma.

During the afternoon the hall was crowded, and the following program was given: Devotional exercises; music; talk by the state superintendent of purity in literature and art; a most interesting paper on "How shall we care for our young people on Sunday afternoons?" by Mrs. Murch, of Tumwater.

A charmingly illustrated talk on "Helps to Happy Childhood," was given by Mrs. Curry, of Gull Harbor. At four p. m. there was a gold medal contest, Miss Annie Hammond winning the medal. In the evening Mrs. Stone, from Ohio, delivered a lecture. The hall was well filled and the lecture enthusiastically received by the audience.

CHEHALIS COUNTY

convention met at Hoquiam and afforded pleasure and profit to the local union which entertained them. The Methodist Episcopal church was at their disposal. The first evening was taken up by address of welcome and responses. Dr. T. C. Frary, the mayor of the city, welcomed the convention to the city. Rev. Miller, of the Presbyterian church, gave the welcome on behalf of the churches, and Mrs. A. E. Land gave the greeting from the union.

This county took up eighteen departments of work, fifteen of which were reported, and some interesting and instructive papers were read. The president's address was full of wise suggestions which all the unions declared to be well worth following. The noontide hour of prayer was indeed a precious one. At four o'clock the children of the public schools with their teachers marched to the church and were greeted with the Chautauqua salute. The members of the L. T. L. wore badges of black and white ribbon in memory of the philanthropic and generous hearted W. Jennings Demorest. The hour was spent in song and recitations by the children, short talks by superintendent of L. T. L., Mrs. Dr. Fifield, state president, and the county president. Rev. Spencer, of the Baptist church, gave a chalk-talk which greatly interested the little folks. A solo by Mrs. Coleman, the county president, with a chorus by the L. T. L., was very sweetly rendered. Also a beautiful solo by Mrs. Elston, of Aberdeen. Our state president spent one day with us and helped the newly organized unions greatly by her advice and suggestions.

By vote of convention it was decided to make the semi-annual convention a school of methods and gospel meetings for mutual instruction without bringing any statistical reports. Altogether the convention was felt to be a success, and we trust its influence will linger long in the hearts and homes of Hoquiam.

ETTA JONES,
State Reporter, Kent.

News in a Nutshell.

THE semi-annual convention of Portage county, Ohio, W. C. T. U., was held in Streetsboro, May 17 and 18. Twelve unions all at work and reporting is the good word from the convention.

MISS M. A. NASON, Haverhill, Mass., has been appointed a National lecturer for the department of the relation of temperance to labor and capital. Miss Nason has long been identified with the labor movement and comes into this work equipped with a thorough knowledge of its needs.

MRS. MARY MCGEE SNELL has been sowing good seed in the South, finding everywhere a spirit of warm response. Her calls are many times more numerous than she can fill and church pulpits freely accorded for her use. Meridan, Miss., and Savannah, Ga., are the latest points heard from.

MADISON county, New York, W. C. T. U., reports a stirring time in convention assembled, from May 22–23. Live unions reporting vital questions thoroughly canvassed, legislative "concessions" to woman, and the scientific temperance bill now in the hands of the governor, would make heading for paragraphs of a fuller report.

FLOWER mission work has been inaugurated for the summer of 1895 by the Willard Y of Chicago, which will distribute the flowers at hospitals, missions, etc., on two days of the week, Wednesdays and Saturdays. Donations of flowers for this purpose are solicited, and should be sent to Miss Sara G. Johnson, Room 1111, The Temple, to reach there Tuesday or Friday afternoon.

SHORTHAND and Bookkeeping by mail. Situations furnished competent pupils. Write W. G. Chaffee, Oswego, N.Y.

Mrs. Helen L. Bullock, 1105 Davis street, Elmira, N. Y., is open for calls during July, a part of August and September. It will be the early correspondent who will be the one to make sure of this National organizer's efficient help.

Mr. and Mrs. J. O. Bennett, of Prohibition Park, Staten Island, N. Y., celebrated on May 20, their golden wedding anniversary. Mrs. Bennett is one of the original Ohio Crusaders, and the occasion was of interest to W. C. T. U. workers. "A Great Mother." was the appropriate gift from white-ribbon neighbors.

By some slip of pen—since pen wielders are fallible—the address of Dr. Mary Wood Allen crept into these columns as Kalamazoo, Mich. That these same columns are carefully read, is proved by the fact that some of Dr. Allen's mail has been going astray. The correct address is Ann Arbor, Mich., and correspondents will please take notice.

The Demorest Club of San Diego, Cal., a body of young people who have entered the lists of Demorest contestants or who are preparing to do so, at the last meeting of the club passed resolutions of sympathy for those who have been bereaved in the death of Mr. Demorest, and of appreciation for the influence shed on so many lives because of his varied attacks on the enemy and fruitful plans for the safety of our young people.

Mrs. E. D. Blair was engaged by the W. C. T. U. and White Shield society of Dansville, N. Y., to give one of her captivating and convincing chalk talks. The opera house was packed, children being admitted free and adults charged a nominal sum. It was the testimony of all that the talk—and "chalk"—must bear rich result in arrested thought and bettered action in all present hitherto indifferent or inactive in the great reform.

The W. C. T. U. of Oswego county, N. Y., has been pushing the battle to the front, led by two devoted workers, Mrs. E. D. Blair and Mrs. Frances W. Graham. Mrs. Blair works for the L. T. L's whom she leads into clear understandings of "the foe" by the magic of her chalk talks. Following faithful work by her came Mrs. Graham, state corresponding secretary of New York, who held afternoon parlor meetings and evening public services of song in all the unions in the county save two. The power of her consecrated voice in song and word has given an uplift to work and workers.

When the temperance girls of our land take such a stand as the young women of Danbury, N. Y., are doing, the "brothers of girls" will more seriously think on the cup of the "mocker." In this town is a society of young women numbering about four hundred whose members are among other things, pledged not to marry men who drink. The society is regularly organized, being now known as the St. Peter's Ladies' Temperance Society. These brave nineteenth century girls expect to enroll a thousand names on their records. They are wise in their day and generation and their house will surely not be left unto them desolate.

That Mary T. Lathrap's written and spoken utterances are to be gathered into a volume, together with a sketch of her life, will be welcome news to thousands who bless her memory. The work is in the hands of Mrs. Julia R. Parish, state corresponding secretary of Michigan W. C. T. U. and is already well begun. Character sketches of this white ribbon hero as preacher, poet, reformer and politician will be contributed by prominent writers, among whom are Miss Willard, Lady Henry Somerset, E. J. Wheeler, A. A. Hopkins and Samuel Dickie. All profits accruing from the sale of the book will go to the state treasury—even as Mrs. Lathrap herself gave of the wealth of her life to our cause.

Miss Alice Palmer, fifth round-the-world W. C. T. U. missionary, has been aiding her church in planning a South African Colonial Tea. The musical part of the entertainment is to be distinctively "native"; the choir will sing a Zulu hymn, the Orange Free State national anthem and a Dutch selection; Miss Palmer will give an address. The famous silver leaves will be given for souvenirs, and Kaffir curios will be on exhibition. The refreshments at this unique entertainment are plum cake, almond cake, comfits, lemon syrup and coffee served in the native style.

LOYAL TEMPERANCE LEGION.

Legioners, Attention!—As patriotism is one of the most important lessons in the curriculum of the L. T. L., which includes all good things, we call upon all Legions to observe Flag Day, June 14. A program may be arranged consisting of patriotic songs, recitations, a flag drill, etc.; this program should include some recitations or remarks which will strongly set forth the vital connection between prohibition and patriotism. If nothing more can be attempted than a street march, in which flags shall abound, and our prohibition rallying cry shall echo and reëcho far and wide, let us at least do so much to signalize the day.

Whatever form the celebration assumes, a prominent feature of it should be saluting the flag. This ceremony is as follows: In obedience to appropriate orders from the captain the members of the company assume an erect attitude, all facing to the front. The color-bearer, holding the flag, stands at the right and a little in advance of the company. After repeating in concert, with appropriate motions, the words: "I give my head and my heart to my country," all exclaim: "One country! One language! One flag!" As the last word is pronounced, each extends the right hand and the right foot towards the flag. This should be followed by a patriotic song.

The excellent suggestion comes from the state superintendent of New York, Mrs. H. A. Metcalf, that each Legion shall own a United States flag, across whose stripes shall be emblazoned the words: "Saloons Must Go!" This should be conspicuously displayed on all occasions, and the saluting of the flag be a feature of all our regular meetings. This will in no way interfere with the use of the L. T. L. salute, which is distinctively our own.

Let no other organization outdo the L. T. L. in its devotion to the truest patriotism, which must of necessity include prohibition.

Helen G. Rice,
National Superintendent.

Cor. Secy's Notes.

AT HOME AGAIN.

Seated once more at my desk, after a five weeks' absence in which I have traveled over three thousand five hundred miles, attended forty-seven meetings, made thirty addresses, organized six unions, and seen a large increase in membership everywhere, I look out again upon the wide view over the entire field. Letters have been necessarily unanswered, or answered only by a brief note from the office secretary, explaining my silence, and the accumulation just looked over is sufficiently appalling to make my notes of to-day of the briefest. But I must express my gratitude for health, strength and safety during this journey, and also my gratitude for the unvarying kindness everywhere received. It was a delight, indeed, both to look into the faces of many whom I had so long known through letters only, and to meet new friends. I found everywhere cause for great encouragement, and the work seems to me to be on the increase both in numbers and interest.

The letters piled upon my desk, so far as they have been hastily glanced over, indicate the same, for which I am truly thankful. Now that our delegates are off to the great Convention, we stay-at-homes will not only watch them from afar, and rejoice in their pleasure, but we must keep up everything at highest pressure and "forge ahead," so that Baltimore will show a large increase in every possible way.

I have been delighted with the plans of work sent me by the various National superintendents and will touch upon them more particularly in future notes. Organizers, also, are reporting most excellent work done, and although some of it has been through tribulation which I can better understand now that I have made my trip, yet, on the whole, the reports are most cheery as well as cheering.

The National Headquarters seem lonely now without Mrs. Barker, but the weeks intervening will be so filled with busy toil we shall have hardly time to miss her before she is back again. Mrs. Grow, also, is gone from her niche, and Aunt Jane's Cozy Corner is vacant, but we know their hearts will be with us as ours will be with them. Let us not fail to pray for a safe passage for our dear ones as well as for the success of the great Convention.

Yours for constantly better service,

My work as president of the Boston union has held me somewhat closely in Massachusetts this year. Feeling as I do, however, the great need of sustained effort in large cities, I look back upon the winter service as perhaps no less important to our work at large, because it has been confined within a smaller area, while so many of my brave sisters have been traversing sea and land to spread our propaganda far and wide. What shall be done to strengthen our work in large cities? I regard this as the most vital question before the Woman's Christian Temperance Union to-day. In my judgment it transcends in importance any question relative to the extension of our organization, either at home or abroad. The unprecedented growth of our great cities and the character of much of the population in these strongholds of the liquor traffic have left the problem so far an unsolved one. Of course space forbids any elaboration of this thought here, but the exigencies of the situation press heavily on my heart. Oh, for a fund of one hundred thousand dollars and a devoted band of our very best women to do missionary work in great cities along temperance lines.

I find that in addition to my work in Boston I have given sixty evening addresses, a number of Bible readings, and have also appeared at four legislative hearings. It was my privilege to represent our National work at the great Washington meeting, which was such an inspiration to further service. I have attended conventions in New Hampshire, New Jersey and New York states, where I have endeavored to worthily represent our cause.

My summer plan includes county conventions in Massachusetts, meetings at Moundsville, W. Va., Pine Bush, Md., and Ocean Grove, N. J. I also represent our society with an address before the International Convention of the Y. P. S. C. E. to be held in Boston, July 10.

Emily L. McLaughlin.

POLYGLOT PETITION.

Honored Rulers, Representatives and Brothers:

We, your Petitioners, although belonging to the physically weaker sex, are strong of heart to love our homes, our native land, and the world's family of nations.

We know that clear brains and pure hearts make honest lives and happy homes, and that by these the nations prosper, and the time is brought nearer when the world shall be at peace.

We know that indulgence in Alcohol and Opium, and in other vices which disgrace our social life, makes misery for all the world, and most of all for us and for our children.

We know that stimulants and opiates are sold under legal guarantees which make the Governments partners in the traffic, by accepting as revenue a portion of the profits, and we know with shame that they are often forced by treaty upon populations, either ignorant or unwilling.

We know that the law might do much, now left undone, to raise the moral tone of society and render vice difficult.

We have no power to prevent these great iniquities beneath which the whole world groans, but you have power to redeem the honor of the nations from an indefensible complicity.

We therefore come to you with the united voices of representative women of every land, beseeching you to raise the standard of the law to that of Christian morals, to strip away the safeguards and sanctions of the state from the drink traffic and the opium trade, and to protect our homes by the total prohibition of these curses of civilization throughout all the territory over which your government extends.

Here and There.

Mrs. Strongmind: "If women would only stand shoulder to shoulder they would soon win the suffrage."

Dr. Guffy: "But, madam, that is something they can't do with the present style in sleeves."

Mark Lemon once wrote a book in which he told of a chubby-faced little urchin who passed his instructor upon the street without bowing. The schoolmaster stopped and frowned. "What has become of your manners, sir?" he roared, "It seems to me you are better fed than taught." "Yes, sir," replied the little boy, "I feeds myself, sir."

"What fur is this," asked a teacher in one of the schools of a class of juveniles, as she held up a muff. "That is fur to keep the hands warm," replied the boy.

A small boy was at a table where his mother was not near to take care of him, and a lady next to him volunteered her services. "Let me cut your steak for you," she said; "if I can cut it the way you like it," she added, with some degree of doubt. "Thank you," the boy responded, accepting her courtesy; "I shall like it the way you cut it, even if you do not cut it the way I like it."

Do You Feel Irritable?

Take Horsford's Acid Phosphate.

It makes a refreshing, cooling beverage and is an invigorating tonic, soothing to the nerves.

"Mamma," said an inquisitive little girl, "will rich and poor folks live together when they go to heaven?"

"Yes, my dear; they will all be alike there."

"Then, ma, why don't rich and poor Christians associate together here?"

The mother did not answer.

One of Dr. Holmes' poems ends, "But claim him, keep him, call him brother still." A Boston paper, in quoting this poem, made it read; "But claim him, keep him, call him brother Bill." No wonder Dr. Holmes had a horror of typographical blunders.

The habits of fruit are peculiar; we have seen a raisin box, a fig drum, and an apple stand all day at the corner of a street.

A NEW CURE FOR ASTHMA.

Medical science at last reports a positive cure for Asthma in the Kola plant, found on the Congo river, West Africa. So great is their faith in its wonderful curative powers, the Kola Importing Co., 1164 Broadway, New York, are sending out large trial cases of the Kola Compound free to all sufferers from Asthma. Send your name and address on postal card, and they will send you a trial case by mail free.

It is all too common to misunderstand the true nature of a medicine, as any one must confess, remembering the story of the nurse who awoke her patient in order to administer a sleeping potion.

A certain doctor one day met a neighbor and inquired:—

"Well, Jackson, how did your wife manage her new shower bath?"

"Oh, she had very good luck. Mrs. Smith told her how she managed with hern. She made an oiled silk hood, with a big cape to it, that came down over her shoulders."

"She was an idiot for her pains," said the doctor impatiently. "That's not the way."

"So my wife thought."

"And your wife did nothing of the kind, I hope?"

"Oh, no, no. My wife she used the umbrelly."

Do you want to know the man against whom you have most reason to guard yourself? Your looking-glass will give a very fair likeness of his face.—Whately.

Book-canvassers should take courage from a story told by an English lecturer on "The Art of Bookbinding."

A man of their profession had called at a house whose occupant met him with a growl.

"It's no use to me. I never read."

"But there's your family," said the canvasser.

"Haven't any family—nothing but a cat."

"Well, you may want something to throw at the cat."

The book was purchased.

Beware of Ointments for Catarrh that contain Mercury, as mercury will surely destroy the sense of smell and completely derange the whole system when entering it through the mucous surfaces. Such articles should never be used except on prescriptions from reputable physicians, as the damage they will do is tenfold to the good you can possibly derive from them. Hall's Catarrh Cure, manufactured by F. J. Cheney & Co., Toledo, O., contains no mercury, and is taken internally, acting directly upon the blood and mucous surfaces of the system. In buying Hall's Catarrh Cure be sure you get the genuine. It is taken internally, and made in Toledo, Ohio, by F. J. Cheney & Co. Testimonials free.

Our Library Table.

The Annals of the American Academy for May contains a paper on "The Industrial Services of the Railway," by Dr. Emory R. Johnson, instructor in transportation at the University of Pennsylvania.

Woman's Work in the Far East is a sturdy magazine visitor from China that brings hopeful word of the breaking of chains and loosing of bonds in that strange country. "Women's Meetings in Hangchow," by Miss A. T. Graves, "Better Days for Blind Children in Canton," by Miss Annie Wood, and an account of "The Presentation of the New Testament to the Empress-Dowager of China," are among the wide-awake articles of the issue at hand.

The June Chautauquan contains a most forceful sketch of the editor-in-chief of the New York Sun, Hon. Chas. A. Dana, from the pen of Franklin Morris. Although, as Mr. Morris says, "it is not an easy nor safe task to attempt to fix the status of a living worker who is so close abreast of us," he has given to his readers a comprehensive character-sketch of this journalist who holds his own against the onslaught of years. Authors, editors and students will all appreciate this brief but pointed story of the great journalist who has set the standard of newspaper journalism so high.

Godey's for June is a charming number from the artistic cover page, and the frontispiece where Cupid is aiming his tiny darts at the dainty "summer girl," to the directions for impromptu meals prepared in the chafing dish. It is a number of special interest to its artist and art loving readers. The fourth of a series of sketches of "Artists in their Studios," is devoted to Mr. Henry Mosler and his pictures. The writer of the above, W. A. Cooper, contributes also an article on "The National Academy of Design." "A Field for Artists," by Alfred Godwin, "An Exhibition of Religious Art," by S. Turner Willis, "The School of the Capital of Art," by Emily Varcan, and "The Masterpieces of Italian Sculpture," by Rupert Hughes are made doubly interesting by the accompanying illustrations.

The Missionary Review of the World. Under the generalship of Arthur T. Pierson, editor-in-chief, it can be no matter of surprise that this magazine is ripe and rich from cover to cover. The leading article of the month by Dr. Pierson is "The Indians of America: Their Curious Customs, Wierd Ways and Strange Superstitions,"—his subject-matter culled from a book that is attracting wide notice,—"Some Strange Corners of our Country," by Charles F. Lummis. It is lamentable that even intelligent people know so little of the present carrying out of the Saviour's command to His disciples to teach all nations of Himself. Even in America are people living in heathen darkness, and the tens of thousands of the enlightened move on their own better pathway unconcerned. This one fine issue of the Missionary Review carefully read would awaken many who have hitherto not thought much about the hungry ones waiting on every hand for that Light which alone dispels soul darkness.

June St. Nicholas leads the thoughts of its young people toward the fast-approaching and ever-to-be-desired vacation days. "Dame Daisy's 'At Home,'" by Mary Rowles Jarvis, illustrated, is one of the most beautiful bits of art and poetry combined that the issue contains. "Chris and the Wonderful Lamp," by Albert Stearns, is concluded in this issue, the "end" being most unique and altogether unexpected. "George Rogers Clark and the Conquest of the Northwest," by Theodore Roosevelt, is a valuable historical contribution. "Mushrooms, Lichens and Moulds," by Margaret W. Leighton, is richly illustrated, and will be eagerly read by the young people who love these "woodsy" growths and are curious concerning their history. "The Buffalo, Musk-Ox, Mountain Sheep and Mountain Goat," by William T. Hornaday, is of zoological interest and value. A fairy story that will charm the glowing hearts of wee boys and girls is, "To Desperation; A Little; Not At All," by Gertrude Hall. It is upon the old daisy legend, "He loves me—he loves me not," but pure and sweet as the nodding daisy herself. These are but a few of the good, bright things St. Nicholas ever gives to the children.

FRUITS AND HOW TO USE THEM.

BY HESTER M. POOLE.

Mrs. Poole claims that grains and fruits afford every element needed for the nourishment of the human frame, and that wheat, apples, berries, peaches, etc., furnish rich, pure blood, which is sustenance for strong muscles and sound physical economy.

The subject of food has an ethical significance, as the diet has its effect on the temperament, and also a refining or debasing influence, and in reading this book one thinks not only of the ethics of food but also of the poetry, as fruit, in its bloom and fragrance, is certainly the most ideal sustenance of which it is possible to conceive. In reading this little volume, one wonders why man ever thought of slaying a living creature to sustain his own life, with all else that nature affords for that purpose.

This book has a poetical charm, as it idealizes the real, and turns, with an alchemy of the author's own, the necessary tasks of the preparation of food to an art of ethical import and beauty in daily life.

Is the characteristic title of a profusely illustrated book containing over one hundred pages of charmingly written descriptions of summer resorts in the country north and west of Chicago, The reading matter is new, the illustrations are new, and the information therein will be new to almost every one.

A copy of "Short Journeys on a Long Road" will be sent free to any one who will inclose ten cents (to pay postage) to Geo. H. Heafford, General Passenger Agent Chicago, Milwaukee & St. Paul Railway, Chicago, Ill.

WANTED Bright, intelligent, industrious, wide-awake men, with progressive ideas, and blessed with clever wives, to go west and grow up with the country, make homes, raise live stock and grain, fruits and vegetables, dig coal and gold and silver, saw lumber and shingles, catch and can fish, engage in manufacturing and business enterprises, accumulate money and loan it at good interest in the east and enjoy good health. For publications about the west, write to F. I. Whitney, G. P. & T. A., Great Northern Railway, Saint Paul, Minn.

THUMB NAIL SKETCHES OF WHITE-RIBBON WOMEN.

This interesting and useful little volume has been brought out in new and enlarged form, and is now ready for orders. Besides brief biographies of World's W. C. T. U. General Officers and superintendents and many presidents of National and Colonial auxiliaries, it gives sketches of white ribbon leaders in Great Britain and Canada, our own National officers, state presidents, organizers, evangelists, pioneers, promoted comrades and other leaders. It is a book of 120 pages and beautifully illustrated, containing forty half-tone cabinet-size portraits. A book that aside from its direct and personal interest to all white-ribboners, is bound to prove of immense value to local workers in advertising speakers and in introducing to the general public through the press some of our representative women.

THE CRUSADER SUPPLEMENT

for June, containing the

QUARTERLY TEMPERANCE LESSON,

presents the vexed question of Bible Wines in a manner remarkable for its clearness and common-sense-ness. It is prepared by Miss Ada M. Melville, the talented editor of The Young Crusader, herself a devout student of the Word, and imbued in a marked degree with the spirit of its teachings.

The lesson topic is

and it is treated from the standpoint of the "two-wine theory," which, in the light of both scientific and gospel teachings, is seen to be no longer a "theory" but a fact. It points out the distinction between the cup blessed by the Saviour and the strong drink which is a "mocker," between the "wine which maketh glad the heart of man" and the leavened liquor which leads down to death. In these days of conflicting opinions among Bible teachers concerning the Scriptural use of wine, this Temperance Lesson is a timely help to temperance workers—valuable not only for use in the Sunday-school, but for general distribution among the churches, and for white-ribboners to keep on file.

TEMPERANCE LESSON SUPPLEMENT:

BIBLE READING FOR JUNE.

The subject of the June Bible Reading is

The Divine Keep,

and it will, we feel sure, be heartily welcomed by our women everywhere. It is prepared by the well-known and well loved leader in this department,

Mrs. Hannah Whitall Smith,

and reveals, as do all of Mrs. Smith's Bible expositions, a wonderful grasp upon the heart of the Infinite, and a clear perception of the needs of the human soul only possible to one possessing the "open vision." Like all this author's Bible Readings, it will help us to know the Lord better and, therefore, to trust Him more as our "keeper."

Responsive Reading for June.

The promised reading on Penal and Reformatory Work, by the National superintendent of that department, having failed to reach us, we substitute therefor one arranged by Mrs. A. Swan Brown, entitled which will be found very suggestive to local workers. With a little change this Reading might be made of service in a program for parlor meetings or other entertainments.

A Talk to Non-Members

NEW KIDNEY AND BLADDER CURE.

The new botanic discovery, Alkavis, is an assured cure for kidney and bladder diseases, pain in back and rheumatism. The best proof is that the Church Kidney Cure Company, 418 Fourth Avenue, New York, will send you treatment by mail prepaid free, if you send them your name and address. Alkavis has certainly wrought some wonderful cures, and we advise our readers to try it, as it is offered free.

HEALTHFUL WOMANHOOD AND CHILDHOOD.

BY HENRY BIXBY HEMENWAY, A. M., M. D.,

is a book containing plain talks to non-professional readers, and is the outcome, as the author himself states, of requests for a book which should tell in plain language those things that every woman should know about her physical being and the care of children. Dr. Hemenway believes that "the proper study of womankind is woman"; that purity will result from light, truth and knowledge, and that impurity, with its consequent suffering, is largely the outgrowth of ignorance upon questions concerning the physical organism and its relations. This very necessary knowledge the author aims to convey, and to convey in such a manner as shall give to the reader a more exalted conception of the bodily functions. He emphasizes the importance for both mother and child of the study of creative life; points out the prominent part a woman's dress plays in the production of disease and unhappiness; discusses marriage from the standpoint of a physician rather than that of a moralist or poet, and gives invaluable advice in the bringing up of children.

This book in the hands of an intelligent mother would, we think, prevent much needless sickness for herself and her children. It has been Dr. Hemenway's wish "to write a book which might be profitably read by all classes of society, and that, being read, it would help each to lead a more perfect life." And we think his wish finds its consummation in this volume of nearly 300 pages.

UNITED SOCIETY OF CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR.

Fourteenth annual convention, Boston, Mass., July 10–15.

EPWORTH LEAGUE.

Second International Conference, Chattanooga, Tenn., June 27–30.

POLITICAL REFORM—A CALL FOR A NATIONAL CONFERENCE.

University Temple, Prohibition Park, Staten Island, June 28–July 4.

The object of the conference is to be an interchange of views on leading questions.

The discussion shall be open alike to those who are friendly or hostile to these various views, believing that the way to reach a closer union is through free speech and a clearer understanding of the views held by all. If possible, without a violation of principle, the friends of political reform should enter the next presidential campaign united. No harm can come from a frank talk along these lines.

The conference will be a representative one, all political reform organizations being invited to participate; as, the Prohibition party, People's party, Socialist Labor party, organizations that advocate civil service reform, single tax, direct tax, Sunday observance, and all other organizations that aim at cleaner politics and a better government.

NUMBER OF DELEGATES:—Local organizations to be entitled to one delegate to every twenty members; representative organizations less than state, five delegates each; state organizations, ten each; National organizations, twenty each. Each delegate will be expected to present credentials signed by the proper officer of the society or organization he represents. Other delegates may be granted the privilege of the floor, but not the privilege of voting.

The resolutions or motions adopted or carried will be expressive of the sentiment of the conference, but will not be binding upon the individual delegates or the bodies they represent.

ASSESSMENT:—Each delegate will be required to contribute one dollar to meet the expenses of the conference. The auditorium, lighting, and much of the general advertisement, are contributed free.

RAILROAD FARE:—It is expected that special rates can be secured on the railroads for delegates and friends. Full announcement will be made later.

HOTEL ACCOMMODATIONS within the Park at $1 to $2; good accommodations at the Park Hotel at $1.50 per day, or guests who prefer can stop in New York city.

MOODY BIBLE INSTITUTE.

At this season of the year there are a great many ministers, evangelists, Christian workers and others passing through Chicago who would be glad to see the various forms of Christian activities in this city. The Bible Institute, which is open throughout the entire year, is glad to announce that during the month of June Dr. A. T. Pierson, who filled Mr. Spurgeon's Tabernacle the first year after his death, will lecture each morning at eleven o'clock, except Sunday and Monday, in the lecture room at 80 Institute Place, on the North side of the city; and Prof. W. W. White at nine o'clock.

Pastors with their wives desiring to see the work of the institute for a day, while passing through Chicago, may room and take their meals in the Institute building if they so desire.

PATRIOTIC CELEBRATIO

Lithia Springs, Ill., July 4, 1895.

PROHIBITION PARK, STATEN ISLAND.

Season opens May 30 and closes October 1.

It is not the object of the park management to make money out of these meetings. Our purpose is to combine pure recreation and elevating entertainment at a merely nominal cost, to the one hundred thousand to three hundred thousand people in New York city, who almost daily during the hot summer months, seek "summer outings" amid temptations that lead to dissipation and crime.

AMERICAN INSTITUTE OF SACRED LITERATURE.

For the summer of 1895 the following schools are announced:

Chautauqua, N. Y., July 6–Aug. 16.
University of Chicago, July 1–Sept. 22.
Central Chautauqua, Tully Lake, July 16–Aug. 23.
Ottawa, Kan., June 17–28.
Monteagle, Tenn., August.
Lakeside, O., July 11–Aug. 1.
Lake Madison, S. D., July.
Bay View, Mich., July 18–Aug. 15.
Winfield, Kan., June 18–29.

Still other schools are being arranged, but definite announcements cannot be made concerning them at present. All of the work of the schools of the Institute is supplemented by the correspondence work during the year, and by the popular Study Courses in which during the past year thousands of students have been enrolled.

A Wheel Within a Wheel

HOW I LEARNED TO RIDE THE BICYCLE

BY

Frances E. Willard

In her inimitable style Miss Willard tells in this dainty little volume her experience in learning to master a "steel steed," and as she graphically portrays the various situations leading from many failures to ultimate success, she has interwoven in delightful "side-talks" some exceedingly helpful and practical suggestions as to how failures and discouragements may be turned to success in life, never losing opportunity, as is her wont, to say that which ennobles and uplifts. It is really a fascinating little volume, appealing strongly to all that is best in physical and moral development.

Signal Notes.

One for each 298 people is the average of liquor licenses in the United States.

It is said that thirty-two Irish members of the British House of Commons are directly and indirectly implicated in the liquor traffic.

That he would be glad in all cases to see women holding the franchise on the same terms as men is the expressed opinion of the Bishop of London.

According to the recent police census, New York has a population of 1,849,866, almost equally divided as regards sexes. The annual increase averages 30,000.

"Most certainly when you are teaching the young, you hold in your hand the key to the temperance reform," said Sir B. W. Richardson, addressing a large gathering of teachers, recently.

In the language of India, say the Bombay Guardian, an attack of fever is expressed by the clause "Fever has ascended." A fainting fit is a chakkar (wheel) referring to the dizziness preceding it.

In a total popultion of 90,000 in the Hawaiian Islands, Americans number only 2,000; they are owners, however, of twenty-five millions of the thirty-six million dollars invested in the Islands.

A young Chinese, Foo Sing, who has been employed in the office of the War Cry, is to lead the progress of a new army in China—one of peace, the great Salvation army. "China for Christ" is their watchword.

Fire risks are being reduced in large cities where the high buildings act as barriers to conflagrations. As the "sky scraper" has also high qualities as a windbreak, the era of tall structures is not to be entirely condemned.

June 2, Whitsunday, was appointed by leading members of the Grindelwald conference as a day of prayer for Christian unity. They issued an appeal to Christian ministers everywhere for the observance of the day, asking them to preach a sermon calling attention to the good work of one branch of the church other than their own. This plea for Christian harmony will not fall on stony ground.

Every living person could be contained in a square space twenty-two miles each way, with a square yard on which to stand. An expert bicycler could compass the distance in three and a half hours. These facts are stated by a London magazine which does not, however, give the more valuable statement as to how small a space on which the 1,480,000,000 inhabitants of the world could live.

As was expected, the Royal Commission to look into Great Britain's opium traffic with the notable exception of Mr. H. J. Wilson, M. P., handed in its report declaring that "it has not been shown to be necessary or be demanded by the people that the growth of the poppy and manufacture and sale of opium in British India should be prohibited except for medical purposes." As the witnesses consisted largely of persons whose financial interests were involved, the result is not so surprising.

The death of J. N. Stearns, of New York, for half a century a leading figure in the temperance work of the United States, has been announced. Mr. Stearns appreciated the relation of science to the temperance reform and brought before the American people the works of Sir Benjamin Ward Richardson, Dr. Norman Kerr and Dr. James Edmunds. In 1876 he published "Hints and Helps" by Miss Willard, the first book brought out by the white-ribboners. In the early days of the W. C. T. U. he was a wise friend and counselor, and a tribute to his memory will be paid at the coming World's Convention.

Chattanooga entertains the Second International Conference of the Epworth League this year. June 27, 28, 29, 30 are the dates. The points of historical interest about Chattanooga will no doubt largely increase the attendance at this meeting. The city is making extensive plans for its entertainment. Sunrise prayer-meetings will be held on Lookout Mountain every morning during the conference. The sacrament of the Lord's Supper will be administered at the first service. Hon. McKenzie Bowell, Prime Minister of Canada, and Bishops Joyce, Vincent, Hendrix and Hargroves are among the prominent Methodists who are to be present. Low rates have been given by the railroads.

The Dr. J. H. McLean Medicine Co.,
St. Louis, Mo.

Gentlemen: I feel it my duty to inform you of the great good I have received from Dr. J. H. McLean's Liver and Kidney Balm. I am sure it saved my life. I suffered for several years with Bright's Disease, aggravated by gravel in the left kidney. About two years ago the trouble got so bad that I could not leave my bed; had night sweats, extreme weakness, chills and my flesh had a blanched look. I did not expect to get well again. Eighteen months ago I began using the Liver and Kidney Balm. I used at first two bottles, which helped me so much I could leave the bed and go about my household duties; so I continued with it. I also began to pass the gravel. In all I passed five stones. I am now feeling entirely cured, but still taking the Balm occasionally to make sure. Doctor, I am unable to express my gratitude to God for my restoration to health, and I owe it, even my present existence, to your Liver and Kidney Balm. It is a grand medicine.

Yours respectfully,
MRS. H. J. D.,
CANNELLTON, IND.

At the request of the writer of the above the name is omitted, but it will be furnished in strict confidence to any who wish to investigate this case.

SINCE OUR LAST ISSUE.

Peace is again settling over Formosa.

Florence, Italy, has experienced another earthquake.

Disastrous floods were reported from Spain and France last week.

The tide of business has risen rapidly during the past week and this.

Ann Arbor, Mich., graduated seven hundred twenty-five students this week.

The Iowa mulct liquor law was sustained by Judge W. F. Brannan, June 5.

The new city directories of New York and Chicago show great increase in population, the present census of New York being 1,849,000 and of Chicago, 1,695,000.

A special dispatch from Shanghai dated June 9, reports that Christian missionaries from England, France and America in Chengte, China, have been massacred.

The Emperor of China has thanked President Cleveland for the kindly offices of the United States in behalf of the restoration of peace between China and Japan.

Attorney-General Olney has been appointed Secretary of State to fill the vacancy caused by the death of Secretary Gresham, and Judge Justin Harmon, of Cincinnati, Attorney-General, to succeed Mr. Olney.

A dispatch from Constantinople, June 4, states that the Turkish government has virtually invited war by refusing to adopt proposed measures of relief for Armenia, thus defying the British, French and Russian powers.

We are glad to add to Mr. Crafts' report of "Reform Progress for First Third of 1895" the fact that the state of New York has raised the age of consent to eighteen. When Mr. Crafts wrote upon this phase of reform for our issue of May 9 the bill had not become a law, but a recent communication from Mrs. Burt conveys the cheering news that Governor Morton has signed the bill. It goes into effect the first day of September, 1895, and judges are now calling the attention of the public to its provisions through the newspapers.

The good steamship Berlin has been plowing the waves during the past week, loaded with its precious cargo of white-ribboners and friends. Knowing that the tender, loving thoughts of thousands of readers will follow this party, we shall give all information possible concerning its welfare. On page 4 will be found Miss Stewart's first letter, descriptive of the farewell service and the launching of the vessel. Next week we will have a cablegram message and the week following a letter written on shipboard. The Berlin is due in Southampton Friday, June 14, but as it is not a fast steamer, no friends need be alarmed if it is not reported on that day.

Every time we pass Willard Fountain, which is usually twice a day, we are impressed anew with the beauty and utility of the children's gift to Chicago. The little girl holds out so pleadingly her cup of cold water that few pass her by without accepting her mute invitation. Children are particularly attracted, and the little folks trip up the steps of the pedestal, which were so thoughtfully carved in the granite base, and hold out their little tincup to catch the drops that fall from the bronze cup of the maiden. The site is already well known to teamsters, and seldom are less than three teams awaiting their turn for a drink from the overflowing trough. "Blessed ministry," is the verdict of all.

Mrs. Mary Clement Leavitt has returned from the South and is addressing most acceptably large audiences in the eastern states. She spent the first week of June in Maine, speaking in Portland three times on Sunday, June 2, one of her addresses being a profound appeal for purity. At the close she asked her audience to arise and repeat the following pledge: "Henceforth, God helping me, I will lead the life of purity, and I will treat all women as I want other men to treat my mother, my sister, my wife, my daughter." The entire audience arose and repeated the pledge. The World's and National W. C. T. U. is to be congratulated that this noble apostle of total abstinence and first round-the-world white ribbon missionary is, at nearly three score years and ten, able to give on the public platform her rich experience in home and foreign lands.

The especial day for the World's W. C. T. U. convention is Wednesday, June 19, in Queen's Hall, London. Lady Henry Somerset will give the address of welcome at eleven o'clock and Miss Willard's biennial address will begin at 11:30. Distinguished speakers from America and other countries will be introduced, and reports and addresses by them will occupy the afternoon. Addresses of welcome and brief speeches from representative members will fill the evening. This convention will continue through Thursday transacting routine business, and on Thursday evening a great demonstration will be held in Albert Hall. The music for these meetings will be furnished by a choir of four hundred young white ribbon women organized by Miss Gorham, and five hundred children trained by Mr. Cowlew, superintendent of music in the London Board Schools. Lady Henry Somerset will give a reception to all the delegates at her home, Reigate Priory, June 22. Excursions are also planned to Windsor Castle and Eastnor Castle, Herefordshire.

The Union Signal readers will be interested to know how nearly the coveted two million names were reached for the Great Petition, so we quote from a recent letter from Mrs. Shuman: "I mounted 3,076 yards. This part of the Petition contains 1,204,000 names, and would reach over one and three-quarter miles. The carefully estimated statement is as follows: 1,204,000 names mounted in Evanston, Illinois; 300,000 names mounted in England; 13,638 names mounted in Australia; 2,437 names from British Good Templars Lodge not mounted; 500 names from other countries not mounted, and 1,520,575 actual signers to the Petition. Counting three names to the inch this Petition is eight miles in length. Adding six million attestations if they were mounted in the same way, the entire length of the Petition would be nearly forty miles. The names are still coming in; if we can have enough to warrant it I will send a cablegram to Miss Willard on the 18th of June."

Two of our esteemed religious exchanges published last week issues of unusual interest to white-ribboners. The Advance for June 6 is a temperance number, bearing upon its cover page the picture of Mrs. Mary H. Hunt, with her famous declaration, "The star of hope for the temperance cause hangs over the school-house. If we save the children to-day, we shall have saved the nation to-morrow." There are articles of sterling value by Joseph Cook, Editor Shaw of Review of Reviews, Frances W. Leiter and others, and an editorial review of temperance progress during the past year. We congratulate our Congregational contemporary upon the broad-sided view of the greatest of all problems. The other religious paper referred to is also a Chicago journal, none less than the staunch old Presbyterian paper that lately celebrated its twenty-fifth anniversary—The Interior. Its issue of June 6 contains an exhaustive sketch of Mrs. Matilda B. Carse, and her varied enterprises—the Temple, W. T. P. A. and Chicago Central union, and the cover page is adorned with the best portrait of Mrs. Carse we have ever seen. Thanks, good brothers, for this recognition and encouragement.

All Crusaders, old and new, are interested in the removal of the historic Crusade church at Hillsboro, O., and will be glad to learn how to obtain a permanent memento of the edifice. A letter just received from Mrs. Dr. McSurely, wife of the pastor, will explain. It reads: "As a result of The Union Signal's notice of Crusade church souvenirs, a great many letters of inquiry and suggestion have been received. We cannot personally answer each one just now, but they are preserved, and will be answered in due time. We are thankful for suggestions received, and will, as far as possible, put them into the souvenirs. The church will not be taken down for two or three weeks yet. In the meantime, we have pictures at fifty cents each, a few gavels, with sterling silver plate, inscribed, 'Crusade Church,' a cabinet (book shape) of wood, containing photographs of Dr. McSurely, Mrs. Thompson and Mrs. McDowell—three who were most prominent during the Crusade—this last to have 'Souvenir' painted across the back by granddaughters and great-granddaughters of the original Crusaders. Each of these two souvenirs are $1. We also have a limited number of canes, with silver plate, etc., $2.50 each. The wood used is all from the interior of the church, and our committee will answer all orders accompanied by the price at once. We are obliged to ask this, as we have to pay our workmen promptly. At Mrs. Thompson's request, we have arranged for a farewell Crusade meeting, and the old church will be ushered out of existence with fitting obsequies. We hope to raise money enough to have a Crusade Memorial room in the new church." Miss Maria Stuart, chairman of committee, or Wm. A. Harman, the secretary, both of Hillsboro, O., may be addressed with reference to Crusade souvenirs.

THE TRUTH.

BY ANNE H. WOODRUFF.

A conflict rages round the Word,
(The minds of men so diverse are)
With angry strife their hearts are stirred,
While Truth escapes and flies afar.

And what is truth? A question old,
By coward Pilate asked in vain;
In vain to him the truth was told
By Truth Divine, denied and slain.

To-day is Truth betrayed and bound,
Scoffed at, defamed, and held in scorn,
Through crucifixion conquers, crowned
Upon its resurrection morn.

Jesus, the Truth, the Way, the Life,
Through maze of doubt the guiding-star,
Leads up and on through storm and strife
To where the "heavenly mansions" are.

Amid the turmoil loud I hear
The tender cadence of His voice
And through the mists of earth see clear
His face love-lighted, and rejoice.

The calm of peace falls on my heart
Like dew upon the parched plain,
Revives my fainting faith; my part
Take up of Life's great load again.

"WE'RE ALL BRETHREN."
In Two Chapters.

BY ESTELLE MENDELL AMORY.

CHAPTER II.

It took no further urging, and in thirty-six hours the fond father was questioning the president of the exchange.

"Your son left us some three months ago," said this gentleman.

"Why, he wrote us nothing about it," replied Deacon Newton—"was—anything wrong?" he continued, with quivering lips.

"I am sorry to tell you, sir,"—touched with the old gentleman's emotion, "but Robert, like many another, with his generous, amiable qualities, got led away, and soon became so unfaithful to business we were obliged to discharge him. We advised and urged him to go home and get out of the way of temptation, and promised him his old place if he should reform, for we liked your son, Mr. Newton, and he was faithfulness and honor itself until he got to tippling—then he made a quick slide."

"But where is he now?" cried the father, with ashen face.

"I can't tell you, Mr. Newton, as I have not seen or heard anything from him since he left us, and I had hoped that he had taken our advice and was at home."

"Don't you think he's in some other place of business?" asked the father, unwilling to abandon all hope.

"I fear not," returned the president, in a sympathizing tone. "You must look for him elsewhere."

"In the saloons?"

"Yes, or it may be that he has been caught up by some of these rescue homes or coffee houses that are ever on the alert, you know, to save the fallen or unwary," he suggested, anxious to relieve the dark picture as much as possible.

With a hastily-penned note to the burdened mother "not to worry too much, for he'd do his best to find the boy," the sorrowing father began the embarrassing search.

But a half day's interview of the keepers of the thousands of saloons and vile resorts—or a portion of them—was all that he could endure, and their coarse, unfeeling answers, often bristling with profanity, soon convinced him that he could get no help from them. The police he found about equally indifferent, and very heavy hearted with despair he turned into a modest but cheerful looking coffee house situated in a nest of saloons.

"It gives me comfort and hope just to look into that woman's kind, motherly face," thought the poor man as he was greeted by the sunny-faced matron; but who shall describe his feelings, when in answer to his pathetic inquiries, she told him that a young man answering his description came into their rooms a number of times a few weeks previous.

"Here are a few notes I made of the case," she said, taking a book from the desk, "for we have so many heart-broken parents looking after their wandering sons—and daughters even—that I jot down all the particulars I can gain. This young man I recall quite distinctly, for he seemed very haggard and weak and very low spirited. Said he had lost a fine position from drink and a fast life,"—reading from her note book—"had just been on a terrible debauch but wanted to do better and go home, but feared there was no use trying, he had gone so far—had loving father and mother at E—, Ill.,—were well off—his father a deacon in the church, and his mother a devoted Christian and W. C. T. U. woman—he had often heard her read in her UNION SIGNAL of our coffee rooms and rescue homes, and that was what had led him here in his despair."

"That's Robert, oh, that's my boy," sobbed the poor father, as she closed the book, the tears raining down his face. "But where is he now; can we find him?"

"We will try, my dear brother," was the encouraging reply, and before he could recover himself the sympathizing matron was telephoning a message in trace of the lost son. "And you had better have a cup of coffee and a sandwich," she said, "you look so tired."

As Deacon Newton sat there sipping the coffee and eating the sandwich, he watched the customers that came in—most of them former victims of the saloon—with an interest that would have been impossible at any previous period of his existence. And he also noted with tearful eyes the Christian courtesy of the waiters, the kind words dropped—the leaflets slipped into hands trembling from dissipation, and suddenly the "fountains of the great deep" seemed broken up within him.

"Can God forgive me for having refused to help such a noble work?" he groaned in spirit, as he remembered with shame how often he had turned a deaf ear to its appeals.

"It is now about the hour for the noon prayer-meeting at Willard Hall," said the matron, interrupting his varied emotions; "I think you had better attend and talk with the lady in charge, for she telephones me that while she would not raise false hopes in your heart, she thinks she may possibly have a clue to your son."

With broken words of gratitude Deacon Newton clasped the good woman's hand at parting, promising to let her know the result of his search. "And here is my name and address, handing her a slip of paper he had a few moments before torn from a book in his coat pocket; "may God bless you," and he was gone before she could realize that the stranger had placed a generous check in her hand "to aid her work."

When the anxious father reached Willard Hall, so calm and restful in the midst of the city's turmoil and wretchedness, the meeting had opened, so he was obliged to postpone his inquiries until its close.

"Such a beautiful place," thought the deacon, "and such a wonderful meeting," as he listened to the touching testimonies of those whose feet had been stayed in their downward course. "Is this the work of those women Maria belongs to?" and again his soul was pierced at the thought of his miserable selfishness towards them, while as vividly as though received but yesterday, came the request to place his faithful wife's name on those beautiful walls—and his heartless refusal!

All too soon these wholesome meditations were cut short by the closing hymn, but none too soon, perhaps, for the father's urgent business. Friendly words and handclasps came from every side.

"Yes, I am sure it was your son who was at our meeting about a week ago," said the leader, after listening to the poor man's description; "he came two or three times; he spoke, and seemed anxious to reform—said his mother had told him to come here, and if he had only done so earlier he needn't have come in such a sad condition. I talked with him, and felt a deep interest for him, but he seemed very hopeless. The last day he was in I recall he looked sick and so miserable. I advised him to go right to our Temperance Hospital. I gave him the directions, and even wrote a letter to the matron and made sure he had the car fare to get there, but whether he went or no, I have not heard."

"I will go there at once," cried the father, excitedly. "I thank you with all my heart, madam, for your kindness to my son," and there was a solemn though silent promise that Willard Hall should never lack funds to carry on its blessed work, and that its beautiful walls should bear his wife's name.

At the hospital a surprise awaited him—a double one—he not only found his precious boy, though at death's door, but by his bedside the mother.

A telegram from the doctor had brought her on the train following her husband, and for several hours her gentle presence and soothing words had been as balm to the boy's wounded spirit and body. But he had cried for his "father" and they were telephoning the city for him when he came.

Once holding his hand and assured of his forgiveness, Robert longed to live, and began to slowly mend.

"The world is round, Maria," Mr. Newton whispered in his wife's ear as they sat by the bed of their child, "an' but for 'your folks' this 'ud never been," was the manly acknowledgment, as his trembling hand clasped hers in a tender way it had not known for more than forty years.

"Yes, father, they're all that's saved me," came from the thin, fevered lips.

"Well, don't worry; they shall be rewarded," said the father.

"There are lots to save," came again from Robert.

"Yes, an' as long as Amos Newton's got a cent he'll help to save somebody's boy, fur we're all brethren, praise God."

Coulson Kernahan.

BY FRANCES E. WILLARD.

Whenever we have the rare good fortune to find a gifted author who is thoroughly in earnest, we have come upon one of the most powerful forces in the working out of the intricate problem of humanity's salvation. Because Mr. Coulson Kernahan is that kind of a man I wish to write a little about him in THE UNION SIGNAL.

No one can be in his presence five minutes without perceiving that he is devotedly serious and tender in his attitude towards the great problems of the time, and what he writes is for the avowed purpose of helping to incarnate the love of God and one another in the hearts of men. He was fortunate in having a saint for a father, and their relation is one of mutual affection and pride. Mr. Kernahan is a young man, tall and with a military bearing. His features are somewhat prominent, his eyes bright, his forehead high and intellectual, surrounded by a heavy mass of wavy brown hair. He is of Irish extraction and reveals in word and deed the warmth of nature for which his race is famous.

Mr. Kernahan is the literary adviser of one of the largest publishing houses in London and has contributed to several of the leading literary papers. But before everything he is a writer of remarkable stories. Indeed, he has been called by high authority the "poet novelist," and it may be said without exaggeration, that he has worked out a new vein in fiction. The two books on which his reputation rests at present are, "A Dead Man's Diary" and "A Book of Strange Sins." In these he shows forth in language chaste and beautiful, the consequences of giving way to drink, to lust, pride, self-righteousness, indeed, he depicts the murder of the soul. His story entitled "A Literary Gent" is intended to illustrate the effect of drink upon a man before whom an excellent literary career and high social position and domestic happiness were all opened like a pleasant landscape from which he turned aside to descend along a slimy path into a bottomless abyss.

Mr. Kernahan has already taken a deservedly high position among England's younger writers, and I predict that what he has already wrought is but the prelude of a full-toned orchestra.

The chapter in his book that has most deeply impressed my mind is entitled "The Lonely God," in which he translates what a stormy sea at night says to the soul of man, and he has done this in the language which for exalted feeling and magnificent description are, in my judgment, worthy of any writer of modern times.

Readers of THE UNION SIGNAL will be glad to know this much about a young man who in the midst of the temptations of London and the vicissitudes of a literary man's career, still carries "the white lily of a blameless life."

INCREASE OF SABBATH BREAKING AMONG WOMEN.

BY REV. WILBUR F. CRAFTS.
Superintendent National Bureau of Reforms, Washington, D. C.

"I was astonished to see so many lady cyclers in the parade," said a wheelman in my presence, speaking of the run from Chicago to Evanston by the various cycling clubs of the former city, to the number of three thousand, of whom two hundred were women, on Sabbath, May 26. Not scrupulous about the Sabbath for himself the wheelman referred to was yet surprised to see women going in droves, whole clubs of them, into Sunday amusements. I had never seen a woman on a cycle on the Sabbath in eighty thousand miles of travel until I saw them recently in Cincinnati and in this Evanston parade. The parade started in Chicago about nine o'clock, just at the right time to give the children of the morning Sabbath-schools a lesson in Sabbath breaking in place of the lesson of the day, on the Cross. Passing through suburb after suburb at the hour of morning church, the parade arrived in Evanston just in time to stop the children on their way to noon Sabbath-schools and "crucify the Lord afresh." If it had been organized as the devil's cavalry to attack the church, the Sabbath schools, the Sabbath and the civil law, it could not have done the work more effectively. And in this trampling on the blood of the Son of God, women, whose share in the first crucifixion of Christ was to stand the Cross beside as his brave friends, were in the ranks of His foes.

It was every way a most defiant violation of divine and civil law, not only a parade, but practice for a race on the following Thursday, on which, in spite of the too weak protest of the clubs, which should defend themselves by law, gambling houses sold pools, the first case of professional gambling on cycle races, which are in danger of becoming in this way as disreputable as horse races.

The parade was not in the afternoon, to which Sunday amusements have usually confined themselves, but at the church hour, when even Germany would not have tolerated this gross discourtesy to religion.

Of course, what is not right for a woman is not right for a man. We want no "double standard" on either the fourth commandment or the seventh, but a single standard should be reached, not by lowering the highest, but by raising the lowest. Our hope for raising men to a higher practice as to purity, temperance and the Sabbath has been largely in woman's word and example in behalf of these virtues. Is the already Herculean task of lifting the Sabbath out of the mire, into which it has been thrown by greed and appetite and lust, to be made yet more difficult by women changing about and pulling against us rather than for us? Have these female Sunday cyclers, growing up in an age when family worship is a lost art, never learned that the fourth commandment and the seventh are in the same code? Cardinal Gibbons once said to me out of the depths of the sad life histories that had passed before him in his long career, "The fourth commandment is one the keeping of which leads to the keeping of all the others; the breaking of which leads to the breaking of all the others." So say also a long line of prison chaplains, refuge matrons and the like. There are hygienic and social reasons for both of the commandments named, but the reason why they are obeyed, in a great majority of cases, is, that they have behind them the mighty "Thou shalt not" of Sinai, whose code is one, so that offending in one point is breaking the whole by repudiating its authority, and leads, in a multitude of cases, to the breaking of the whole in its specific requirements.

Let us hope the women who are wise to win will persuade these young pleasure-seekers of the profound wisdom of Isaiah's saying that they who on the Sabbath "turn away from pleasure" find that higher joy "delight."

Another growing custom that must not be allowed to become a fixed feature of the "new woman," if we would still associate "mother, home and heaven," is the Sunday receptions, now increasing, common even in Presbyterian homes, as witness Dr. John Hall, of New York city, and Dr. Tennis W. Hamlin, of Washington. The family and the Sabbath are the twin survivors of Eden, the Jacin and Boaz pillars of strength and beauty before man's Edenic home, and though scarred by the fall still they stand like majestic pillars amid surrounding hovels and ruins at Rome, and behind those pillars, in the Christian Sabbath at home, man yet finds, nearer than anywhere else on earth, his paradise regained. A young man who has not conscience enough to decline an invitation to a young lady's Sunday "at home," will in many cases have sense enough not to choose such a woman for his own home. To make such a woman, though good enough he thinks, for a Sunday party or picnic or theatre or cycle parade companion—to make such a woman the mother of his children, would create too unpleasant a contrast with his own mother, whose teaching he has disobeyed but not forgotten.

Apparently women are increasingly surrendering their former general opposition to the Sunday paper under its wily briberies of colored fashion plates and cheap chromos. Do these women know that the red in these pictures is the blood of fifty thousand newsboys — some mothers' boys—who are learning almost in infancy our national habit of lawlessness, selling papers whose manufacture, transportation and sale is all in defiance of divine law, and most of it of civil law as well? The newsboys ply their trade in most cases during the hours of church and Sabbath-school—breaking God's law at the very hour they should be learning to keep it—and would be so learning but for the Sunday press, which has drawn many of its newsboys out of their proper place in the Sabbath-school.

Sunday advertisers say in self-defense: "We find the women flocking on Monday into the stores that advertise their bargains in the Sunday issue." It is this advertising, not the sales, that keeps up the Sunday issue. If the Christian women of a community would agree to do only absolutely necessary shopping on Monday unless the special advertising now crowded into the Sunday paper were transferred to the Saturday, or some other issue, the protest and practice would make it less difficult for ministers, with the aid of merchants whose consciences object to their advertising, to suppress this seemingly smallest but really most comprehensive form of Sabbath breaking, which includes Sunday work by professional men, the editors; by mechanics, the printers; by merchants, the newsdealers; by carriers, the express and train and mail men; by hucksters, the newsboys, and by amusement venders, the papers being sold chiefly for amusement, like the wares of the theater.

There is absolutely no form of Sabbath desecration that a woman can consistently rebuke with a Sunday newspaper in her hand, for she has them all there in an unabridged edition.

Add to what has been enumerated of woman's Sabbath-breaking, the great number of women who neglect to buy supplies for the Sabbath on Saturday; those who gratify a childish curiosity by getting their Sunday mail, and so make unnecessary and sinful work in the post-office on the Sabbath; those who use Sunday trains, under whose wheels not only Sinai's code is crushed, but also the laws of our own states—crushed by the weight of all who ride as well as by the soulless corporation that furnishes the train; add all this and more that, alas, every innocent child must see to its own injury, and the call to womanhood reverberates like the roar of Sinai's thunders,

"REMEMBER THE SABBATH DAY TO KEEP IT HOLY."

ALCOHOL AND CRIME.

BY F. L. OSWALD, M. D.

The alcohol habit is apt to lead to the commission of countless different crimes; but, besides, its victims become a ready prey to other criminals; to thieves, who rob the toper during the eclipse of his intellectual faculties, and murderers who take advantage of the circumstance that fermented and distilled beverages disguise the taste of other poisons. Even beer masks the presence of virulent drugs that would easily betray their admixture with such substances as milk, lemonade and common drinking water.

THE MOUNT STERLING EPISODE.

On the 12th of May, 1895, Captain James Robinson, the wealthiest stock breeder and land owner of Brown county, Illinois, invited one of his employés to a glass of beer, and half an hour after was taken with a violent retching fit and a griping pain in the stomach. His guest, Frank Mayfield, also was taken sick about the same time, and in spite of prompt medical attendance, both men died in agony. There was no doubt that the beer must have been poisoned, for none of the numerous persons who had taken dinner with the two ill-fated farmers experienced any indisposition, and Captain Robinson testified that within less than five minutes after finishing that glass of beer he became conscious of a strange feeling, similar to that following a dose of laudanum or a similar strong medicine. Mayfield remembered that "the beer tasted a little unusual, but there being so many different brews, paid not much attention to that circumstance." What virulent poisons can be disguised by the pungent taste of strong beer was strikingly illustrated in the case of a Pennsylvania miner, who, a few weeks ago, poured a bottle of lager beer into a tumbler containing an ounce of nitric acid (a corrosive poison that will melt copper as hot tea would dissolve a lump of sugar) and drained the glass almost to the last drop before he noticed his fatal mistake. The Borgias and other poison-mongers of the middle ages generally administered their deadly draughts in a glass of wine; and distilled liquors would disguise even the atrocious taste of sulphuric acid (vitriol), which is, in fact, one of the substances used for the adulteration of brandy.

OLLIE'S CHOICE.

A few years ago Mr. Theodore Becker, a well-to-do farmer of Allegheny county, Pa., adopted the son of his brother Philip, who had died in consequence of intemperate habits and despondency, due to a series of business reverses. This relative (Philip Becker) had for years kept a saloon in a little Pennsylvania mountain resort, but seems to have had sense enough to refuse liquor to his only son, Ollie, who at the time of his transfer to Allegheny county was about eleven years old, and thus far had not yet tasted intoxicating drink in any form. The belief in the instinctive stimulant thirst of topers' children appeared to be refuted in his case, though it is possible that his father's passion for strong liquor was developed years after Ollie's birth. The orphan boy had found a good home. His uncle owned real estate in Allegheny city as well as in the country, and ever after his brother's death had been very careful in the use of intoxicants, though he now and then joined a Sunday guest in a glass of light beer. Ollie would have declined an invitation of that sort. He was fond of sweetmeats, like most boys, and often wasted his pocket-money on candy, but disliked the taste of beer, and preferred a glass of lemonade to the best German New Year's punch. His aunt, Mrs. Katherine Becker, was a total abstainer. She had seen so much of the evils of intemperance that she detested the very sight of a liquor shop, and was consequently shocked to learn that their adopted child had begun to frequent the beer saloons of the neighborhood and had on one occasion become involved in a drunken row. The cause of that sudden change of habit seemed a mystery, till cross-examination revealed the fact that Ollie had learned to drink during a few weeks' visit to his birthplace, where some of his father's former customers had considered it their duty to do the honors of the place after a fashion of their own. Under the pretext of escorting the boy to the scenes of his childhood's sports they had taken him to picnics, "barbecues," and finally to undisguised symposiums of brandy and lager-beer—"just for old time's sake, and because the lad's father had often been good to them." But if they really thought themselves indebted to the boy's parents, it would have been kinder to inoculate the little fellow with hydrophobia poison. With the Pasteur treatment and other specifics about seven out of ten mad-dog bites can nowadays be cured, while it would perhaps be an overestimate to say that two out of ten boy-topers can be thoroughly reclaimed.

Ollie repented and promised, and once kept his pledge nearly half a year, but the smouldering fire blazed out again and again, till his foster-father at last thought it the best plan to send him to a country boarding-school at a safe distance from liquor shops. Before the end of the first month Ollie got desperately homesick. He sent letters promising total abstinence for life, if his aunt would intercede to shorten the term of his exile, and threatening suicide in case of refusal. His schoolmates became afraid of him, and he acted so strangely that his teacher advised his parents to take him home for a month or two. The boy's appearance justified the belief that he was really sick, and the Beckers changed their plan of curing his nostalgia by keeping him at work in a way that would make him glad to return to his text-books. They consulted the family physician, who attributed the trouble to the influence of sedentary occupations, and prescribed outdoor exercise and a change of diet. Mr. Becker then had a private interview with his ward. He informed him that at the doctor's advice they would trust him once more, but did not conceal his suspicion, and told him plainly that the next relapse would transfer the scene of his cure to Morganza, a reformatory some thirty miles southeast of Pittsburg. Two days after the communication of that ultimatum Mr. Becker found his bureau broken and a sum of thirty dollars in cash and about one hundred and fifty dollars in checks gone. Those checks were afterwards found in the boy's bedroom, but his best suit of clothes had vanished, and there was no doubt that Ollie Becker had deliberately thrown away a good home and the prospect of comfort and independence for thirty dollars' worth of alcoholic liquors.

DO WE EAT FERMENTED BREAD?

BY O. B. BIRD, M. D.

Certainly not. We do nothing of the kind. Whence comes the universal impression that we do? From uncritical observation of facts and an unthinking adherence to traditions that have grown from ancient ignorance of chemistry.

Let us see: We put yeast into moistened flour, with warmth, and what happens? There is always present in flour a certain amount of sugar—fruit-sugar, glucose. The yeast-animal at once attacks this, uses one-half for its own growth (estimated at twenty fold in an hour, a million to a loaf), and excretes the other half as alcohol and carbonic acid gas. A certain part of the flour (starch) is turned into glucose, and thus devoured, estimated at one to one and a half per cent.

Now, please note particularly that the material which the yeast-animal uses is utterly destroyed. Each molecule of sugar ($C^{12}$, $H^{12}$, $O^{12}$) is taken apart and made into two of alcohol ($C^4$, $H^6$, $O^2$) and four of carbonic acid gas ($CO^2$). Both these substances escape as the baking nears completion. Thus we see that whatever is affected by the yeast-animal disappears, while the great mass of flour is simply expanded or raised by the mechanical action of the gas-breaths, and is no more fermented than a rock is exploded when lifted by a blast of dynamite.

This disposes of everything but the yeast-animal itself. This is destroyed and dried up by the heat, so that there is practically nothing left of it. But even if present in considerable quantity it is not evident that that would constitute fermentation. These ideas I believe to be plain deductions from the teachings of modern chemists. In a word: The flour which ferments is destroyed; and that which is not destroyed does not ferment.

Some forty years ago Dr. Dauglish proposed forcing gas into dough in order to secure expansion or "rising" without fermentation,—aerated bread. Henry Dodson used chemicals for producing gas, thus leaving the flour free. The Jews used no leavened bread (or wine) at their Passover ceremonies. All these might have been saved considerable trouble if they had but known that the rising of dough is only a mechanical process.

Now let us eat in peace!

WILLARD HALL, NOONTIDE LINKS.

Great waves of heat swept through the city, and lay, white and intolerable over palace, street and tenement row, and no man could say it nay.

. . . . . .

Rounding the corner came a horse with steaming sides; he gave one low, satisfied whinny at the sight of Willard Fountain, and bearing his rider to the cool basin, drank long and deep.

The rider was a study, as he studied the fountain; but the horse, with more than brute tenderness, laid his long, sensitive head against the maiden standing there, and lovingly licked her slender feet.

. . . . . .

But the writer saw in a flash the children who gave the fountain, the helpless ones who love it, and a prophecy traveling to fulfillment along the future's rim.

. . . . . .

Decoration day came with booming guns, beating drums, and loving rivalry between blue and gray; and with it came some far away friends to Willard Hall. Among them was Mrs. Stoddard, honored president of the W. C. T. U. of Texas, on her way to the great Convention. Sweetly helpful were her testimonies, and touching to a degree her assurance of the love of the South for the North. Then up spoke an old soldier of the blue who had spent months in Andersonville prison. He said:

"I can't forget the horrors of Andersonville, but I love the Southland now."

. . . . . .

Glancing to the left of me the marble bust of our chieftain seemed instinct with life, as if the lips were trying to say:

Peace be to you.

EDITORIAL CORRESPONDENCE.

Farewell Reception to our World's Delegates.

DEAR UNION SIGNAL:—The old adage, "Welcome the coming, speed the parting guest," has been reversed in the experience of the World's W. C. T. U. delegates. The hospitable white-ribboners of the vicinity of New York yesterday did the "speeding," and later the welcome will be given on the other side of the sea. The fortunate delegates, however, can stand any amount of this sort of "reverses," if yesterday is an indication of the good times in store.

After the excessive heat endured by all en route or in New York, the gray cool of the morning was very grateful, and it continued all day. The ferries and cars brought the women by the score, and the men, too, to Staten Island and Prohibition Park, whose fine and appropriately decorated University Temple resounded all day with eloquence, good wishes and expressions of loyalty, courage and faith in our great cause.

Prohibition Park is a beautiful spot. It is under the auspices of the National Prohibition Camp Association, of which Dr. W. H. Boole was the first president, Gen. Clinton B. Fisk, the second, and Dr. Chas. Deems the third. The present board is officered by Wm. T. Wardwell, Joseph Bogardus and Dr. I. K. Funk, respectively president, secretary and treasurer. Illustrative of the fact that prohibition is synonymous with home protection, the Park, greatly to the surprise of its projectors, has become a place of permanent homes, erected not only by those who are of that political faith, but by many people who are of literary tastes and active in Christian work. The plan for its summer meetings is brilliantly varied, instructive and entertaining, making it a Mecca for the litterateur and reformer. This summer will see the erection of Westerleigh Collegiate Institute and the Deems Memorial Chapel. Dr. Chas. R. Kingsley, former president of Milwaukee Female College, is principal of Westerleigh College.

At the entrance to the Park stands the residence of Dr. and Mrs. Boole, whose decorations and banner of welcome were the first to greet the eyes of the World's delegates. Mrs. Boole has been the instigator of this delightful farewell reception, and to her energy and ability the success of the occasion is due. She was assisted by Mrs. Anna M. Hammer, state W. C. T. U. president of Pennsylvania, and Mrs. Ella Bourne, state president of New Jersey, who presided alternately during the day.

The consecration meeting at eleven o'clock was opened by a Scripture lesson given by Mrs. Hammer, who took for her text the first words of the twenty-third Psalm, "The Lord is my shepherd, I shall not want." Her words were of tender inspiration for those who were about to cross the great sea but who would be safely carried by the "everlasting arms." Mrs. Boole repeated this thought in an earnest prayer. Remarks were made by Mrs. Perkins, of Cleveland, O., who thought it a very timely thing that such a meeting should be held on the eve of our departure, fearing that the preparations for the voyage (wondering what we would take and what we would leave) had made us a little worldly minded. Singing and other remarks led up to the noontide prayer, when Mrs. Bourne voiced our petitions to the great Caretaker. Then followed a half hour of encouragement from the workers who were to remain behind and thoughtful words from those who were "to go down to the sea." Among those who thus voiced thoughts precious, true and helpful, were Mrs. Barker, Mrs. Worts of Indiana, Mrs. Watts of Kentucky, Mrs. Howes of Massachusetts, and "Mother" Prindle of the New York Florence Mission—all "pilgrims" on this tour. Miss Julia Colman gave a text for remembrance to the delegates: "The eyes of the Lord run to and fro throughout the whole earth to show himself strong in behalf of them whose heart is perfect toward him." This started a ten minutes' repetition of Scripture texts of God's promises to His servants. One gave a "powder," a comfort powder, "Let not your heart be troubled." Another gave a check on the Bank Inexhaustible, full of "All His riches," the banker, God, the amount "All you need" and the negotiator, Christ Jesus. At the close of this uplifting meeting, both those who gave and those who received the Word felt wonderfully blessed and cheered; the dread of the ocean voyage was banished from every heart.

Next in order of the day's proceedings was the social hour of lunch at the hotel. The delegates ate lightly as they had been admonished to do and all were soon ready for the toasts, wise, witty and grave, Mrs. Boole, toastmistress. "The World's Convention and the Great Petition," in the absence of Mrs. Hoffman, was toasted by Mrs. Bourne and was appropriately first on the list. The impression of hope and zeal was Dr. Charles Kingsley's idea of the "Present Occasion" which brought to him new inspiration and faith that temperance is bound to come.

"The Coming Woman" was the subject of Mrs. Barker's toast. The coming woman and the advanced woman she said had been merged into the "new woman" who was erroneously pictured as half man, part demigod and altogether a monstrosity. She repudiated this idea, and the one that she has ceased to care for home, husband and children. The new woman is not less a woman because over three hundred avenues of occupation are open to her now in place of the four of fifty years ago. She quoted Miss Willard who said, "Let woman first be womanly and then she may be what she will." It was a presumptuous man nowadays (and most always a young man) who dared to mark off woman's sphere. The new woman will love home, husband, children all the more.

Following the chairman's amusing explanation that men were not, in this company, relegated to the gallery to breathe the fumes of tobacco and spirits from the banquet, Mr. E. J. Wheeler of the Voice rose to speak for the coming man, who, he was afraid, wasn't "in it." He came as a suppliant, meek and lowly in spirit, and although a young man, he wouldn't attempt to define woman's sphere. But as the "coming man" came first as a baby to the mother's arms, he knew that there must be found place for him. He asked the coming woman to make allowances for him, and ended with the glowing hope that the coming man would be worthy of the coming woman.

"The W. C. T. U. press" was well presented by Mrs. H. H. Forrest, Philadelphia editor of the Pennsylvania Bulletin, who termed the press "the living, breathing exponent of our work." She compared THE UNION SIGNAL to the great lungs breathing life and love, and pointed out the "meaningfulness" of its name and those of the twenty-six state papers which are the leaves for the healing of the nation.

Dr. Boole wittily criticised the title of his toast which should have been, he thought, instead of "The W. C. T. U. and the Prohibition Party," "The Prohibition Party and the Prohibition Party," for he considered them as two divisions, "the emotional female minds and the legal male minds," "whom God had joined together let not politicians put asunder." In his brilliant speech, he highly praised the work of the W. C. T. U., which he justly claimed has pushed forward the Prohibition party more than any other influence. But if prohibition would win, it must give women the ballot,—a sentiment, loudly applauded.

Mrs. Barnes next responded to the toast, "The Y Branch," calling attention to the social influence of the young women and citing as an illustration, the recent action of the young women in Danbury, Conn., who had adopted the high ground, "Total abstinence or no husbands." On her recent trip abroad with a group of young women, she had had many opportunities for social influence.

"The Pilgrims" were, in Mrs. Olive Pond-Amies' opinion, mothers as well as "fathers." To this band of white-ribbon pilgrims she bade Godspeed.

Miss Phelps, of Canada, eloquently pleaded for "annexation" in white ribbon work. It is only an imaginary margin line which divides the different lands and every good influence reacts the world around.

This concluded the "feast of reason." After grouping in front of the University Temple for a photograph, the afternoon session was immediately inaugurated. Following the devotions, an earnest, thoughtful greeting was given by Mrs. Morris, president Staten Island W. C. T. U. "News from the Field" was the topic which the chairman said would not have to be gotten from THE UNION SIGNAL or waited for in convention. Miss Nichols spoke for Rhode Island, Miss Parrish for Illinois, Miss Kearney for Mississippi, Miss Hay for Indiana, Mrs. Watts for Kentucky, and Miss Julietta Huff for Canada. Mr. Kanaga Rutnam, of India, who has been addressing meetings in England during the recent anti-opium campaign, spoke eloquently of his impressions of the power of woman's work in Great Britain and America. India has no hope, he said, until women are placed in their rightful position.

The delegates, of whom only a score were present at this meeting, were introduced and applauded.

A pleasant surprise came in the arrival of ex-Governor St. John, who gave a word of cheer just before the close of this interesting session.

The feature of the afternoon and evening gatherings was the music by Mr. and Mrs. C. C. Beveridge, of Nebraska, and Mrs. Gwindon, of New York. The former sang prohibition songs, unique and telling, of popular and attractive style; the latter sang hymns with great expression, accompanying herself upon the zither.

At the evening meeting the speeches were made by Mrs. Helen M. Stoddard, who gave "News from the Field" of Texas, Miss Lillian Phelps, of Canada, spoke of the power of organization, prefacing her remarks with an amusing account of the Royal Canadian Liquor Commission which has cost that government $70,000, issued thirteen large volumes and concluded that alcohol was not injurious! As the commissioners, with one exception, were brewers or interested in that industry, the result was not surprising. Mrs. Walker told of gleams of light in drouth-stricken Nebraska, which in spite of all obstacles is sending its full quota of delegates (three) to the World's Convention. Dr. Mary Wood Allen gave an earnest talk on purity; Mrs. S. M. Perkins made a witty address on "The W. C. T. U. and Suffrage," and Mrs. Barker nobly succeeded in telling a little (in ten minutes) of what the W. C. T. U. has done for reforms. Everybody joined in the doxology and it was still early when the glorious Staten Island Farewell Reception Day came to a close.

A group of women around a pile of pine boxes, containing the Great Petition, other groups, seeking trunks, satchels and bags, a hustling to and fro, greetings, exclamations and confusion; such is the scene on the Jersey City pier as I write, an hour before sailing. White-ribboners are proverbially cool and ready-witted, so no one lost her baggage or her "head," and chaos was reduced to order before the time for "setting sail" (that sounds nautical!) The decks are packed with passengers and their friends until the last moment before our departure.

Friends from Philadelphia, New York, Boston and within a radius of fifty miles around crowd the upper decks and corridors, adieux are being said on every hand as the good ship is loaded.

"As soon as we're started we'll be 'always abounding,'" remarked a keen-witted white-ribboner, who is chronically in that happy condition.

"Have you Mother Stewart?" just now rung out in clear tones up the gang plank, for that intrepid Crusader has embarked with all the courage of earlier years.

With the Great Petition, the Crusade Bible and a loyal band of Crusade-hearted women on board, we leave native land at 4 p. m., Wednesday, June 5, 1895, to help

"Wreathe the ribbon,
The white, white ribbon,
Wreathe the ribbon around the world."

MRS. BARNEY AT HOME.

DEAR UNION SIGNAL:—It was not of purpose that I have been so tardy in acknowledging the courteous greetings of my sisters, received on my return from England. It was in my heart to tell something of my trip, but the letters in your columns, from friends across the water, quite took my breath away with words of hearty appreciation and generous praise and I felt quite like keeping out of sight.

Then I had scarcely two weeks at home on account of engagements in Canada, which had been twice deferred to accommodate me in my English work. My first stop was in Montreal, under care of the evangelistic department, where arrangements had been so thoroughly made that I had enthusiastic audiences at both the Bible reading and evening service, with collections that left over seventy-five dollars in the treasury, over all expenses.

From there I went on to Ontario, where engagements covering five weeks were in the care of Mrs. M. R. Thornley, the efficient Provincial president. The first two weeks were in her own city, London, where she is local president, and my services had a wide range, from the opera house to the jail. Bible readings, Easter service, sermons and addresses to Sunday-school and children's meeting in W. C. T. U. hall and in Methodist and Presbyterian churches, with hearty sympathy and coöperation of the clergymen and Y. M. C. A. It was a quiet work without large numbers, "but eternity will attest its genuineness," writes a friend who was greatly helped.

I had a week in the beautiful city of Toronto, where there are sixteen unions federated in a district union of which Mrs. Rutherford is president. Under her wise leadership eleven services were held, with interest emphasized by pledge signing, new members and a brave showing of white ribbons. On Friday I was kindly released for two services, one in the Central prison for men and the other at the Mercer Reformatory for women. At the prison the warden, an earnest Christian gentleman, closed the shops from 11 to 12 a. m., and gathered the men into the chapel for an address. At the reformatory about thirty women took the pledge and we had opportunity for personal ministry with individual cases.

For many years the W. C. T. U. has carried on important work along these lines with beneficent results. During the week I called on our dear Mrs. Youmans and lived over with her the old days when we had been associated in platform work. My heart goes out to her in the "shut-in" life of suffering, which has been so strangely allotted her in these last years. Speaking of something which she much desired, she said, "but I've made up my mind to sing the doxology whether I get it or not." That surely is victory and must be acceptable to the Lord. I also made a visit to the police station to inquire into the work of the matron. It is always good to have the hearty indorsement of the officials after such a reform has become well established.

The rest of my trip was divided up between Brantford, Caledonia, Ayr, Guelph, Woodstock, Petrolea, Parkhill and Galt, with from one to three days in a place, in all of which there were incidents of special interest to our work which I must not take space to recount but for which I thank God and take courage.

On the invitation of Professor Bates, principal of the Baptist college in Woodstock, I addressed the students, and at the close invited all who would take the pledge to rise; more than one hundred young men responded and with right hand uplifted, remained standing while I repeated the pledge and prayed with them. I have since forwarded to them my own pledge cards for signature and to finish the work. Everywhere I found enthusiasm about the World's Convention and our great leaders, with pathetic allusions to "the vacant chair" through the death of dear Mrs. Williams, and the tie seemed strengthened between us because she was "ours" and we mourned her loss so deeply.

And now I am home for awhile, but with the work piled up on my desk until I can hardly see over it, and shall have abundant opportunity to practise my own teaching, viz., to serve faithfully day by day, without hurry or worry, "abiding in peace." Yours in best of bonds,

MRS. J. K. BARNEY.

AFIELD IN TEXAS.

DEAR UNION SIGNAL:—One of my childhood memories is of a game in which we marched to the cheering refrain,

"Come, my love, let's go to Texas, Early in the morning," drawn out to the interminable stretch of repetition which accompany such flights of poesy. I little thought then that I should really go some day to that terra incognita, Texas, and that I should enter its precincts, "early in the morning." Nevertheless, since it is the unexpected which always happens, I really opened my eyes in Texas very early on the morning of May 15. My objective point was Houston, but, alas! through failure of the local postoffice to deliver Mrs. Stoddard's letter, the union knew nothing of my proposed visit until I was within the precincts of the city. Then the best that could be done was to get together as many as possible in a parlor meeting; the result of such impromptu effort was a very pleasant hour with three new members, two active and one honorary. I had a little "resting spell" in the home of a transplanted Wisconsin white-ribboner, Mrs. L. Orvis, and then took the evening train for Hillsboro, the town where the convention was to be held.

Hillsboro is one of the smallest and one of the prettiest places I visited in Texas, and when I state that it is "black waxy soil," and that on Thursday and Friday we were

DEAR COMRADES:—Before beginning our question box I would like to enter a word of suggestion regarding the nature of queries that may be addressed to this column. Two or three times of late, members of unions have sent questions which were indeed "special difficulties,"—so special that they could not be answered in a general way, and so difficult, because of their personal and purely local nature, that none but the persons involved could understand them sufficiently to answer with justice to all sides. Kindly omit all matters having the color of personal differences. No one on the staff of THE UNION SIGNAL could possibly decide for a local union whether it "ought to" countenance this action or that, drop this member or refuse to vote in that applicant, since no person outside of the case in question could be qualified to give an opinion. Mother Experience, in her surely pardonable anxiety to hear and answer all, has proved by trial that there are certain questions she cannot and ought not to touch. Let us reserve all our valuable time and space for the consideration of those things that make for peace and righteousness. Keep the family skeletons hidden and unite against our common foe of intemperance.

SPECIAL DIFFICULTIES.

QUESTION.—(1) Are temperance lecturers in the field for the good they may do or the money they can get out of it? (2) Is it just for a lecturer to charge a small union from $20 to $25 and expenses from last place for one address or lecture?

ANSWER.—(1) We have never known any temperance lecturers who did not first count "the good they may do." The Lord Himself declared, "The laborer is worthy of his hire." (2) Compare the $20 or $25 for the good temperance lecturer to the $75 and $100 invariably paid for an ordinary literary lecture, and the inquirer has his own answer.

Q.—(1) Tell us how to "work up" a convention. (2) By whom should the call be made? (3) Who should secure the speaker and pay for her services? (4) Who should make out the program? (5) Should the constitution provide for the traveling expenses of the general officers? (6) Should the convention pay all the expenses outside of entertainment?

A.—(1) Issue a call through the local press and by letters to the Local Unions. (2) By the president of the county or district, according to whether it be a county or district convention. (3) The same authority that calls the convention. (4) Usually the president and secretary, or a program committee may be appointed. (5) No. Let that be arranged for, if necessary, by vote of the union. (6) That depends. No general rule can be made as to expenses.

Q. A certain county superintendent of non-alcoholics in medicine claims that the gold cure comes within the province of her department, and that she should work wholly in that direction. How is it?

A. This must be settled by the county W. C. T. U. The National and its official organ does not interfere with any local, county, district or state organization so long as its members "pay their dues and sign the total abstinence pledge."

Q. Is it proper for an absent member to vote for officers at annual meeting by proxy?

A. It is not parliamentary, but the union may vote upon its propriety, when a special case arises.

Q. Is it right to vote when dues have not been paid?

A. No. None but members are entitled to vote, and members are those who have signed the pledge and paid their dues.

Q. What is the estimated membership of the World's W. C. T. U.?

A. About 250,000.

Q. Is ginger-ale alcoholic?

A. Chemists have pronounced it slightly alcoholic; from two to four per cent.

Q. Can you give a recipe for making cologne without alcohol?

A. Your local druggist can answer this question pharmaceutically. We would answer by recommending in the place of cologne sachet powders, if a perfume is considered a necessity. In our opinion, "no smell is the best of all smells."

With sympathy for all your problems,

Mother Experience.

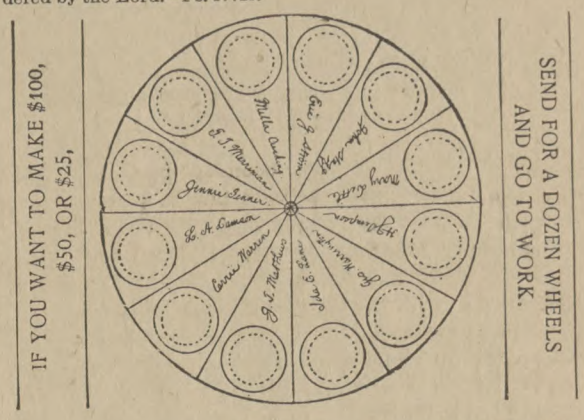
BY MATILDA B. CARSE.

PRAYER.—Order my steps in thy word.—Ps. 99:133.

PROMISE.—The steps of a good man are ordered by the Lord.—Ps. 37:23.



Another holder of Temple Trust Bonds hearing about Mr. Von Scheltema sending his July coupon from Holland to aid the Temple debt, said: "I will be glad to donate mine for the same purpose if you will not mention my name," and handed us his July coupons, which amount to $120. This noble man has in the past been among the most generous contributors to the Temple, and as soon as business improves we expect a large subscription from him.

Mother Thompson, of Hillsboro, O., who has been quite ill from grippe for several weeks has recovered sufficiently to be able to do a little work. She has just sent us her first filled Wheel. "I am so glad," she writes, "that the Master said, 'Blessed are the poor' etc., for surely it is a heavy cross to carry, when one so longs to do large things for the House Beautiful and can't." Mrs. E. J. Corday, Mahaska, Kan., another aged saint, sends a Wheel she has filled. She writes: "May the blessed Temple arise above indebtedness and live a monument to the glory of God and of helpfulness to humanity, which it undoubtedly will."

Among the hundreds of filled Wheels returned one comes from little Robert Moran, Washington, D. C. He is but three years old. Young as he is he secured dimes enough to fill his Wheel. He wrote a full page letter, too, which required another one from his mother to interpret. This wise mother, by encouraging him in such work so early, is forming the plastic wax of his character into that which will become, by and by, the adamantine stone of an unbending principle. He says: "I like to look at the big picture of the Temple because I helped you to build it, didn't I?" This fact he will never forget. Why don't parents understand that they cannot begin to sow good seed too early; and it doesn't consist in lecturing their children to be good, but setting them at work in the interest of some noble cause. Mrs. A. C. Spencer, of Hot Springs, Ark., tells of an L. T. L. boy after our own heart. She says, "He went out at three o'clock and returned at four with his Wheel filled." There is nothing to hinder our L. T. L. boys and girls from accomplishing the same feat if they would only try. Think what it would bring in for the Temple, $250,000. We have secured a new premium for boys who fill Wheels—a handsome pocket knife with two blades. It is made of the best steel and is well worth fifty cents. The new premium for little girls is Dennison's jointed paper doll, beautifully dressed in crêpe paper, worth fifty cents. The educational checker-board and the game of Pixies are almost exhausted and will not hold out much over a month longer, as we cannot find any more of them in the market. Those who desire these games should send in their filled Wheels at once.

Another white-ribboner, Mrs. Anna L. Morse, president of Farmer's Creek, Mich., W. C. T. U., writes: "Call upon all local unions to take up a collection, a penny from each member, at every regular meeting. It would help pay the debt on the Temple. Still another dear white-ribboner, Mrs. M. F. Yorke, Dansville, N. Y., writes: "We discussed the subject of securing money for the Temple at our headquarters, and came to the conclusion that it might easily be raised by getting pledges on condition that the whole amount should be raised before payment should be called for, and that printed blanks for this purpose should be sent to every local union." All these suggestions are admirable if our W. C. T. U. would all fall into line—but alas! they do not. There was never a simpler or easier plan suggested than the Temple Wheel. It embraces all the plans suggested above, and if the women and the L. T. L. would turn all their efforts for the Temple in that direction success would be assured. I again earnestly request any white-ribboners who know of persons of wealth who are interested in temperance to write me giving their names and addresses—this will be a great aid to me in the campaign. I will not divulge the name of the party who gives me the information.

All orders for Temple Wheels and mite-boxes and everything pertaining to the Temple should be addressed to Mrs. Matilda B. Carse, The Temple, Chicago. Send two cent stamp for either the Temple Wheel or mite-box. Money orders and checks should be made out in the name of Mr. G. B. Shaw, treasurer, and sent to our financial secretary, Miss Sara G. Johnson, Room 1111, The Temple, Chicago.

COMMENCEMENT DAY.

BY EVA M. PERRINE.

Who could have named commencement day?
A sage he must have been, and more—
Philosopher, almost a seer,
So much he must have lost the past,
And even the present, in things to come.

I watched in darkened chamber once,
The conflict of disease and life
In a dear friend. At break of day
The dim eyes opened, and the lips,
Half stiff with death, yet murmured clear,
"Commencement day!"

Oh, holy spirits of our dead,
If so be ye can come from heaven
As guardian angels to us here,
Teach our dull hearts to see with thee
In loss, all gain; in sorrow, joy;
And even in the day of death
Commencement day.

Jackson, Mich.

NELLIE'S DEVISING.

BY FAITH TRYON.

"Oh, mamma, I detest the office! To be a W. C. T. U. treasurer according to the Waterville plan is to be a hopeless croak, a boulder in the path of progress and a pleasure neither to herself nor any one else. I've seen two of them in office since I joined the union five years ago. Mrs. Granby, dear old soul, had never known the pleasure in life of spending money except for the severest necessities, and with her careful habit of saving a penny for greater need, she was apt to protest against every expenditure and mourn visibly at every demand upon the treasury. And Miss Carman, who has just resigned, was worse. Her invariable view of almost every bit of aggressive work involving expense was, 'Well, that takes money and I don't see how you are going to do it, for there is not much in the treasury.' The union stands as a suppliant child before a poverty-stricken and sternly economical parent. And, sure enough, one or two enterprises carried out do empty the treasury, and then what's to be done but bemoan our poverty until the next time comes for collecting dues, or possibly a collection at some public meeting we may hold will give us a trifle more. Oh, if I were a conjurer, mother, and could keep pouring out money to carry on some of our splendid plans of work, I'd rather be treasurer than anything else. But to be the growling defender of our pitiful financial stores, when there is ten dollars needed for every one we really have, will wear me out, I know."

Nellie Brighton leaned her head against the invalid mother's knee with a sigh, and stared at the fire in the grate as if that were to help her with a suggestion from its glowing depths. It was "union day," and this patient, shut-in mother and bright, eager daughter, counted it one of their chiefest pleasures every Tuesday to live over the work of the meeting. Mrs. Brighton always felt as if she had had the full benefit of it after Nellie had sat down on the low seat at her side and told her all about it.

"I wonder why they chose you, dear, for treasurer," she said. "You are rather younger than treasurers usually are."

"They said they knew I could easily keep the record after having been bookkeeper for Farnham & Farnham Co. so long, and that I was 'stout and smart and able to get around' and ask those who have to be personally waited upon for their dues. I don't mind all that part at all."

"Just how does the constitution define the duties of the treasurer, Nellie? Is it made incumbent upon her to growl and to hinder demands for money that she holds for the union?"

Nellie speedily laid before her mother the state minutes, opened at the constitution for local unions, and said, "Read it, mother, please. Let's know the worst."

And behold, it had a paragraph all to itself, and this is the way it read:

"It shall be the duty of the treasurer to devise ways and means to increase the funds of the organization. She shall receive and hold the money collected for the union, paying bills on order of the president and secretary, and keeping an exact book account of the same. She shall also forward to the treasurer of the state an amount equal to fifty cents per member annually. She shall report to the union at each business meeting."

"Mother! Does it say all that, really? My first duty then is to conjure to increase the funds,—'devise ways and means!' Well I am sure nobody in the union has ever hinted that that was the chief duty of the treasurer. It has been thought that if she faithfully sought and gathered in all the dues that she was to be highly commended. But suppose I were to take up the work—I did not agree to to-day, I only said 'I'd think about it'—could I, how could I 'devise' a full treasury, if using and spending money went on as it ought in the fulfilling of some of our best plans?"

"We will both think while you are getting tea, and after that we'll see what sort of devisers we are. Only remember the wealth of this world is the Lord's and He wants it used for Him."

At the next union meeting this was Nellie's definite answer: "I will accept the office of treasurer if the work of devising means to fill the treasury and is understood to be a part of my work, and the carrying out of accepted plans a part of the work of the union."

The delighted surprise of some earnest members who began to believe that now certain cherished schemes would come to fulfillment was in funny contrast to the determined doubt of others who "did not see where the money was to come from. They were always needing but never having much."

"We read this in the constitution," said Nellie, "and mother straightway went to helping me devise, and here are the plans we have already thought of:

"1. That we take up proportionate and systematic giving, each one of us signing a card saying that we will give each week a certain amount, stated on the card, to our W. C. T. U. treasury. Mother and I will each agree to give five cents a week. It seems very small, but we hope before the year is out we may be able to increase it. If each of us will think it over and decide what we can give, and systematically give it, that will be the first right plan.

"2. That we solicit a regular list of contributing friends who will sign an agreement to pay a stated amount at regular intervals to support this work. We have scores of friends in town, who would, I believe, help this way, but engrossed with business or other cares, they will not help much except by giving money.

"3. Hold public temperance meetings once a month, and tell them what we are trying to do, what we need money for, and ask for a generous collection in the baskets.

"Then there are excellent temperance entertainment programs published, such as 'Mother Goose and Her Temperance Family' and 'The Old Woman Who Lived in a Shoe.' They are a good deal of work, but we can find people to do it from love of the cause, and once in a quarter we might have such a pay entertainment, selling tickets and having reserved seats, and give value received to the audience. That is one thing in which children can help. Demorest contests, too, will bring in funds, as well as do good to all concerned.

"Let the literature fund be gathered, used and reported by the literature superintendent as it has been, and when some special project warrants, like establishing our reading room, let some one undertake in the same way to solicit for it. We ought not to hesitate or be ashamed to ask people to help support and carry on temperance work. They will most of them do it more cheerfully than we might think."

"I move we accept with thanks and adopt every one of these plans," said Mrs. Spencer. "She has not said a word about strawberry festivals or oyster socials, and every proposition appeals to the conscience and temperance sentiment of people, and so helps to upbuild our work."

"I second the motion," said Mrs. Harper. "We need to cultivate a larger faith that God wants us to have and to spend money, and that if we do our part towards it, we may be sure our prayers for money will be bountifully answered."

This motion being carried, the president said: "Now, Miss Nellie, I knew we had selected a good treasurer a week ago, but I did not realize how much a treasurer might be good for. And as a part of your treasurer's report every week, tell us the success and progress of any effort then on hand to gather funds, and tell us of new measures devised as fast as you can think of them. Rubbing up our wits on the subject, I think we can all help to devise ways and means, too, if we try."

"I am just going to enjoy being treasurer, mother," said Nellie, as an hour later she again sat at her mother's side, her bright face aglow. "Oh, there are lots of ways, and I am sure the union will take hold splendidly to help carry them out. I don't see how any union treasurer can bear to simply settle down and croak against spending the few dollars that the dues amount to for fear the treasury will get empty. It ought to be emptied continually, and as often and as systematically filled, and by help of your bright schemes, mother, this treasurer will try to be a help to the union, instead of a brake to subdue its speed. I'll do my best to magnify and fill my office."

"IN THE BLOOD."

BY CECIL H. C. HOWARD.

There is a very beautiful tale, used by some of our professional elocutionists, entitled "In the Blood." The heroine, a drunkard's daughter, when she is a child, hears the landlord say that her people are a "sorry lot" and that "it is in the blood." She is so impressed by the fact stated by the landlord that when her mother dies shortly after, leaving a baby brother, she determines that the baby at least shall be free from the taint, and praying for guidance, she takes him to the house of a clergyman and leaves him on the door-step. In her childish way she rightly thinks there could be no better place for the boy to be brought up. Years intervene; she keeps track of her baby brother for a time, but having to leave the town is separated from him. Returning to her native city after she has grown up she finds that her brother has been educated as a clergyman and hears him preach his first sermon. Retiring in her disposition and not wishing to make herself known, she was going to leave the place. But before she could go her brother found her out and their meeting was of course a most affecting one.

There are a large number of young men in the United States who are inheritors, in some degree, of an appetite craving liquor. We all know them or of them; the question is not what they are but what shall we try to make them?

"Oh," says one, "it's in the blood," and quietly the hands are folded without anything being done to save them. Thus, practically they are given up by all except the parents, and there, where you would expect nothing but keenest sympathy from both father and mother, it is too often the mother alone gives it.

Possessed of fine intuition the mother holds her son oftener than the father does.

You say they are all alike, these young fellows? No; I fancy you would find them far rougher and more dissolute were it not for the working of a mother's influence; a mother's prayers. There is something, then, for the other women of the land to do in these cases; those who are not mothers of boys who inherit this love for liquor. I mean you who have no children to bless your homes. Are you going to let your neighbors' sons go to ruin for lack of an effort on your part? Does Mrs. A's son, Jack, play upon some musical instrument? Invite him to call and play for you. Interest yourself in his talent or talents. Make him feel that there is some one in the world beside his mother who is helping him to be somebody. Indirectly, keep him one evening less in some evil resort. Get your neighbors interested, and thus you who have no children can help the home work of those mothers whose boys need more time than she can give them to the exclusion of her younger children.

It is not the sons of ignorant parents of whom I speak, but boys who have had every advantage in parentage, many of whom are nearly, if not quite, the "black sheep" of their respective families. These boys can be saved. They may be led up and out of their bondage, and in the kindly interest taken in them by the women who have none of their own for whom to care learn the value of a higher life and the baseness of that which they have followed. If each one of you had one of these boys to look after have you any idea how many homes would be made happier?

We are dealing with a question of heredity, one of the phases of the W. C. T. U. work. These young men are victims of an inherited appetite. If you educate these boys to higher things, keep them from a chance of getting, or wanting to satisfy this abnormal appetite, there will undoubtedly come a time when their principles will be so firmly fixed they will not need just such care. They are now encased in a pessimistic armor; all the world is against them and they are against all the world.

As an illustration of this pessimism, let me tell you of an experience of my own. I was in company with a good member of the W. C. T. U. the other day, who has no children, when she asked one of these young men, of whom I write, if he would not play an accompaniment at an entertainment soon to be given. The young fellow was undoubtedly pleased at the compliment, but, it being given by the "W. C. T. U." he hesitated. At this juncture his father spoke up and said, "He don't want to do it for fear it would please his mother and myself too much!" Immediately the face of the son became hardened and he refused. The moral is too plain to need any comment. Do you wonder the boys are pessimistic and hardened? That they feel that every one is bent upon predicting evil for them? Think it over well, and see if you do not arrive at the conclusion that this might be a phase of the department of heredity in the W. C. T. U.; that yours may be the pleasure of proving that it is not "in the blood" so deeply that it cannot be eradicated, for "time and patience turn the mulberry leaf to satin."

A SONG OF SUMMER.

Summer's here, summer's here,
Happy birds are singing
Loud and clear, loud and clear,
Free from every care.
Now appear, now appear
Sweetest flowers springing,
And the gentle breezes waft
Their fragrance through the air.

Chatter on, chatter on,
Merry little streamlet,
Gush along, gush along,
On thy sparkling way;
Bringing cheer, bringing cheer
To each little floweret
As it lifts its tiny head
And greets this summer day.

Welcome here, welcome here
Buttercups and daisies,
Far and near, far and near,
Dotting mead and plain;
Till we're lost, till we're lost,
In thy tangling mazes,
Joyously bewildered in
Thy fairy-like domain.

TOMMY BROWN; IS HE IN YOUR SCHOOL?

"What is your name?" asked the teacher.

"Tommy Brown, ma'am," answered the boy.

He was a pathetic little figure with a thin face, large hollow eyes and pale cheeks that plainly told of insufficient food. He wore a suit of clothes evidently made for some one else. They were patched in places with cloth of different colors. His shoes were old, his hair cut square in the neck, in the unpractised manner that women sometimes cut boys' hair. It was a bitter cold day yet he wore no overcoat and his bare hands were red with the cold.

"How old are you, Tommy?"

"Nine year old come next April. I've learnt to read at home and I can cipher a little."

"Well, it's time for you to begin school. Why have you never come before?"

The boy fumbled with a cap in his hands but did not reply at once. It was a ragged cap with frayed edges and the original color of the fabric no man could tell.

Presently he said, "I never went to school 'cause—'cause—well, mother takes in washin' and she couldn't spare me. But Sissy is big enough now to help; an' she minds the baby besides."

It was not quite time for school to begin. All around the teacher and the new scholar stood the boys that belonged in the room. While he was making his confused explanation some of the boys laughed, and one of them called out, "Say, Tommy, where are your cuffs and collar?" And another said, "You must sleep in the rag bag at night, by the looks of your clothes!" Before the teacher could quiet them another boy had volunteered the information that the father of the new boy was "old Si Brown, who was always as drunk as a fiddler."

The poor child looked round at his tormentors like a hunted thing. Then, before the teacher could detain him, with a suppressed cry of misery he ran out of the room, out of the building, down the street, and was seen no more.

The teacher went to her duties with a heavy heart. All day long the child's pitiful face haunted her. At night it came to her dreams. She could not rid herself of the memory of it. After a little trouble she found the place where he lived, and two of the W. C. T. U. women went to visit him.

It was a dilapidated house, in a street near the river. When they first entered they could scarcely discern objects, the room was so filled with the steam of the soapsuds. There were two windows in the room, but a tall building shut out the light. It was a gloomy day, too, with gray, lowering clouds that forbade even the memory of sunshine.

A woman stood before a wash-tub. When they entered she wiped her hands on her apron and came forward to meet them.

Once she had been pretty. But the color and light had all gone out of her face, leaving only sharpened outlines and haggardness of expression.

She asked them to sit down in a listless, uninterested manner; then, taking a chair herself, she said:

"Sissy, give me the baby."

A little girl came forward from a dark corner of the room carrying a baby, that she laid in its mother's lap—a lean and sickly-looking baby, with the same hollow eyes that little Tommy had.

"Your baby doesn't look strong," said one of the ladies.

"No, ma'am, she isn't very strong. I have to work hard, and I expect it affects her," and the woman coughed, as she held the child to her breast.

"Where is your little boy, Tommy?" asked one of the visitors.

"He is there in the trundle-bed," replied the mother.

"Is he sick?"

"Yes'm; and the doctor thinks he isn't going to get well." At this, the mother laid her head on the baby's face, while the tears ran down her thin and faded cheeks.

"What is the matter with him?"

"He was never very strong, and he's had to work too hard carrying water and helping me to lift the wash tubs and things like that."

"Is his father dead?"

"No, he ain't dead. He used to be a good workman, and we had a comfortable home. But all he earns now—and that ain't much—goes for drink."

She took the child off her shoulder. It was asleep now, and she laid it across her lap.

"Tommy has been crazy to go to school. I never could spare him till this winter. He thought if he could get a little education he'd be able to help take care of Sissy and me. He knew he'd never be able to work hard. So I fixed up his clothes as well as I could and last week he started. I was afraid the boys would laugh at him but he thought he could stand it if they did. I stood in the door and watched him going. I can never forget how the little fellow looked," she continued, the tears streaming down her face. "His patched up clothes, his old shoes, his ragged cap, his poor little anxious look. He turned round to me as he left the yard and said, 'Don't you worry, mother; I ain't going to mind what the boys say.' But he did mind. It wasn't an hour till he was back again. I believe the child's heart was just broke. I thought mine was broke years ago. If it was it was broke over again that day. I can stand most anything myself, but, oh, I can't bear to see my children suffer!" Here she broke down in a fit of convulsive weeping. The little girl came up to her quietly and stole a thin little arm round her mother's neck. "Don't cry, mother," she whispered, "don't cry."

The woman made an effort to check her tears and wiped her eyes. As soon as she could speak with any degree of calmness she continued:

"Poor little Tommy cried all day; I couldn't comfort him. He said it wasn't any use trying to do anything. Folks would only laugh at him for being a drunkard's little boy. I tried to comfort him before his father came home. I told him his father would be mad if he saw him crying. But it wasn't any use. Seemed like he couldn't stop. His father came and saw him. He wouldn't have done it if he hadn't been drinking. He ain't a bad man when he is sober. I hate to tell it, but he whipped Tommy. And the child fell and struck his head. I suppose he would have been sick anyway. But, oh, my poor little boy! My sick, suffering child!" she cried. "How can they let men sell a thing that makes the innocent suffer so?"

A little voice spoke from the bed. One of the ladies went to him. There he lay, poor, little defenseless victim. He lived in a Christian land, in a country that takes great care to pass laws to protect sheep, and diligently legislates over its game. Would that children were as precious as brutes and birds!

His face was flushed, and the hollowed eyes were bright. There was a long purple mark on his temple. He put up one little wasted hand to cover it, while he said:

"Father wouldn't have done it if he hadn't been drinking." Then in his queer, piping voice, weak with sickness, he half whispered: "I'm glad I'm going to die. I'm too weak ever to help mother, anyhow. In heaven the angels ain't going to call me a drunkard's child, and make fun of my clothes."

He turned his head feebly on his pillow, and then said, in a lower tone: "Some day—they ain't going—to let the saloons—keep open. But I'm afraid—poor father—will be dead—before then." Then he shut his eyes from weariness.

The next morning the sun shone in on the dead face of little Tommy.

He is only one of many. There are hundreds like him in tenement houses, slums and alleys in town and country. Poor little martyrs, whose tears fall almost unheeded; who are cold and hungry in this Christian land; whose hearts and bodies are bruised with unkindness. And yet, "the liquor traffic is a legitimate business and must not be interfered with," so it is said.

Over eighteen hundred years ago it was also said:

"Whoso shall offend one of these little ones, which believe in me, it were better for him that a millstone were hanged about his neck, and that he were drowned in the depths of the sea."—Selected.

WHAT I HAVE LEARNED ABOUT THE WORLD'S PETITION.

BY RATHBUN L. SEAMAN.

[ESSAY NO. 3.]

The great Polyglot Petition was first conceived and circulated twelve years ago by Miss Frances E. Willard while in California. Since that time, through the efforts of herself and numerous colleagues in the W. C. T. U., it has traveled in "every land" receiving one and one-half million signatures in nearly every known chirography and language, besides six million attestations, making a grand total of seven and one-half million indorsements by men and women of all religious beliefs and in every condition of life, but each making the same appeal to the world for the protection of their homes by the prohibition of the drink and opium traffic. Of this almost incomprehensible number of protests against these iniquities, our own country contributes the largest list—771,200 names, Great Britain coming next with 350,000. Gen. Neal Dow, the venerable "father of prohibitory law," has the well-merited honor of heading this long list.

The Polyglot is undoubtedly the largest petition the world has ever witnessed—the Chartist petition for the repeal of the corn laws having held first place heretofore. The attestations to the Polyglot Petition reduced to names and combined with the actual signatures arranged in a continuous line would reach a distance of three hundred and fifty-five miles, or the length of Illinois.

The object of the Petition is to vividly impress the various governments with the importance of prohibitive legislation against the liquor and opium traffic and legalized social vices—the despoiling factors in our homes. If it succeeds in this it will have accomplished a greater victory than the concession of the great Magna Charta. Liquor is a much greater tyrant to overcome than was feeble King John. The Magna Charta accomplished the personal liberty of certain classes of the people; the principles of the Polyglot Petition secured will accomplish the moral liberty of the world and insure the purity of the home. Moral is of more importance than personal liberty, for without that essential we cannot enter the kingdom of heaven. Moral liberty is salvation of the soul; personal liberty is freedom of the body.

THE BICYCLE AS A REFORMER.

Despite the fact that, like many other things good and helpful in themselves, cycling has its abuses, we welcome the bicycle as a reformer. Especially is it, we believe, destined to be no insignificant factor in the development of the "new woman." If this is the "woman's century" then the bicycle may be regarded as the symbol of nineteenth century evolution. "It is," says Miss Willard, "the harbinger of health and happiness," and her advice to women in the light of her own experience in learning to ride is, "go and do likewise." Anything which brings or points the way to health and happiness for the "better half" of the human race is preëminently a reformer, and the "steel steed" is bound from its very nature to give a decided uplift to womankind in directions physical, mental and moral.

One of the more immediate results of its influence as a reformer—and the only one we shall touch upon here—is seen in the matter of dress. The advent of the wheel and its rapid rise to the top wave of popularity is doing more to "emancipate" our sex from the thralldom of dress than half a century of agitation by dress reformers through platform and press could hope to do. It is giving an impetus to dress reform such as Mrs. Stanton, Mrs. Bloomer and other pioneers along this line never dreamed of, and one of the reasons why the bicycle is harbinger of health and happiness for woman is that besides outdoor exercise it demands hygienic dress. In return for the delightful sensation which is the result of the combination of fresh air and rapid motion, cycling claims from its devotees the full and free play of every muscle, and hence a style of dress exactly upon the lines dress reformers have been contending for all along, a style the hygienic features of which will, once woman has experienced the exhilarating sense of freedom which comes from their adoption, be gradually introduced into the ordinary costume.

But while cycling calls for a style of dress at present peculiarly its own, it does not call for extremes in costume that run into absurdity and even pass the border line of decency. For the bicycle as for the street, the house and "society" there is a proper and an improper costume, and it is possible to carry the bicycle suit, as it is a party dress, a dinner dress, or a bathing costume to such an extreme of immodesty, as shall make it actually immoral. And THE UNION SIGNAL wishes to be known as taking as decided a stand against immodesty and indecency of dress on the wheel as immodesty and indecency of dress at an evening party, a "swell" dinner or public bathing place. The skirtless bloomer, or worse still, the skirtless knickerbocker, and even the too abbreviated skirt will be shunned by women cyclists whose womanly instincts have not been in a measure brushed away by familiarity with the ultra décolleté costume which fashion decrees for ball-room and other "full-dress" occasions.

If Dr. Parkhurst or anybody else looking for the "Andromaniac," wants to write up the "masculine woman," he will find her not among the ranks of the reformers, not among the women who "want to vote," but among the female cyclers whose attire is so "mannish" as to give rise to insulting innendoes in the city council and sarcastic allusions in the Christian pulpit. This is a kind of "dress reform" all womanly women will frown upon as they frown upon such Sabbath desecration as Chicago witnessed on May 26, and which prompted the timely article by Mr. Crafts in this issue, "The Increase of Sabbath-Breaking among Women." Indeed, is there not a relation between the two? The woman cycler whose dress on the wheel renders her undistinguishable from a man is the woman we expect to find joining in a Sunday parade, participating in and betting on the public race.

A morning paper remarks that "modesty is fast giving way to expediency" in the bicycle costume and doubtless all objectors will be met with this plea of expediency. But as the trainers say that the skirtless costume is not essential either to ease or safety in riding this excuse falls to the ground. A costume which appears womanly and modest off as well as on the wheel, which is not out of place when the rider dismounts to walk the street or enter a restaurant for lunch is, the teachers say, as well adapted to ordinary cycling as the more pronounced masculine attire—and a woman should never, if the wheel is to be "harbinger of health and happiness," venture upon extra-ordinary riding either as to speed or distance.

Some women there always are who will go to extremes in fads and fashions in everything, and it must be remembered that while hundreds, perhaps, of women cyclists may be found wearing the immodest dress and defying God's law and man's with regard to the Sabbath, there are thousands—and their number is increasing every day—who under all circumstances will ride as they walk, "circumspectly." The former class must not on any account be mistaken for the "new woman." The new woman even as a reformer—as cyclist or politician—does not strive after the mannish. Indeed, in the matter both of dress and of government, she thinks she can teach her brother many things, and her "ways," though new, are eminently womanly.

But while it is quite consistent for THE UNION SIGNAL to denounce the immodest bicycle costume, we must say that we see a great deal of inconsistency in its condemnation by men and women who do not question the propriety of the undress of the ball-room and bathing costume. Why, it may well be asked, should the skirtless and be-trousered bicycle girl be a target for aldermanic jokes and ministerial satire, and the much more indecent bathing costumes call forth no public protest from either? Why so much stir about the cycling costume when the immodest exposure of the ball-room, which recently so shocked Prince Nazrullah Khan, the guest of English royalty, continues to be encouraged by "society"? The low-cut, sleeveless dress has not even the excuse of "expediency;" it is an exposure of the female form which is not only indecent but unhealthful, and involves actual danger to life. As between the trousers and the décolleté dress, we think the modestly-inclined woman would take the trousers every time, and as for the claims of cycling and dancing—they are not to be compared!

A MEMORABLE INCIDENT.

A curious incident has recently occurred which proves that the ice still lingers in the valleys although the sunshine has melted it from the plains: Some weeks ago Miss Willard and Lady Henry Somerset were invited to address a temperance mass-meeting to be held near London on the occasion of the Wesleyan district synod. They agreed that one of them would be present on the occasion, when behold a letter was received from the progressive minded pastor of the church in which the meetings were to convene, stating his great embarrassment in view of the fact that the president of the synod, who is also president of the Wesleyan General Conference of England, on ascertaining that ladies were to speak, had stated that this was not according to rule and could not be permitted, since ministers alone were entitled to speak on such an occasion.

This ruling surprised the temperance people of the locality and they were at their wits' end to know what should be done, when, by withdrawing, the ladies relieved the embarrassment. But Lady Henry Somerset, in an address in City Road Chapel—that Mecca of the temperance people of the world—stated the facts in the case and exhorted the laity of the Wesleyan church to be on the alert because this was a step quite unworthy of the descendants of that great man who was the founder of their communion, and who had replied to a young woman of "gifts and graces," who sought his advice as to whether she should preach, by saying that he strongly favored her doing so, only she must be careful not to draw away the congregations of the young men by holding meetings in their neighborhood at the same hour. Lady Henry said that in these days when the masses have so largely forsaken the church, and the laity were growingly out of touch with the ecclesiastical department, it was a thousand pities to debar women from speaking at reform and philanthropic meetings held in connection with the meetings of the ministers. She said the Wesleyan church in the United States was far in advance of theirs, for it freely invited women representing home and foreign temperance and educational work to speak before its conference of ministers, and to participate in the great evening gatherings where these subjects were discussed. She referred to the fact that Miss Willard was invited to welcome one of the largest conferences of Wesleyans in the United States when it met in her home town of Evanston, a suburb of Chicago. She asked what Wesleyan man of the ministry or laity had done as much for the temperance cause as this Methodist woman. And the crowded audience of London Wesleyans applauded her words to the echo and cried out "shame" when she spoke of the action to which we have referred.

Continuing her argument, Lady Somerset declared that thus far there were three places and three only for women inside the church: First, she was freely permitted to collect money; second, she was urgently desired to be present to make up the audience, of which she was the principal factor the world over; third, she was allowed to come in at the rear door and scrub up the place. But it was well to have it thoroughly understood that she proposed to enter the front door, and that before very long. She intended to be in every department of the church's life, a recognized factor on the same plane as her "brother man."

It was a memorable incident, the presence of this most progressive member of the English nobility standing up in Wesley's pulpit and uttering sentiments wholly in keeping with his principles and practice, while the audience was so warmly sympathetic with the positions taken that her words and their action amounted to a practical protest from Wesley's own pulpit against the outworn intolerance of good men who linger late on the widening theater of human events and fancy that they can brush back with a broom the tide of justice for women that is now moving onward with resistless power in every nation.

The honored president of the conference is said not to be a teetotaler, and it is declared that John Wesley's old chapel refuses to hold a meeting for the local veto. These are strange tidings from the household of that great man who a hundred years before his time denounced slavery and the liquor traffic as the two curses of the world.

With these facts in view, we think it no more than fair to say that, so far as we can learn, the Congregational body deserves recognition as leading the van of the temperance reform in England. At its annual meeting last week the Congregational Total Abstinence Union unanimously indorsed the Polyglot Petition, and its leading members are in hearty accord with the progressive features of the temperance cause.

THE PRIVATE MORALS OF PUBLIC OFFICIALS.

When Jethro wished Moses to relieve himself of some of his burdens, and associate others with him in his work of judging Israel, he thus indicated the kind of men to be chosen: "Able men, such as fear God; men of truth, hating unjust gain." And Moses, who still sustains an enviable reputation as one of the greatest of ancient legislators, saw nothing to criticise in this enumeration of the qualifications of rulers, but acted upon the advice. In this day, however, when we have grown to be much wiser than Solomon, these qualifications are no longer universally recognized as necessary in a public official. We have practically substituted instead an understanding of the tariff, silver and other financial questions. Our success in finding candidates who possess these latter qualifications does not seem to be all that we could desire, but they are the candidates that the average American voter is seeking with a zeal worthy of a better cause.

A short time ago, some of the leading papers of the country bitterly attacked a clergyman who had repeated accusations against the character of one of our highest officials, not on the ground that such accusations were false, though they were denied, but simply and solely upon the plea that the public acts of public officials were all with which the people had any right to concern themselves, and that any one who undertook to criticise the private morals of any officer, from the President down, meddled with something which was none of his business. We have no names to mention, no specific charges to make, but it is a fact beyond dispute that, as has been the case in the past, so in the present, some of our high officials are men whose private lives are outrageously immoral. So far from this being a matter with which the people of the nation at large have nothing to do, we maintain that they have everything to do with it, and that the denial of their right to keep a watch over the morals of their officers is one of the most alarming signs of the times.

No nation ever rose to power but by the one stairway of rigid adherence to the claims of the moral law, and no nation ever went down in ruin except through the wide gateway and broad road of sin. The most serious mistakes of statecraft, of foreign policy, the grossest mismanagement of the financial and commercial interests, have all been recovered from, but the nation that becomes lax in its observance of the eternal laws of right is on the road to sure and swift destruction. For this reason there is no more pernicious doctrine than that the private morals of a public official are a matter of indifference so long as he has the qualifications which fit him for the immediate duties of his office.

To begin with, the man of immoral habits, whatever line his wrong doing may take, will suffer mental and physical deterioration. "God is not mocked," and he who violates the laws of his nature will pay the penalty in every part of his being. The judge on the bench who poisons his physical frame with alcohol or tobacco, or undermines it with the vices of the debauchee, will just as surely cloud his intellectual faculties, will judge less justly and will fail by so much of attaining in service to mankind and in the esteem of his fellows what his natural gifts would have enabled him to attain. The legislator and the executive will lose in clearness of intellect, in strength of will, and immeasurably in the moral power which comes of the knowledge that one's life is pure, if he yield to any violation of the moral law. Other things being equal, the morally upright man will tower as a giant above the morally corrupt man, and other things not being equal, the man who is above reproach in his private life will be the superior of the corrupt man even though not his intellectual equal.

But aside from all this, once let it be admitted and acted upon as a truth that the private character of officials is a matter of indifference, and we have decreed destruction to the moral rectitude of the nation. In spite of all fine-spun theories to the contrary, the unalterable fact remains that character is molded always and only by character. The thief may preach honesty with a rhetoric as choice and a statement of truth as forcible as those of the greatest saint, the influence of his words will be like the chaff of the summer threshing floor in the presence of his known character. The libertine may set forth the beauty of purity in words which an angel cannot improve, his unchanging influence will be for the corruption of society. The effect of what men do and say is determined and forever will be determined by what they are. The greater therefore are the gifts of a man, the more dangerous and blighting is his influence if he be morally unsound.

Dishonesty and immorality are not likely to prove attractive to the young when seen behind prison bars or among the pariahs of society. It is when they are attired in the robes of wealth and occupy honored places in society that their real character is obscured. Let the youth of the country understand that the people have "no business" with the private character of public officials, that if God has bestowed upon a man great intellectual gifts to enable him to serve his time and country, the high places of distinction will be open to him even though in character he is on a level with the lowest vagabond that walks the streets, the barriers will be broken down and we shall be submerged, as many a nation has been before us, in iniquity and vice. No, we can pardon in our officials mistakes in the treatment of foreign nations, we can overlook some confusion of thought on the tariff or the subject of coinage, and trust that the nation will be able to survive while we are working out these problems, but as we value our continued existence as a free and independent people, we cannot forgive any deviation on the part of our rulers from the straight and narrow path of absolute moral rectitude.

To our mind the fact that the contrary view is tolerated at all is a striking exemplification of the wisdom of leaving one-half the human race to manage this part of our common affairs alone. We are not among those who claim that women are angels or that woman's ballot will right all the wrongs of earth. We do feel assured that no man or woman of known immoral character will ever be elected to any office by the votes of women. Woman is doubtless needed in the home, and no power on earth can turn her out of it; but she is needed quite as much in the world of politics, where the influences are set in motion which work for the upbuilding or the destruction of the home. Her long absence from that sphere has allowed the destructive influence to get sadly in the ascendency.

A BLOW IN THE DARK.

There lies before us a letter written by one of our faithful army of women who never lay down the arms they have taken up against the liquor traffic. The letter is but one more proof of the innate deceitfulness of every phase of this evil. The old Gospel rings true every time, and when it calls wine "the mocker," we know by a wide experience of watchfulness how this mockery abounds on every side, striving to blind, to pervert, to ensnare. Right into our own columns the deceiver has endeavored to put his crafty feet, but this time has overstepped himself.

In another part of our paper a column is conducted for the help and benefit of local unions. In this column appears from week to week a number of questions and answers, entitled "Special Difficulties." Recently this question was received: "I wish to ask if it is a usual custom for local unions to cut the membership of all women who happen to be related to men who are druggists, and are keeping liquors as part of their drug stock?" Our "Mother Experience" discovered no intent of ill in the plainly stated question, and answered frankly, "No, indeed. Such a spirit is not of Christ. We deal with individuals, not their environment, except as they may better it. If a union has been guilty of such an act—supposing the white-ribboner 'related' to a druggist to be herself stanch and loyal to her principles—it had better disband than continue in such a spirit. When human beings begin to sift in that way, they in turn shall be sifted and fall."

No hint of being entrapped occurred to us until this question and answer appeared later, "published by request," in a liquor paper. We have since learned the facts in the case, and, without entering into personalities, wish to call attention to the worthy stand of some brave women. Here is the story in brief: A local W. C. T. U. was organized some months ago, and in drawing up its constitution framed it because of a local condition of affairs which the union had to face, viz., drug stores doing an illegitimate business in intoxicants, while their proprietors were countenanced in good society, and were either members of Christian churches or contributed to the support of these churches through their families.

With most admirable foresight these white-ribboners framed a resolution that no one who was "knowingly and willingly living on the profits of the drug business as carried on in this community" should be received as members of the local union.

The test came, and one applied for admission who "happened to be related" to a man "connected" with a drug-store, over whose counter more than medicines were dispensed, who himself had received rebuke from church authority for handling the unclean thing, but who talked temperance and posed as its friend. The union stood by its resolution, some one sent the above query to Mother Experience, and later her answer was used as a club in the "enemy's" hand.

But some one was not very wise, since Mother Experience's answer stands the test. "We deal with individuals, not their environment, except as they may better it." Many a union has within its ranks women related to drinkers, liquor-selling druggists, liquor voters, but the protest of those women is known and the recreant members of their families have no opportunity to pose to the union as sympathizing friends while at the same time they carry on their infamous business.

Our sisters' resolution was exactly right. It was in the spirit of Him who commands eternal separateness from the unclean thing, and while we regret that any word in THE UNION SIGNAL could ever have been used to wound our own, "out of the eater came forth meat," for we are sure many will look to their own ranks and guard them more carefully than ever from the in-gliding of the serpent.

A TWO WEEKS' HOLIDAY.

We wish to announce to our readers thus early in the season that, according to a decision of the W. T. P. A. board last summer, THE UNION SIGNAL will take a holiday the last two weeks of July. The resolution to this effect was offered by Miss Willard and reads as follows:

"Resolved, that we revert to the custom introduced when THE UNION SIGNAL was founded, and continued many years, and, in the interests of the employés and our scattered constituency, remit its publication each year during two weeks of the midsummer."

We have chosen the last two weeks of July, believing that is the time when the majority of our readers, who take a vacation, are away from home and consequently will miss their paper the least. It is a time when summer meetings, Chautauquas, picnics and tropical heat abound, and when people are consequently less inclined to read.

We are sure that our generous subscribers will gladly accord us this bit of a holiday. A discontinuance of this kind is the only way in which our entire force can secure a complete vacation and gain the health and strength so essential to the exhaustive life of a great city. Editors, proofreaders, compositors and every one connected with the paper will hie away on the first train or boat to a cool, quiet spot and spend the two weeks conscientiously seeking renewed ability for their various arduous tasks.

The last issue before the holiday, July 11, will be the special World's W. C. T. U. number, containing full accounts of the great London meeting and the "doings" of the white ribbon party on the continent. We will endeavor to furnish enough valuable reading matter in this number for the odd moments of the entire holiday.

AT the regular quarterly meeting of the National Temperance Hospital, held in the Temperance Temple in May, Mrs. M. E. Kline resigned as president of the board and Mrs. J. B. Hobbs was elected to that position. All matters relating to the management of the hospital should be addressed to Mrs. Hobbs, whose residence is 384 N. La Salle Ave., Chicago.

It was Jonathan Edwards who quaintly said, "The soul of a true Christian appears like such a little white flower, as we see in the spring of the year, low and humble, opening its bosom to receive the pleasant beams of the sun's glory; rejoicing, as it were, in a calm rapture, diffusing around a sweet fragrance; standing peacefully and lovingly in the midst of other flowers round about, all in like manner opening their bosoms to drink in the light of the sun."

Miss Blackburn, the English novelist and lecturer, tells the following good story: "A clever girl of the reign of Queen Anne wrote a novel and submitted it to her mother, who, upon reading it, handed the manuscript back to her daughter saying, 'My dear, you must burn it at once; it is so clever that men would be envious.' Happily," remarks Miss Blackburn, "we have changed all that; and men nowadays are generous in according honor to whom honor is due."

"I am just learning slowly, but trying to learn surely, that I can leave all the moment's duties to Him if I give my whole self, eye, ear and heart to be kept for His service. Oh, the blessedness of His upholding, the faithfulness of His keeping!" were the words of our flower mission saint. I am sure that no one ever learned more truly the heavenliness of complete consecration than did Jennie Casseday, in the refinement of suffering and self-forgetfulness.

The Lima, O., Woman Suffrage Society has an excellent method whereby its meetings are made profitable to the members. Practical questions are announced and published in the local papers previous to the meeting, at which they are taken up, answered and discussed. Some of the questions for a recent meeting were the following: According to the statutes of Ohio, who is the head of the family? Who is the guardian of a child? Can a father make a will saying who shall have the bringing up of his child, which at his death is not born? What is the age of consent in Ohio? What state of the Union has the highest age of consent? What the lowest?

We must look on life as a table spread by the hand of our beneficent Father at which all things of which we make or take shall work together for good if we but recognize the heavenly host as the giver of all gifts. We should not like to partake separately of the ingredients of any dish on any table, they would be neither grateful to the taste or satisfactory to the digestion, but "all these things" work together for good and if we have a wise thoughtfulness we shall all realize sooner or later that it is the working together of all things, that which was pleasant and that which was not; that which seemed fortunate and that which seemed failure.

Sleep, according to the London Lancet, is a greater mystery than insomnia. It is more wonderful that we sleep so well than that we are occasionally wakeful. It would be well for most people in the intensive days in which we live, to devote eight hours to the cultivation of the mood and act of sleep, and to resist the domination of all habits and fashions that are inconsistent with this purpose.

Here is a most significant statement of the physical strain involved in high speeds: "The exaction that modern railroad speed makes on the physical stamina of railroad men is demonstrated in the fact that seven engineers are required to take the 'Chicago Flier' out and seven back. The running time between New York and Chicago is twenty-four hours, and the average speed is forty-eight miles an hour. Each engineer and engine runs three hours. Machine and man return with a slow train to their starting point to relieve the strain on both. Then the engineer is given forty hours' rest before he goes on the 'Flier' again. This rest is absolute, no work of any kind being required of the engineer." Would that the men and women who are pushing forward in their zeal for God and humanity would take to themselves wisdom from the wise engineer with his engine. A machine and man must have relief for "the strain on both." Of what infinitely greater value than that wonderful, panting, flying "iron horse" are the bodies that are consumed and broken by the over-zealous spirit within. Our own W. C. T. U. ranks might not have had so many premature depletions had our blessed martyrs taken time to "relieve the strain" by absolute rest.

WHAT IS BEING DONE IN BRITISH COLUMBIA.

Although British Columbia is one of the youngest and smallest (from a W. C. T. U. point of view) of the Provinces of the Dominion of Canada, having only seven unions in its borders with a membership of five hundred, it is working with all the sanguine energy of youth and has already shown results of which the Dominion may feel proud.

The Victoria correspondent sends an account of a recent effort which is best told in her own words: "The latest victory of the Victoria, British Columbia, W. C. T. U., is the election of its honored president, Mrs. Gordon Grant, as a member of the school board, Mrs. Grant being the first woman to occupy this position. The election was really the work of the Woman's Council, but the W. C. T. U. have been patiently preparing the way for this for the last eleven years. A few months previous, the council had petitioned the government that women might be eligible for the position. Mrs. Colonel Baker, president of the council, and wife of the minister of education, with its other officers worked wisely and well. The petition was granted and when a few months later a trustee was to be elected, Mrs. Grant was nominated by them as a candidate. Two male candidates also announced themselves, but at the last moment one withdrew, in order that it might be a straight issue between the lady and gentleman.

"Such interest in the election of a school trustee was never before manifest. Friends predicted 'failure,' but the women planned well, and, better still, carried out their plans. Nearly every lady voter was visited, and many male voters who were known to favor the movement were also waited on and urged to take the trouble to go to the polls and cast their vote. Hacks and private carriages carried voters to and fro all day, the polling place being thronged from opening till closing, and many had to wait an hour to cast their vote. A wonderful feeling of relief, not to say thankfulness, was experienced by the committee of women who had worked so hard when the election of their candidate by a large majority was announced by the returning officer. The defeated man (who, unfortunately, had never dreamed of defeat by a little woman who weighs less than one hundred pounds), in his speech after the election, had congratulated himself that 'considering he had all the women of the town, together with the heads of the government and educational department, working against him, he had run well.' But he went home 'a sadder but a wiser man.' This is but the beginning, and it is hoped that next January two more women will be elected to fill similar positions."

Mrs. Spofford also kindly gives an account of the

W. C. T. U. REFUGE HOME OF BRITISH COLUMBIA.

"This home, which is located at Victoria, has been in operation for six years, and has done good work. Some time previous to its establishment the need of such a place was greatly felt, and while Col. Woodford was visiting the Province the W. C. T. U. arranged with him to give a lecture for the purpose of raising funds for this object. So favorably was the idea received by the public that $1,774 was contributed; other towns in the Province took hold, and about $2,100 raised. A commodious house was purchased for $3,000, and the home opened.

"It is a Provincial institution, belonging to the Provincial W. C. T. U. The home is managed by a committee of twelve ladies selected from Protestant denominations, but all members of the W. C. T. U. In addition to this, the clergymen of evangelical churches, with six laymening form an advisory board, assist with the work. Two members of the ladies' committee are appointed monthly to have charge of affairs during the month and look after the general interest of the work. Soon after the home was opened it so commended itself to the notice of friends good and true amongst government officials that a yearly grant of $1,000 was given towards its support by the government. Those who have worked to support institutions for public good will understand what this aid means to the women who have this work on their hands. About one hundred girls have been received and helped to a better life. This may seem to those living in large cities and a populous country a very small number, but we feel that in our Province it means a good deal, not all we could wish or hope for, but much for which to thank God, who has permitted us the privilege of this work."

For the last year Miss Bowes has filled the place of "matron," or, as she loves to be called, "home mother," in this Home, and her efforts are untiring to bring the girls under her care up to her standard of useful and Christian womanhood. She reports some very encouraging results. A religious service is held every Friday evening, a Bible class on Sunday afternoon, and the girls attend regular service on Sundays.

When it is remembered that quite recently the W. C. T. U. established a hospital for women in Westminster, the impulse to say, "Well done, British Columbia," is very present.

A NEW COUNTY W. C. T. U.

The need of organizing the county of Hochelaga in the Province of Quebec, has not been felt till quite recently, when the one large union in the district has grown, and, like the avalanche when it meets the sea, has broken off by its own weight and formed many rallying points for work.

There are now seven unions and three Y's in the county and the time for organization seemed to have arrived. A conference of all the unions was called, it was decided to adopt the constitution suggested by the Provincial union, and the following officers were elected until the annual meeting which it was decided to hold in the last week of September. President, Miss Dougall; vice-president, Miss Barber; secretary, Mrs. Cobb; treasurer, Mrs. Strong.

CANADIAN DELEGATION TO WORLD'S W. C. T. U. CONVENTION, TO BE HELD IN LONDON, JUNE 14 TO 21, 1895.

Mrs. Archibald, Halifax, president Maritime W. C. T. U.; Mrs. Sanderson, Danville, president Quebec W. C. T. U.; Miss Scott, Ottawa, editor Woman's Journal; Miss Lillian Phelps, St. Catherines, lecturer and county president; Miss Huff, St. Catherines, Y president; Mrs. McIndoe, Granby; Miss Finley, Montreal; Mrs. H. McAllister, St. Stephen, N. B.; Mrs. O'Neil, Moncton, N. B.

It is matter for congratulation that Mrs. Todd, acting Dominion president, almost at the last saw her way clear to attend the convention, and is now on her way to London, sailing in the City of Rome, in company with Mrs. Jennie Fowler Willing.

OREGON.

STATE CONVENTION.

It is a great drawback to my report that I could not be present at our state convention; but I have been gleaning faithfully ever since.

Our returned delegates unanimously report a good convention—the first that has been held in the southern portion of our state. There was a larger proportion of southern delegates than we usually meet. At the head of the Rogue River valley, Roseburg has its own amphitheater of hills to boast of, and one of the most equable climates in the world. The good people had prepared a right royal welcome for the convention and emphasized the reality of it by extending it beyond the appointed limits. Three of our W. C. T. U. women, Mrs. Inman, of Umatilla county, Mrs. Mead, state evangelist, and Mrs. Rounds, of the mercy work, were invited to remain and occupy the Roseburg pulpits on the Sunday. The ministers showed therefore their appreciation of our work by deeds as well as by words. The press did the same, sending their own reporters and giving columns of space each day. The hospitality of the kindly home keepers knew no bounds.

On the opening day, May 15, the corresponding secretary's report gave much encouragement to our little host of sixty delegates, and through them to all within our borders. Twenty-eight unions had been organized, counting six that had had a previous state of existence. We have 322 active and twenty-nine honorary members gained this last year, besides seven new Y's with a membership of 234 active and honorary. This makes an entire membership of 1,672 active and 615 honorary. Notwithstanding the financial depression, encouraging words "have come in from all sides, showing how courageously the white riboners have adjusted their work to the changed conditions caused by this depression."

Mrs. Mead tells me she never was more impressed by the spirit of a convention. She felt sure that the spirit of God brooded over it. She thinks the innovation of having the devotional half-hour kept from half-past eleven till twelve instead of the first thing in the morning had something to do with this. At noon all were present—all was quiet—no coming in of late-comers, as is the case earlier. The Bible reading was by Mrs. Mead. Prayer led by Mrs. Smick, Mrs. Harford and Mrs. Unruh.

At the evening session, held in the court house, the address of welcome by Dr. Myra Brown, a busy professional woman, interested in, but not affiliated with the W. C. T. U., had the true ring. Mrs. Henrietta Brown, of Albany, gave the response in a way that could not fail to win the hearts in Roseburg that were not already won. The address of our president, Mrs. N. W. Kinney, was chiefly recommendatory, the amendments she proposed being supported by arguments to show their practical good effects. It was listened to, as her addresses always are, with the deepest interest. She asked that more careful supervision be given to the scientific temperance work in the public schools and emphasized the importance of our affiliation with all organizations in harmony with the Woman's Christian Temperance Union, especially farmers' and labor organizations that are striving for just remuneration for both sexes, shorter hours and freedom from liquor both for the employer and employé.

Several of the superintendents' reports had to be read by the secretary in consequence of their unavoidable absence. This is, of course, always a disadvantage, as in answering questions concerning her department, who is so efficient as the superintendent herself? Mrs. Additon's department (temperance and labor) suffered in this way. She has been doing good work in the lecture field since her return from Massachusetts, filling many appointments on her line of journey. She has been authorized by her own church to perform mission work, by written certificate, and this will facilitate her means of travel. The students at Portland University were much interested in her lecture on her special department some time since. Of all the lines of work, the evangelistic received the warmest recognition at the convention. It was emphasized as the most important of all—the corner-stone of the whole structure. Our president entreated that it should be made more prominent than ever this ensuing year. At Mrs. Mead's request a superintendent of the department has been appointed, so as to leave her free to devote herself entirely to the work of an evangelist. She feels called to this, and has been cheered by conversions.

Mrs. Rankin reported the use of unfermented communion wine in all the churches, with the exception of the Roman Catholic and Episcopal.

Mrs. Hoxter was able to tell of thirty-eight children being provided with good homes; this includes those that were born at the Refuge Home.

A few sermons and meetings on behalf of a better observance of the Sabbath were reported by Mrs. Robb.

Demorest medal work was urged by the superintendent, Mrs. Bond, as by the president, as very important to our youth, and at this time necessary in order to retain the valuable gift of medals.

When the subject of systematic giving was under discussion, on request, twenty-seven rose as practicing the giving to the Lord a tenth; and one hundred of those present rose to express their willingness to do the same.

Thursday evening was L. T. L. night. A hundred and thirty young people took part in the exercises, and Mrs. Ada W. Unruh made an address on the subject. She explained the symbols on the temperance banner of the Warm Spring Indians as follows: They are wrought with various colored beads on tanned deer skin. The tomahawk with white ribbon round the handle was to show that war must cease under the influence of temperance. The pipe of peace within the coils of the serpent shows that the "worm of the still" was choking and crushing the peaceful home. The letters, W. C. T. U., mounted on an arrow were to show that the native daughters of their race are enlisted in a war upon firewater.

The department of literature reported 79,000 pages, and 3,000 papers distributed.

The election returned to us with an almost unanimous voting, all our old officers. Mrs. Harford, recording secretary, felt obliged to resign in consequence of the field work she is undertaking on behalf of equal suffrage. Mrs. Kern was elected to take her place.

The sumptuous lunches served by the kind hostesses of the city, the warm interest of the ministers, the music of the different church choirs, under Mr. Godfrey's leadership, the visit to the soldiers' home, all helped to make the convention memorably delightful.

RESOLUTIONS.

1. To secure a more widespread adherence to our principles not only among the so-called drinking class, but in society, and among Christian men and women.

2. As law is the result of sentiment expressed by the ballot, therefore

3. We rejoice that the last state legislature had the true manliness to enact a resolution for an equal suffrage amendment to our constitution.

4. We view the disregard of state law with regard to scientific instruction on the part of school boards and teachers with the greatest alarm and disapproval, as not only depriving the pupils of this much needed instruction, but teaching the rising generation by example to hold the laws of the commonwealth in contempt.

5. It is the religious duty of all men and women to cultivate the sentiment of equality of morals and demand an equal standard of purity for both sexes.

6. Where more practicable than the Y organization to invite our young ladies to coöperate in the most suitable departments.

7. To assist the young people's Christian societies in their meetings.

8. To push the Demorest medal contests.

9. To call upon all moral and religious people as well as those in authority, to unite in the enforcement of the Sunday laws.

Friday evening found the court house filled to witness the gold medal contest. The medal was won by Miss Jennie Wold, of Eugene.

Never has there been a convention with the angel of Peace brooding so perceptibly over it. Never had the corresponding secretary received so many and such good reports, and never had a place made such wonderful preparations to receive it as did Roseburg. The sheriff had flags run up, the mayor was ready with an address of welcome, as was the ministerial association. There was bunting and flowers in profusion to make things gay and cheery, to say nothing of the hospitality in the homes and at the daily bounteous lunch table.

MISSOURI.

MID-YEAR MEETING.

Our mid year-meeting at Louisiana, April 30 and May 1, was much larger than last year, a proof of its growing popularity. Twelve district presidents were there, all the general officers but one, and three organizers.

No attention was lacking to make the stay of the delegates pleasant. The resignation of Mrs. Lucy M. Wisker, editor of the W. C. T. U. page in the Missouri Voice, was accepted with deep regret that she could no longer continue that work. Miss Collins, of Louisiana, was appointed to fill the place thus vacated until the annual meeting.

Two motions of particular importance were those recommending "that especial prominence be given to evangelistic work during the ensuing year;" and "that unions throughout the state pay particular attention to juvenile work, viz.: L. T. L's, Sunday-school work, scientific temperance instruction, and organization of anti-cigarette leagues."

Butler was chosen as the place for holding the next state convention, the dates of which will be early in November.

Mrs. Hoffman, Mrs. E. B. Ingalls and Miss Hattie Williams were made delegates to the World's convention in June.

On Tuesday evening a program of interest was given by the committee, consisting of devotional exercises by Mrs. Rollar, of St. Joseph; short talk on Y work, by Miss Carter; Demorest medal work, by Miss E. D. Morris; department of narcotics, Mrs. E. B. Ingalls; district work, by Mrs. May L. Woods; the interval being filled with the ready wit of our state president.

Wednesday evening she gave a fine address to a small but appreciative audience, a heavy rain having kept many away.

Immediately following the mid-year meeting the Mississippi Valley Congress of Women convened in St. Louis. Under the management of Mrs. Ingalls, it was a great success, and resulted in the organization of the Missouri Equal Suffrage Association, with Mrs. E. P. Johnson, of St. Louis, president, and the Mississippi Valley Council of Women, with Mrs. E. B. Ingalls as president.

On Saturday night the W. C. T. U. of St. Louis gave Miss Anthony a very elaborate banquet, the first ever tendered a woman in St. Louis. Toasts and responses were given, and Miss Carter, responding to the toast, "Our Delegate," presented Mrs. Hoffman, on behalf of the W. C. T. U. of Missouri, with one hundred dollars in gold, to be used in defraying her expenses to the World's Convention in London.

Clinton reports a very active union, and states as the reason, that they have a president who gives them "no chance to be slothful." The W. C. T. U. joined forces with others and cleared the town of cigarettes, and then secured the names of nonusers of tobacco and placed them on a roll of honor. Parlor and public meetings are held, also services at county farm and jail. The Polyglot Petition has been circulated, and a goodly number of names secured, also efforts have been made to secure more thorough instruction in scientific temperance in the schools. Excellent home missionary work has been done in befriending the poor during the hard winter.

Mrs. Hoffman's recent visit to Sedalia was a benediction and help, causing an uplift of thought toward the right; while membership does not increase yet the sympathy of the best people is with the union, which through contribution to the work, have become members of the Civic Federation and are welcomed cordially by the male members of that organization. Hoffman union, recently organized in Kansas City, writes that nine departments of work have been taken up and twelve subscriptions taken for THE UNION SIGNAL, six hundred names secured on the Polyglot Petition and one public meeting held. These women are determined to make their union a power in that part of Kansas City, and expect to come off more than conquerors in this contest for home and humanity. A successful gold medal contest was recently held in Austin under the auspices of the W. C. T. U.

The regular meetings are very interesting, a series of essays on "What Prohibition is doing in different parts of the world," furnishing opportunity for study and discussion. Parliamentary drills are held and two new members have been gained.

In Adrian the program for a Lathrap memorial service consisted of excerpts from THE UNION SIGNAL read by regular and honorary members of the union. Pictures of Mrs. Lathrap, draped with white ribbon, were upon the platform. Her poem, "Comrades Two," was read, and the song, "There's a Shadow on the Home" was sung by an honorary member.

On the Sabbath before election day the pastor of the United Brethren church preached a stirring "voting temperance" sermon to an immense audience. Last month a social was held in hotel parlors, the music being furnished by the young people; the collection was good, and one new member was gained. At a recent public meeting a paper was read by an eminent physician, an honorary member.

The superintendent of scientific temperance instruction offered a prize to the pupils of one room in the school for the best essay on "Effects of the three C's—cider, cigarettes, and chewing gum," the contest open to boys and girls. The school directors acted as judges, and the book, "Girls of To-day," was the prize given. This union furnishes each teacher with a copy of Mrs. Hunt's school journal. Members who neglect to wear the white ribbon are fined two cents for each offense.

The members of Pineville W. C. T. U. have lately visited the schools. Rev. Stewart, on behalf of the union, gave a short talk. The merchants of this town have received a pamphlet from a firm of Chicago liquor-dealers informing them that for "the trade in temperance towns no marks or brands are used on boxes." In six different places the attention of dealers in "temperance towns" is called to the fact that they have a preparation to which they have added "roots, herbs, barks and spices," making it "very palatable," adding, "If you want a fine article to sell without a license, it will pay you well to introduce it in your town." Thus are our temperance laws subverted.

In Anderson, a Sunday afternoon mass-meeting, consisting of excellent music, declamations by two young ladies, and an entertaining and instructive talk by Mrs. La Mance, on "The growth of our society," resulted in the strengthening of the union, and was a preparation for the approaching county convention.

Miss Lulu Collins has been appointed organizer of the tenth district, also a state organizer; she has spent ten days in Montgomery, Warren and St. Charles counties; sixty-one new members were gained, two county conventions held, one new union organized at High Hill, the St. Charles Y revived, and interest increased throughout the district. Mrs. Hoffman filled several appointments during April.

The children of the Anti-cigarette and Anti-gum Chewing Leagues in Union Star, assisted by the ladies of the Home Protection Association, gave a very delightful entertainment in the town hall, and realized a neat sum of money for their work.

St. Joseph reports a series of illustrated lectures given by Dr. Tracy, under the auspices of the Ministers' Association. The subject of temperance was never before presented to so many people in that city, many church members being reached who had not before heard an address on that subject. In April, Mrs. Hoffman delivered one of her stirring, magnetic addresses at Centenary church. The superintendent of jail work has been untiring in her efforts in this department, and has held services at the jail every Sunday afternoon throughout the year. The superintendent of literature has been very active in distributing, also in selecting and classifying leaflets suitable for the various departments. Effective work is being done among foreign-speaking people, and three hundred names were secured on the anti-cigarette petitions.

Through the efforts of the superintendent of press work, temperance notes now appear in two of the daily papers. The St. Joseph Methodist, edited by Rev. C. J. Van Deventer, an honorary member of the union, devotes three and one-half columns of space to uncompromising temperance matter, besides snap shots wherever available. During the month of March a number of the pastors, especially of the Methodist Church, preached temperance sermons in response to the request of the W. C. T. U. The annual Martha Washington Tea is found to be one of the most effective methods of producing the arrest of thought, in a social way, concerning our work.

Mrs. Margaret Britain, one of the faithful members, has been promoted to the ranks above.

Our state secretary, Miss Morris, requests that unions holding silver medals will arrange as soon as possible for a gold medal contest. She will furnish names of medal holders to any county or district wishing them. It is desired to hold a diamond medal contest at state convention, and in order to do so, gold and grand gold medal contests must be arranged for this summer.

CONNECTICUT.

JUNE LETTER.

While the summer days are yet young we pause to look back and see what the past few weeks of late spring have meant to us in our work. Our little state has been beautiful in its garment of bloom and tender foliage, and while the record of the beauty of the earth is not exactly a "temperance item," we note in strong contrast thereto, the blot that man, the crowning work of God, casts upon nature, His own perfect creation. Alas that homes, rum cursed and poverty-stricken, know nothing of the beauty of green fields; that children grow up without experiencing the exquisite pleasure of gathering wild flowers and fruit. Yet it is not all misery, for here and there, even into the poorest and meanest homes, comes some brightness, and the W. C. T. U. does its part in giving joy to sorrowing ones.

WATERBURY Y.

This band of workers, during the Methodist pastor's absence at conference, supplied his pulpit by securing the services of Mr. Shiro Kuroda, a Japanese student from Amherst college, who spoke both morning and evening to good audiences. He gave an account of his life, his conversion in Japan, the persecution of his family and his father's final disinheritance because he would not give up his religion. In the evening his theme was temperance, and he spoke of our immense wealth and territory, our possibilities and the evil against which we are arrayed that threatens to overwhelm us. Mr. Kuroda is an earnest man who goes back to work among his countrymen, carrying the Christian religion not only in his words but in his life.

PAWCATUCK.

This union is vigorous and growing; it keeps abreast of the other unions in all good work, and the interest is unabated.

Ansonia, with an address by Madame Barakat, Hanover, Niantic, Rockfall and New Preston send in reports of pleasant and helpful free-will offering meetings. New Haven No. 1 has had several lectures recently, one by Madame Barakat, one by Miss Landfear, a teacher from South Africa, and Miss Anna Cummings, also from that distant country.

Meriden union is old enough to vote, having celebrated with appropriate exercises its twenty-first birthday.

Abington held a Lathrap-Woodbridge memorial service, which consisted of appropriate music, readings and addresses.

Willimantic had a special union temperance meeting, which included the free-will offering. Rev. A. T. Foster, of Boston; Revs. C. A. Dinsmore and O. W. Scott, local pastors; Mrs. White, county president, and members of the union participated.

On May 10 the Middlefield union was the means of bringing to the town the celebrated Prohibition singers, Mr. and Mrs. Beveridge. On the afternoon of the 17th, Mrs. Mary Clement Leavitt talked to the ladies of the degradation of women and children in heathen lands. She suggested how money might be saved for mission work by economy in dress. In the evening she lectured on "Slippery Places," a stirring and interesting lecture.

Just as I close my letter a communication from Meriden comes to hand, too good to omit. Through the direct efforts of the president this union has been holding a series of gospel temperance meetings of a most interesting nature. The first was the free-will offering meeting at the town hall at which Mrs. C. H. Fitz-Gerald gave a fine address. Since that time the temperance committees of the young people's societies from the different churches in the city have alternated in furnishing attractive programs. The meetings have been largely attended and the collections taken up were donated to the public drinking fountain fund.

On May 12, the Beveridges, the Nebraska singers, sang under the auspices of the union in the First M. E. church. On the same day Mrs. Fitz-Geraid came to them again in the direct interest of the fountain fund, asking only her expenses. The meeting was in the opera house and all who attended were amply repaid. "Counting the cost," was the subject of her address. She also spoke before the union the Saturday evening previous.

On the 19th, the Young People's Social Union of St. Paul's Universalist church, presented the program, which was most excellent, the daughter of the founder of the union, Miss May Chapin, presiding.

The fountain is in process of construction, and it is hoped will be ready to dedicate in June. The union expect this fountain to not alone prove a boon and a blessing to all sorts and conditions of humanity, but an ornament to the city.

They have had besides the Sunday services a lecture by Eli Perkins, whose subject was the "Philosophy of Wit and Humor." My correspondent says: "This was not a temperance address, but he said more in five minutes for the cause than some brilliant orators who make this subject their whole theme."

"Aunt Hannah's Quilting Party" was given by the Young People's Society of the South Meriden Methodist church. This old-fashioned drama "took," and the result was a good cash profit.

MINNESOTA.

MRS. EDHOLM IN MINNEAPOLIS.

Some months ago several earnest women of this city banded together for the purpose of aiding such young girls as had been led astray and would return to a better life, were some helping hand held out to them to show them the way. "The Woman's Rescue League of Minneapolis," was the name of the new organization, and Mrs. E. A. Russell, well known to W. C. T. U. women as the former National superintendent of coffee houses, was chosen president.

To arrest public thought and arouse interest in this unfortunate class, the League secured Mrs. Charlton Edholm, W. W. C. T. U. press superintendent, secretary of the Florence Crittenton missions, and author of "Traffic in Girls" to spend a week in the city lecturing. The meetings began Sabbath, May 19. Mrs. Edholm arrived in the city the day before, and Saturday evening a party of women, including Mrs. Edholm, Mrs. Russell, Dr. Martha Ripley and others, visited several of the houses of ill-fame. "For," Mrs. Edholm said, "it is no use to tell Minneapolis audiences what is going on in New York or Chicago, I must tell them of the evils in their very midst."

On Sabbath three large meetings were held in as many different localities, the one in the afternoon being in the Y. M. C. A. rooms, a meeting for men only. The week following Mrs. Edholm spoke at least twice daily, always to large audiences, and always in a different church, so that it is safe to say thousands heard her. Everywhere her theme was the same, help for those already fallen and better protection for the young girls and boys who are yet pure. Mrs. Edholm's manner is direct, simple and intensely earnest, her pleading irresistible, and none who heard her can ever again have any feeling that the poor victims of vice are too far removed from the more favored women of happy homes for sympathy to reach from one to the other. "They are our sisters" will ring in the ears of every one who heard it, as well as the statement that in every meeting she has held with these poor women "Jesus, Lover of My Soul" was well known to them. "Doesn't that show that they come from our homes, our Christian homes, and our very churches?" Nor can one forget that forty-six thousand women every year are ruined in these United States, which means over one hundred every day of the year.

On Friday evening a meeting more particularly for the girls and women from the haunts of shame was held in the Jumbo Theater, whose proprietor had granted the use of the building, saying, "I know I'm in a bad business but my father was a Christian man and I'll help you all I can." It was a wonderful meeting, crowded to the doors, and several of the girls expressed a desire and determination to lead a better life. This practically ended Mrs. Edholm's meetings for the Rescue League, but the meetings at the Jumbo have been continued, and on Sabbath, May 26, Mrs. Edholm began another series under the auspices of the W. C. T. U., speaking three times that day, addressing the ministers in their Monday morning meeting, speaking to a full house at Wesley M. E. church Monday evening, going to Ramsey county W. C. T. U. convention on Tuesday, and holding a farewell meeting on Wednesday evening in the Jumbo Theater.

As a result of these meetings about two hundred additions have been made to the membership of the Rescue League, and much sympathy created for the work which did not exist before. It is hoped to secure other workers and lecturers later, but Mrs. Edholm has opened the way, gladly giving her services "for collections only," and for a chance to save souls. Social purity workers of our organization who wish to forward their work cannot do better than secure her wherever possible. Her address is The Temple, Chicago, Ill.

MRS. AMY A. GREEN,

News in a Nutshell.

MRS. LUCY THURMAN, National superintendent of colored work, sailed for London May 29. Lady Henry Somerset has made arrangements for Mrs. Thurman's visit, which will doubtless be very helpful in bringing about a better understanding of the attitude of the W. C. T. U. to the colored people.

THE board of trustees of the American Temperance University at Harriman, Tenn., passed these resolutions, May 21:

Resolved, That in the death of Mrs. Mary T. Lathrap this board has met with a loss irreparable. The causes of education, morality and temperance have lost an advocate and exponent of unsurpassed power, and the womanhood of the world mourns a character of supreme endowment and superior worth.

Resolved, That in proceeding to the erection of Lathrap Chapel, the American Temperance University will pay to the memory of Mrs. Lathrap, a tribute eminently deserved, in the hope that through this edifice her noble example may impress and inspire coming generations.

It is intended to push forward the work on the chapel so that it will be ready for use next fall.

MRS. M. M. WEEKS, state lecturer for the juvenile department in the W. C. T. U. of Michigan, has been doing a grand work in the churches and missions of Chicago and its suburban towns. She has a unique manner of fastening the many important truths she utters by fine illustrations, oil-painted charts, which hold the undivided attention of her audience. Mrs. Weeks is said to be by competent judges an accomplished speaker, unsurpassed upon the platform. She has been speaking in some of Chicago's missions with great acceptance and fruitful results; has been recalled to Evanston to the First M. E. church and will be called again on her return in the fall. She has spoken often in the Temple in Chicago and Friday gave her new lecture, title, "What hast thou in thy hand?" to a large audience. It may well be said of her, that she "mixes her colors with her brains," for every form and color spoke a various language. Her work is largely among the young people and children. She returned to Laingsburg, Mich., her home, last week.

THE Brighton Hill Y. W. C. T. U. of Kansas City is prospering. The membership is small but faithful in attendance. A short time ago the entertainment,—"Trial of Prince Nicotine," was given, and added over ten dollars to the treasury.

MISS ELIZABETH UPTON YATES sailed for England early in June and will be gone until September. Mr. S. B. Hershey, central lecture bureau, Ashtabula, O., will have charge of her engagements. All desiring autumn or winter dates should apply to him.

Cor. Secy's Notes.

In response to my request concerning number of unorganized counties, Pennsylvania, through its efficient corresponding secretary, Mrs. R. B. Chambers, reports that the only two of its sixty-seven counties which are not yet organized will surely be so before their coming of age convention in October.

This same Keystone state is pushing two bright ideas which will well bear transplanting. First: Small envelopes are being sent out with the following inscription:

Prove me now herewith.—Mal. 3:10.
DEAR FRIEND:
Please inclose one penny (or more) for each year's membership, or interest, in the W. C. T. U., and send through your local and county unions to MRS. W. H. WOODS, Treas.
Huntingdon, Pa.

Second, it is planned to have a "Majority Honor Roll" at the next convention, containing the names of all members of the Pennsylvania W. C. T. U. at its majority birthday. The paid members of last year are to be upon the left-hand side, the new ones secured this year upon the right. Pennsylvania has chosen a high mark this year—nothing less than to come up to its twenty-first convention with one thousand paid-up members for every year of its existence. This will mean an increase of 5,000 over last year, and, with such an ideal, it is not strange the corresponding secretary should say, "We expect to earn Miss Willard!" Don't let the victory be too easy, sister states, but let it be a hard-fought field.

Missouri is also planning to hold conferences of Christian workers under the direction of the W. C. T. U. in various parts of the state. The program sent is of great interest, and the various Christian organizations, the Sunday-school, Christian Endeavor societies, Epworth Leagues, B. Y. P. U's, King's Daughters, Good Citizenship Leagues, together with all the junior societies, are duly represented. In addition, colleges, public schools and the missionary societies are all represented and, if the program is fully carried out, it cannot fail to bring into closer touch these various organizations, as well as to arouse a deeper interest in all lines of Christian and reform work. It is good to see how ingenious our workers are becoming in devising new methods for carrying on old and yet ever new work.

Headquarters was brightened on Monday and Tuesday by a flying visit from Mrs. Grubb who has engagements in Illinois and Wisconsin and will deliver one of the addresses at Wisconsin state convention. There are none of our workers who could receive more cordial welcome or bring more cheer than the brave little woman who, for so many years, has been toiling with such energy for our foreign speaking people. Mrs. Grubb's ability as a speaker is being more and more widely recognized, as well as her great ability in department work.

Yours for a good summer record.

visited by a downpouring rain you will understand that it must have great natural attractions to seem at all pleasant in the face of such drawbacks. The sun found us on Saturday, however, and the mud quickly subsided, so that the attendance on that evening and on Sunday was very large. I rested through Thursday and part of Friday, meeting with the convention for the first time Friday afternoon, and hearing the president's masterly address in the evening. She dwelt largely upon the special legislative work which had occupied them during the year—raising the age of consent; and her delineation of their struggle and arguments for a better protected girlhood were received with frequent bursts of applause. One unique feature was presenting to the audience, upon three banners which were hoisted into their places at just the right moment, the status of the Texas senate with reference to this bill. The first contained in golden letters the names of those who had voted for eighteen years; the second, in silver, those who had wished to compromise at sixteen, and the third in dreary black, crape-trimmed, those who had opposed all change and filibustered from the beginning. It was a daring thing to do and I almost trembled at first, lest it should arouse the opposition of the voters, but they received it with laughter and applause, and many were heard to say afterwards that it was a very valuable object-lesson and a justly merited rebuke.

On Sunday I preached the annual sermon in the morning, addressed the Y's, laid the foundation for a union in the afternoon and made an address on the Bible argument against woman in the evening. I have never spoken before more kindly appreciative audiences nor seen people more receptive of truth. I wanted very much to remain on Monday to the reception my gracious hostess, Mrs. Dr. Vaughn, wished to tender me, but an engagement at Fort Worth that evening made it necessary for me to leave on the early morning train. In Fort Worth the audience was small, but very kindly, as also in Dallas, where I went the following day. I had a day of rest in Dallas, as the Ennis engagement fell through at the last moment, and there was given me the delight of a drive over the prairies with my host and hostess, Mr. and Mrs. Hetherington, in search of the gorgeous wild flowers I had almost jumped out of the car window in my eagerness to possess. To describe Texas wild flowers would need an inspired pen. They must be seen in all their lavish loveliness before one can gain any adequate idea of what they are like.

Thursday, May 23, found me in Greenville, where I addressed a fine audience in the Baptist church, and had the pleasure of seeing among my hearers all the clergymen of the town. The Greenfield union is only eight months old, but it has already accomplished much, and promises yet greater things to follow. From Greenville I went to Sherman, where I had hoped to organize a union, but, alas! the date was a most unfortunate one, conflicting with school graduating exercises and various other meetings of local interest, consequently no audience was forthcoming.

On Saturday I went to Denison, where I spoke twice on Sunday to large audiences, and had delightfully quiet rest between in the beautiful, cultured home of Judge Wilkinson.

Then on to Paris on Monday, where I went directly from the train to meet a large audience which had been waiting for an hour in the church, and which gave me a most cordial welcome in spite of such dispiriting circumstances. We reorganized the union which had been, for two years, in a comatose state, and had the delight of seeing it start off with a fine impetus of enthusiasm. In Paris I was the guest of Mrs. Lizzie D. Johnson, a not infrequent contributor to THE UNION SIGNAL in former years. The next morning I turned my face Chicagoward, traveling through the Indian Territory, Arkansas and Missouri, where a wait of eleven and one-half hours in St. Louis came as the grand finale of my trip. Owing to said delay, I did not reach Chicago until the morning of Decoration Day.

I am again at my desk, plunged deeply in an arrears of correspondence, but feeling quite willing to struggle through it, because sure I have been able to accomplish more for the beloved cause, through coming into closer touch with its needs, than I could possibly have done had I remained in Chicago and answered each letter within twenty-four hours of its receipt.

The lessons I have learned have been many, and some day I mean to ask for space in these same columns to set them forth. Meantime, I am sure that our work in Texas is on the steady increase, not only in numbers, but in efficiency and popularity. As proof of this latter point, the mayor of Dallas sent a most cordial invitation to the Convention to meet there next year, offering them the free use of the City Hall, and this without any solicitation on behalf of the local union. Texas is a great field, but it is occupied by a dauntless, consecrated, efficient band, under grand leadership, and they are going out to possess it in its length and breadth for God and righteousness.

A SUMMER OUTING.

DEAR WHITE-RIBBONERS: — May I step quietly into your homes for a chat to-day on a subject which lies very near my heart and in which I hope to interest you? Most of us are planning for a summer vacation or at least a few days' outing somewhere. Are we planning at the same time to give a vacation to some one else? There are in all our large cities so many young women bearing heavy burdens; looking out for father and mother; or the little ones left to sister's care; working from early morn till late at night and when they are given their two weeks' vacation they still must remain in the small stuffy room in some boarding house which they call their home, for they have not the money laid aside to meet the additional railroad expense and pay for their board besides.

Out from all these large centers there are so many pleasant towns and villages where the grass is so green and the flowers so beautiful and the shade of the trees so restful. There are spare rooms in the homes waiting for some invited guests. Cannot these dear girls be the invited guests in your homes this summer, my sisters? Can they not be with you as one of the family and so bring but little added labor and yet give them a taste of the beauties of nature and the restfulness of quiet hours of sleep away from the busy whirl of their monotonous life? These hearts so hungry to take in that sweeter, truer life which is in your home will go back to their work better equipped for the coming months of labor, having had a taste of home-life which will brighten their own little rooms during the long winter evenings, and give them a greater desire to grow nearer the heart of their heavenly Father because they have had the loving ministrations of His children and seen the beauties of His handiwork.

Think this matter over, dear friends, and have your pastor consult with some pastor in your nearest large city, and through his Young People's Society he will readily find you the young woman who needs just this vacation, or write the local officers of the W. C. T. U. or your home missionary worker (in your own denomination) if you prefer offering your hearts and homes to rest some tired young woman, or some mother and her babe, and I am sure you will receive a grateful response.

Then, too, perhaps right in your own town some young woman works by your side. An invitation to your home for a week or two would give her just the change she needs, not only in surroundings and in food but in the counting out every Saturday night from her small salary that which is needed to keep things even. This in itself would be a rest and draw this heart nearer the One whom we serve. These opportunities for service lie all about us. To be sure those whose lives are given to work for young women realize this great need more than can others, but the Master said, "I was a stranger and ye took me in." Shall we not all look for this opportunity for blessing? Your hopeful co-worker,

IDA C. CLOTHIER.

EMPIRE LEGISLATION.

DEAR UNION SIGNAL:—The legislature of this state has adjourned and its work ended. It passed a few good measures, but on the whole the record is a disgraceful one, exceedingly disappointing to the reform sentiment that gave it its majority.

The passage of the law raising the age of consent to eighteen years was one of the most commendable acts of this legislature, for it was done against strong opposition. Several important laws were passed which particularly concern New York city. Among them may be mentioned the new tenement house law giving the city the right to destroy houses which menace the general health; the school house playgrounds law which provides that hereafter no public school shall be erected without good and sufficient play-grounds; the school appropriations law, which provides an additional sum of five million dollars for the erection of new schools; the school census law, which directs the taking, at fitting intervals, of a census of all children of a school age, thus enabling those who control the school money to act with positive knowledge; and the small parks law, which provides for new breathing places in the overcrowded slum districts. The sentiment for these measures was of an overwhelming character, and nothing could be gained by defeating them, but the legislature should receive whatever credit is due for their passage.

After giving due credit for the meritorious measures passed, the particularly disappointing shortcomings of the legislature stand about as follows:

One of the most necessary reforms, the desire for which at the last election, overturned Tammany in New York city and contributed largely towards the election of a Republican governor and legislature, was a complete overthrow of the Tammany Hall police system and a reorganization of the department. Instead of giving the city the necessary legislation for the accomplishment of this reform, a police bill was passed making mandatory the Tammany system of a bi-partisan commission and rejecting the bill giving the commissioners appointed by Mayor Strong the power to reorganize the force.

For years the Republican party has pledged and repledged itself to ballot reform. This pledge has been violated by the passage of a blanket ballot bill which permits the ballot of a bribed voter to be identified by the purchasers.

The extravagance and dishonesty of their opponents have been regularly denounced in Republican platforms, but the record of this legislature has surpassed all precedent in this respect. It has spent nearly $19,000,000, and imposed a tax rate of 3.24 mills on the dollar. Compared with the tax rate of recent years its excess is strikingly shown. In 1890 the tax rate was 2.34 mills; in 1891, 1.38 mills; in 1892, 1.98 mills; in 1893, 2.58 mills; and in 1894, 2.18 mills. The increase this year is due to no unusual condition, and represents nothing whatever but extravagance and plunder. It is caused by excessive appropriations made chiefly in personal and partisan interests by the unnecessary increase of salaries and other expenses, by the creation of new and unnecessary offices and reckless expenditures regardless of the interests of the people.

Although the legislature has passed no new excise legislation, the temperance people feel that they have much to be thankful for. At one time it looked as if New York would be saddled with a Sunday opening law, and the passage of such a measure would have been no worse than the other broken pledges that have disgraced this recreant legislature. The Outlook states the situation precisely, in a recent editorial, when it declared that the state has "awakened to the fact that they have not one Tammany party to deal with but two."

Here and There.

A Germantown bride grew indignant when her grocer asked if she wanted any cracked wheat. She replied that she could afford to buy the very best.

"Laura writes from home that she has bought a wheel," said Mrs. Figg to the aunt with whom she is spending the summer. "I'm glad to hear that the old fashion is coming in again," said the old lady. "I allow I'll have to come up and teach her how to spin."

The word alcohol is stated by some authorities to be descended from alghol (Arabic Al Ghûl,) meaning destruction. Very fittingly one of our greatest writers says, "O thou invisible spirit of wine, if thou hast no name to be known by, let us call thee Devil!"

As grandma and little Bessie were going to the grape-vines, Bessie saw a snake in the grass. In excited tones she called: "Grandma, come quick and see! Here is a little snake; he is all green. He hasn't begun to ripen!"

A CHANCE TO MAKE MONEY.

I am out of debt, and thanks to the Dishwasher for it. I have made $1,640 clear money in 87 days and attended to my household duties besides, and I think this is doing splendid for a woman inexperienced in business. Any one can sell what every one wants to buy, and every family wants a Dishwasher. I don't canvass very much; people come or send for the Washers, and every Washer that goes out sells two or three more, as they do the work to perfection. I am going to devote my whole time to this business now, and I am sure that I can clear $5,000 this year. My sister and brother have started in the business; doing splendid. "Do you think," said the intellectual young woman, "that there is any truth in the theory that big creatures are better natured than small ones?" "Yes," answered the young man, "I do. Look at the difference between the Jersey mosquito and the Jersey cow."

"Don't you," said the summer boarder, "sometimes envy the city people who come here with nothing to do but recreate?" "No," replied Farmer Corntossel, "I dunno's I do. I swing the scythe tell I get right tired an' 'magine it lorn tennis, an' set out on the front porch ter get bit by the mersquiters of evenin's an' manage ter have 'bout ez good a time as the rest of 'em."

UNITED SOCIETY OF CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR.

Fourteenth annual convention, Boston, Mass., July 10–15.

EPWORTH LEAGUE.

Second International Conference, Chattanooga, Tenn., June 27–30.

POLITICAL REFORM—A CALL FOR A NATIONAL CONFERENCE.

University Temple, Prohibition Park, Staten Island, June 28–July 4.

The object of the conference is to be an interchange of views on leading questions.

The discussion shall be open alike to those who are friendly or hostile to these various views, believing that the way to reach a closer union is through free speech and a clearer understanding of the views held by all. If possible, without a violation of principle, the friends of political reform should enter the next presidential campaign united. No harm can come from a frank talk along these lines.

The conference will be a representative one, all political reform organizations being invited to participate; as, the Prohibition party, People's party, Socialist Labor party, organizations that advocate civil service reform, single tax, direct tax, Sunday observance, and all other organizations that aim at cleaner politics and a better government.

Number of Delegates:—Local organizations to be entitled to one delegate to every twenty members; representative organizations less than state, five delegates each; state organizations, ten each; National organizations, twenty each. Each delegate will be expected to present credentials signed by the proper officer of the society or organization he represents. Other delegates may be granted the privilege of the floor, but not the privilege of voting.

The resolutions or motions adopted or carried will be expressive of the sentiment of the conference, but will not be binding upon the individual delegates or the bodies they represent.

Assessment:—Each delegate will be required to contribute one dollar to meet the expenses of the conference. The auditorium, lighting, and much of the general advertisement, are contributed free.

Railroad Fare:—It is expected that special rates can be secured on the railroads for delegates and friends. Full announcement will be made later.

Hotel Accommodations within the Park at $1 to $2; good accommodations at the Park Hotel at $1.50 per day, or guests who prefer can stop in New York city.

MOODY BIBLE INSTITUTE.

At this season of the year there are a great many ministers, evangelists, Christian workers and others passing through Chicago who would be glad to see the various forms of Christian activities in this city. The Bible Institute, which is open throughout the entire year, is glad to announce that during the month of June Dr. A. T. Pierson, who filled Mr. Spurgeon's Tabernacle the first year after his death, will lecture each morning at eleven o'clock, except Sunday and Monday, in the lecture room at 80 Institute Place, on the North side of the city; and Prof. W. W. White at nine o'clock.

Pastors with their wives desiring to see the work of the institute for a day, while passing through Chicago, may room and take their meals in the Institute building if they so desire.

ITEMS OF INTEREST TO WORKERS.

"I am so glad we are to have a new edition;" "I am delighted to know that 'Sketches' are to be reproduced;" "I shall want a number of copies." Such, and numerous similar expressions of satisfaction come to us concerning the publication of "Thumb Nail Sketches." There seems to be a general demand among our workers, not only in the United States, but in every land where the World's W. C. T. U. has auxiliaries, for a medium—such as this little book is intended to be—of introduction or of closer personal acquaintance with each other.

Two hundred and seventy white ribbon women are "sketched" therein, some, of course, more at length than others, and fifteen different countries are represented. American women will be especially interested in the work and personality of their British comrades of the white ribbon army and in those just "over the border" in the Dominion of Canada. Sketches are given of the World's officers and superintendents, our own National officers, state presidents, superintendents, organizers and evangelists, and many other leaders, among whom are prominent pioneers in the W. C. T. U. movement, and comrades who have been promoted to heavenly service. The book is indexed so that each name may be readily found, can be had in either cloth or paper binding, and its forty half-tone portraits are alone worth its price. Every union, state or local, which has headquarters, will want copies to keep on sale. For advertisement stating price, etc., see another column.

The following extract from a recently received letter furnishes a valuable hint for local unions: "You may recall my suggestion about two weeks ago that you send some 'left-overs' now and then to women who could not afford to renew their subscriptions to THE UNION SIGNAL and your promise to do so if the unions would place in your hands a 'postage fund,' or words to that effect. I mentioned it at our meeting yesterday and asked for a trifle to send. More was given than I expected and it gives me pleasure to enclose a draft for three dollars for you to use in that way, or as you see fit."

What union will be next to "give a lift" in this practical way—a lift not to us but to their own local work?

A new leaflet for the peace department has just been issued entitled, "The Misapplied Pauline Doctrine of the Sword." The author is Josiah Leeds, a "Friend," known throughout the length and breadth of the land as a scholar and thinker— a man who devotes his life to humanitarian interests and especially to the promulgation of peace doctrines. In these days of Boys' Brigades our women will do wisely to keep this question well to the front, and this leaflet should be widely distributed in the churches and young people's societies.

Numerous requests come to us from superintendents for information concerning the literature they should order. "What do I need in my department?" a newly elected superintendent will ask. She does not even wait to consult a catalogue. If she did she would know that there are Bound Sets of leaflets specially designed to meet this need. Every superintendent—indeed, every W. C. T. U. worker—should keep on hand these Bound Sets for ready reference in selecting and ordering. But first of all we recommend that they send for a catalogue of W. T. P. A. publications and make themselves perfectly familiar with its contents.

THE STUDENT VOLUNTEER sets forth in its leading article the meaning of the watchcry of the Student Volunteer Movement for Foreign Missions, "the evangelization of the world in this generation," to give every person in the world an opportunity to know Jesus Christ as a personal Saviour within the lifetime of the individual volunteer, that is, as far as the activities and direct influence of each volunteer is concerned. The movement works systematically toward that end, and the little periodical in question is an exponent well setting forth the ways and means employed.

THE HEATHEN WOMAN'S FRIEND for June closes the twenty-sixth year of its publication. This issue is a Young Woman's Number. "Graduate Girls in Fukuoka," by Grace Tucker, is an instructive letter from Japan. "The Missionary Movement and the Colleges for Women," by Prof. Sarah F. Whiting, is one of the most interesting articles. "Two Royal Girls," by Lilly Ryder Gracey, tells of the devoted lives of two missionaries—Miss Crosby, "three thousand miles from everywhere," on one of the Micronesian group of islands, and Dr. Mary Pierson Eddy, at Sidon, in Syria.

OUR DAY: THE ALTRUISTIC REVIEW. All who are interested, as who is not, in the life and work of Rev. C. H. Parkhurst, D. D., will particularly enjoy "A Character Sketch" of him by Walter B. Murray. Very few men who enter the field as reformers in any line, live to see such great results as has Dr. Parkhurst in his crusade against municipal corruption. Like some others "he builded better than he knew" when beginning in his own great city to expose and correct the coöperative methods of officials against, instead of for good government, he started a mighty wave of investigation and reform which has not ceased its purifying course, and its influence is now felt from the cities of the Atlantic to the Pacific. The influences of birth, education, early convictions, all which have entered into the building up of such a strong, fearless, Christian manhood are well set forth in the article under consideration.

THE MONTHLY ILLUSTRATOR for June is not a magazine to be opened and hastily dropped by its readers or by the admirers of fine illustrations. It is not easy to select for comment any one of the subjects where all are so delightfully and ably presented. We are brought into close touch with nature and some homely everyday scenes in Alfred Trumble's article headed "A Constructor and Dramatist," in Edward King's on "The Value of Nationalism in Art," in George Parsons Lathrop's "The Bucolic Mood in Painting," and "Women as Admirers of Cattle," by Philip G. Hubert Jr. The illustrations for the above are from original sketches and paintings by Henry Mosler, Eastman Johnson, Carleton Wiggins and Matilda Browne, respectively. The photographic art is used by Charles Turner to bring before us "Some Scotch Castles and their Stories." "Glimpses of Dream Life" is presented by a series of rare pictures by Corwin K. Linson. Illustrations from paintings of beautiful women by Diana Coomans embellish "Heredity in Art," by Hillary Bell.

THE REVIEW OF REVIEWS for June presents as its leading article for the month, "The Chicago Newspapers and Their Makers,"—"a character sketch of the leading journalists and daily journals, past and present, of the inland metropolis." The article is from the pen of Willis J. Abbot. Its style leans wholly—as might be expected—to the commendatory view, but no one familiar with Chicago papers, who has any care for the purity of the home can indorse wholly the writer's total ignoring of the utter vileness that permeates some of the lesser lights among Chicago's journals. While there can be no question that Chicago's leading dailies are "clean" sheets, it is a matter for severe censure that Mr. Abbot mentions by name and plainly indorses journals that are regular advertising mediums for those places that are undermining the American home, ruining America's youth and marring America's free banner with awful blots of murder and shame. Shamelessness and blatant-mouthed vice masquerades under the name of fearlessness and independence. "A free press," not only in Chicago, but throughout America, too often means license to poison young minds, the awful preparation for the future overthrow of souls and bodies, and the silence of the great clean magazines and journals of the day is a pitiful, but nevertheless positive consent to the iniquitous business of their confrères.

A bound volume of THE CENTURY has just appeared, containing the numbers of that magazine for the past six months. The volume is notable as containing the first portion of Prof. William M. Sloane's "Life of Napoleon." Professor Sloane has given careful and exhaustive study to the subject, especially among the official archives of France, and as a result has incorporated much new and valuable material in his work. Enough of the life has already appeared to show Professor Sloane's thorough grasp of the subject, his freedom from prejudice and his comprehension of the causes that made possible Napoleon's rise to sovereign power. The foremost artists in France and America have been called upon to illustrate the text. There are a number of articles in the volume which attracted wide attention when first published and which have a lasting value. Those who have read the numbers of the magazine month by month will be glad to get them in permanent form for their libraries.

THE AMERICAN MEDICAL TEMPERANCE QUARTERLY, issued in April, opens with an article by N. S. Davis, M. D., of Chicago, the conclusion of one begun in the January number; "Effects of Alcohol," by Sir Benjamin Ward Richardson, M. D., is from advance proofs of the "Cyclopedia of Temperance and Prohibition." "Wine the Milk of the Aged," is an old brocard which C. Arnold F. Lindorme, Ph. D., M. D., explodes very satisfactorily. He says: "It is an observation of all ages that the merit of some things is in nothing except their age. . . . When the above mentioned physiological assertion was formed, there had not, as yet, arisen any doubt about the strengthening power of spirituous liquors. . . The fact is, alcohol is not nourishment." This he does not set forth as a dogma, but leads up to it by conclusive argument. "Wine, it may be maintained, is the milk of the aged, but only in an unfermented condition, in the chemically unaltered state of pristine nature, in which women and children can partake of it also."

THE MAGAZINE OF POETRY AND LITERARY REVIEW is a growing periodical, enlarging its borders and enhancing its value from month to month. Its short sketches of authors with their portraits, makes its volumes valuable as a reference to literary workers.

POLYGLOT PETITION.

Honored Rulers, Representatives and Brothers:

We, your Petitioners, although belonging to the physically weaker sex, are strong of heart to love our homes, our native land, and the world's family of nations.

We know that clear brains and pure hearts make honest lives and happy homes, and that by these the nations prosper, and the time is brought nearer when the world shall be at peace.

We know that indulgence in Alcohol and Opium, and in other vices which disgrace our social life, makes misery for all the world, and most of all for us and for our children.

We know that stimulants and opiates are sold under legal guarantees which make the Governments partners in the traffic, by accepting as revenue a portion of the profits, and we know with shame that they are often forced by treaty upon populations, either ignorant or unwilling.

We know that the law might do much, now left undone, to raise the moral tone of society and render vice difficult.

We have no power to prevent these great iniquities beneath which the whole world groans, but you have power to redeem the honor of the nations from an indefensible complicity.

We therefore come to you with the united voices of representative women of every land, beseeching you to raise the standard of the law to that of Christian morals, to strip away the safeguards and sanctions of the state from the drink traffic and the opium trade, and to protect our homes by the total prohibition of these curses of civilization throughout all the territory over which your government extends.

CAMPAIGN ECHOES,

by Mrs. Letitia Youmans, the heroic pioneer of the white-ribbon movement in Canada, and to-day the honorary president of the Dominion W. C. T. U., was written at the earnest request of white-ribboners on both sides of the border. Besides being an autobiography, a record of eighteen years of unremitting toil in the service of God and humanity, it is valuable as authentic history of the temperance reform in Canada.

It is a work of 312 pages, dictated from a bed of sickness and constant pain, and breathes from beginning to end a spirit of Christian service and unwavering faith in God. The book is dedicated to the author's "white ribbon sisters in this and other lands." The introduction is by Frances E. Willard, and the price is (cloth bound, with portrait of Mrs. Youmans) $1.

Signal Notes.

Over half of the great state of Texas is under prohibition law, and all but nineteen counties in Arkansas are under the same beneficent rule.

The British government enforces strict prohibition in Matebeland and Mashonaland, fining and imprisoning any person selling or giving liquor to the native.

British India contains one-fifth of the human family, two hundred and eighty-seven million people, and is increasing in population at the rate of nearly three million annually.

Sir Benjamin Ward Richardson, the noted English physician, says that seven out of ten average people if they took proper care ought to live to the age of one hundred and ten years, which he thinks is the normal length of human life.

It is proposed to form a new state, taking a part of the three states of Minnesota, Wisconsin and Michigan, placing the three great iron ranges, the Vermillion, the Mesaba and the Gogebic within its boundaries and calling it Superior, "the mineral state."

That the convict released from prison should be given opportunity for an honest living is the thought of the Illinois Industrial Association, in its establishment of a broom factory, at 265 South Lincoln street, Chicago. The only regret is that work cannot be provided for all who apply.

Yale has followed the wise example of Boston University in extending the medical course to four years. The Western Christian Advocate rightly thinks that it would be a blessing if the right to confer medical degrees were limited to endowed universities. The temptation to allow candidates to slip through is almost irresistible in schools dependent upon tuition for support.

Rev. E. P. Rice, the son of a missionary who toiled for fifty years in India, has lately visited London. He is stationed at Bangalore, and is very hopeful in regard to the future of the work. Looking over the progress of the last century he called attention to the fact that at its beginning India had no prose literature, no book stores, and in a district where there are now 480 journals printed, there was not a single newspaper. In 1880 alone, 9,290 books in forty languages had been published.

The News Agents' Sociable Association is the name under which the news agents of New England have combined for benevolent and social benefit. The organization is to give relief to the needy and to furnish reading and innocent amusement to the members. The rooms are furnished with many home comforts which otherwise the young men could not enjoy. No liquor or cards are allowed. The young men who make up the membership are the boys who sell newspapers and periodicals on the railroads of New England.

An abstract from the German Imperial statistics shows that one-fifteenth of all the cultivated land in the country is devoted to the production of materials for the making of alcoholic drink. The liquor traffic employs directly 1,500,000 men out of the 20,500,000 engaged in German industries of every kind. The loss to the country in money through this diversion of land, capital and labor into the service of an industry which leaves the country no richer than before is estimated at 458,000,000 marks—an average loss to every family of eight persons of a sum large enough to keep a laborer's family of that size for eight weeks.

The International Board of the Women's and Young Women's Christian Associations have adopted the following resolution by unanimous vote:

"Resolved, That the secretary be instructed to write Miss Willard a letter expressing the hearty sympathy of the International Board in the plan of setting apart a portion of the noon hour daily for united prayer for the soldiers of Christ; that the president of each association in our body shall be asked to bring the matter before her association, and shall beg that so far as possible all join in observing this request without exacting any formal pledge."

Similar action has been taken by many of the largest philanthropic, reform and religious associations. The effort to belt the world with a spiritual current of united prayer for all those who work in His name for humanity is growingly approved by good people everywhere.

Sickness Among Children

is prevalent at all seasons of the year, but can be avoided largely when they are properly cared for. Infant Health is the title of a valuable pamphlet accessible to all who will send address to the N. Y Condensed Milk Co., N. Y. City.

HOW I LEARNED TO RIDE THE BICYCLE

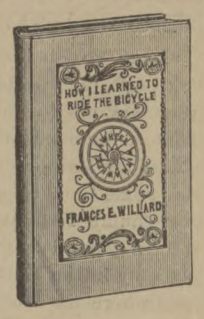
BY



Frances E. Willard

In her inimitable style Miss Willard tells in this dainty little volume her experience in learning to master a "steel steed," and as she graphically portrays the various situations leading from many failures to ultimate success, she has interwoven in delightful "side-talks" some exceedingly helpful and practical suggestions as to how failures and discouragements may be turned to success in life, never losing opportunity, as is her wont, to say that which ennobles and uplifts. It is really a fascinating little volume, appealing strongly to all that is best in physical and moral development.

Half-Fare Excursion via the Wabash

For the International Christian Endeavor Convention, which is to be held at Boston in July, the Wabash railroad offers a rate of one first-class, limited fare for the round trip. Tickets will be on sale at the Wabash ticket office, 97 Adams St., Chicago, July 5, 6, 7, 8 and 9. The Wabash has been selected as the official route from Chicago by the Christian Endeavor organizations of Iowa, Nebraska, Colorado, Illinois and Chicago. Secure your tickets via this route and go by the way of Niagara Falls. For map of Boston, time tables, full information as to routes, etc., send a postal card to F. A. Palmer, A. G. P. A., 97 Adams St., Chicago.

To Teachers and Others.

For the meeting of the National Educational Association at Denver, Colo., in July next, the Western trunk lines have named a rate of one standard fare, plus two dollars, for the round trip. Variable routes will be permitted. Special side trips at reduced rates will be arranged for from Denver to all the principal points of interest throughout Colorado, and those desiring to extend the trip to California, Oregon and Washington, will be accommodated at satisfactory rates. Teachers and others that desire, or intend attending this meeting or of making a western trip this summer, will find this their opportunity. The Chicago, Milwaukee & St. Paul Railway (first-class in every respect) will run through cars Chicago to Denver. For full particulars, write to or call on F. A. Miller, Assistant General Passenger Agent, Chicago, Ill.

THE INCOMPARABLE CHICAGO & ALTON

In these United States of America at least, and it is highly probable that throughout the entire world, the official record for the safety and welfare of its passengers made and maintained by the Chicago & Alton Railroad cannot be surpassed, if indeed it can be equaled.

Over its completely rock-ballasted, dustless roadway between Chicago and Kansas City, Chicago and St. Louis and St. Louis and Kansas City, eighteen magnificently appointed express trains are run on uniformly fast time every day. But in spite of this heavy passenger traffic the official records show that from December 4, 1879, to December 4, 1890, eleven years, there was no passenger, who was in place as a passenger, killed on Chicago & Alton trains. Moreover there was not a passenger seriously injured, to the extent of losing a limb, an eye or a member of any kind during that time.

During the entire period of the World's Columbian Exposition in Chicago, when it was not an uncommon thing to find the usual passenger traffic of the road increased two, three and four-fold, and special excursion trains and extra sections of regular trains were very many, there was not an accident of any kind—a most remarkable record.

Besides being America's most popular railroad, the Chicago & Alton is the Pioneer Dining Car Line, the Pioneer Pullman Sleeping Car Line, and the Pioneer Palace Reclining Chair Car Line.

Be sure that your ticket reads over the Chicago & Alton Railroad, when its matchless and direct lines can form the whole or even a part of your journey.

SINCE OUR LAST ISSUE.

Presidents of the various South American Republics are in session discussing plans for a union.

Vice-President Stevenson received the LL.D. last week from the Northwestern University at Evanston, Ill.

The members of the Chicago Y. M. C. A. who rode in the big cycling parade on Sunday, June 2, have been deservedly disciplined.

President Cleveland has issued a proclamation, forbidding the recruiting of armed forces in the United States for service against Spain.

Mrs. Harriet Beecher Stowe completed her eighty-third birthday, June 14. Numerous congratulations were received from home and abroad.

Illinois supreme court has dissolved the whisky trust, technically known as the Distilling and Cattle Feeding Company. The reign of "trusts" seems doomed.

Manitoba has politely but firmly refused to comply with the demand of the Dominion government to establish separate schools for Roman Catholics in the province.

Governor Morton, of New York, has signed the amended scientific temperance instruction bill, passed by the legislature last winter and so strongly resisted by the state superintendent of public schools.

W. W. Taylor, the absconding treasurer of South Dakota, has been returned to the state by his bondsmen, who by this act are relieved of liability, as Taylor turns over $100,000 in cash and all his property to the state.

It was reported last week that the Indiana State Liquor League had offered ex-President Harrison a retaining fee of ten thousand dollars to fight the Nicholson temperance law, and that he refused. Senator Voorhees is said to have accepted the fee.

In commemoration of the one hundred and eighteenth anniversary of the adoption by Congress of the Stars and Stripes as our national emblem, Governor Brown, of Maryland, on June 14, invited the school children of the land, through the governors of the respective states, to contribute to the fund which is being raised to erect a monument over the grave of Francis Scott Key, author of "The Star Spangled Banner."

AGAIN have the relatives of the late Mrs. Mary A. Woodbridge been called to mourn for a loved one. Dr. M. L. Brooks, husband of Mr. and Mrs. Woodbridge's eldest daughter, fell last Tuesday in Cleveland, in the act of stepping from a street car and fractured his skull, which resulted in death two days later. White-ribboners will extend great sympathy to the wife and family in this second severe bereavement within eight months.

IT seems to us that the London Convention must surely send an expert worker to Japan. We had hoped that we might have satisfactory volunteers who would go if the passage money were furnished, in view of the fact that temperance friends in Japan agreed to help open the way. Our honored and trusted friend, Sho Nemoto, has mentioned the name of Rev. K. Miyama and his wife, who would give us their services for four hundred dollars a year and would pay their own traveling expenses. Our leaders are also in correspondence with capable and gifted missionary women and a decision will probably be reached at the Convention now in session.

INADVERTENTLY we failed to notice, in our last issue, the election of Mrs. A. S. Benjamin to the state presidency of Michigan. It is well known that Mrs. Benjamin has filled this position by appointment of the executive since Mrs. Lathrap's death in January, and it was not doubted that she would be elected by the annual convention. It was doubtless difficult for the Michigan women to select a successor to Mary T. Lathrap, the "White-ribbon Daniel Webster," who had served them so valiantly for thirteen years, but no wiser choice could have been made. This election is not only an honor to the state and to the National W. C. T. U., but a triumph of merit and modesty, for it is safe to say that no white-ribboner in all our ranks is less self-seeking and self-praising than Mrs. A. S. Benjamin, of Portland, Mich.

SIR GEORGE WHITE, commander-in-chief of the British army in India, has added to the testimony of his predecessor, Lord Roberts, an important temperance statement. He says that more than twenty-two thousand men, or about a third of the entire army in India, belong to the Army Temperance Society, an increase of nearly nine thousand in four years. He says that the temperance men contrast most favorably with the non-abstainers in conduct and that out of eleven hundred court-martials only thirty-nine were for the purpose of trying members of the temperance association. He also admits that of the 2,000,680 court-martials, the temperance men in the army contributed nearly eight hundred less prisoners than would have been their share if they had contributed according to the ratio of the rest of the army, and he then makes the frank admission that nearly all the crime in the British army is directly or indirectly traceable to drink.

THE success of the World's W. C. T. U. depends on the amount of confidence and enthusiasm that it can inspire in the great missionary population of distant countries. American missionaries are almost without exception total abstainers, and this habit of life is steadily on the increase among all the good men and women who are spreading a knowledge of Scriptural holiness throughout the world. Our temperance text-book, "The Child's Health Primer," has been translated into Chinese and Hawaiian, and our "Hygiene for Young People" into Japanese, Norwegian and Swedish; while in Bulgaria, Siam, Natal and Turkey these books are gradually coming to be known and highly thought of by the school authorities. "Health for Little Folks" has been translated into Finnish. Pundita Ramabai has introduced scientific temperance instruction into her school, and the native people everywhere sympathize heartily with our strong position against the use of alcoholics and of opium.

THE heart of the Temple founder was made to rejoice last week by a gift of five thousand dollars from Mr. Daniel H. Burnham, the World's Fair architect. Mr. Burnham was a partner of the late Mr. John W. Root, the architect of the Temple, and has always had a keen interest in the future of the Temple. This gift is conditioned, as is Mr. Field's, upon raising three hundred thousand dollars by January 1, 1896. Other gifts of large amount are about being consummated, and within the last few days, the wheels have begun coming in so rapidly that Mrs. Carse is greatly encouraged. If the women will send the littles, Mrs. Carse will secure the large amounts.

ON Saturday morning came the glad tidings of the safe arrival of the S. S. Berlin, carrying our delegates and friends to the World's W. C. T. U. convention in London. The message was dated London, 6: 24 a. m., June 15. The specially arranged code-word "Ablution," was sent to THE UNION SIGNAL, which being interpreted meant, "Arrived. All well. Had splendid passage. Not seasick." Unless the mails are delayed, Miss Stewart's account of the voyage will appear in next week's issue. A cable dispatch from London, June 16, reports two hundred pulpits of the great metropolis filled by white-ribboners. The great meeting of the day was at Dr. Parker's City Temple where Miss Willard, Lady Somerset, Mother Stewart and Miss Kearney spoke.

LAST week we announced the two weeks' holiday for THE UNION SIGNAL, and tried to make it clear that only this paper would take a vacation. The W. T. P. A. proper will continue to "do business at the old stand," and the work will go on just as usual. Orders for literature will be promptly filled, and subscriptions for all our papers will be received with the usual alacrity. The offices, editorial and otherwise, will be open to callers, and all important letters will be answered and filed. So many have surmised that the managing editor has joined the World's Convention party, and have hesitated about communicating with her for that reason, that she hereby states that she has "stayed by the stuff," and that the editor-in-chief, Miss Willard, and associate editor, Miss Stewart, are representing the paper at the great triennial gathering in London.

JUST before we go to press comes a copy of the address of Lady Henry Somerset, to be delivered before the nineteenth annual council of the British Women's Temperance Association in London, June 17. We have time and space only for one paragraph from the eloquent address:

"In 1840, when Wendell Phillips and William Lloyd Garrison, those flaming heralds of emancipation, came from Boston, Mass., as delegates to a great meeting in London, Mrs. Lucretia Mott, of Philadelphia, that famous Quaker lady than whom a nobler type has never been produced on either side of the water, came with them. She, too, had been elected a delegate to the English meeting, but our sturdy Britons refused her credentials, and, because she was a woman, she was relegated to the gallery as a mere looker-on, and the two brilliant American men, whose names are now immortal, and whose work rendered the continuance of African slavery impossible in the great republic, declined to sit as delegates with men who had shown such injustice, and went themselves to the gallery with their sister, whose name—disavowed in that circle of reformers—has become a star of the first magnitude in the galaxy of the great reformers. That was fifty-five years ago, and to-day we welcome a shipload of American women who are among the most thoroughly equipped and best-known women reform workers of the world; and the British mind is so enlarged that more than two hundred pulpits and mission halls were open to them yesterday in conservative old London. And they will speak to thronging audiences in the largest auditoriums that the world's capital can furnish."

ONE BY ONE.

BY LUELLA CLARK.

One by one the days go by;
Dark or fair, they do not stay;
One by one they dawn, they die,
Bearing all their gifts away.

Days of joy and days of grief,
Each with offerings all its own—
Opening roses, falling leaf—
Each related, each alone.

Something each to do or bear—
Each its task and each its rest;
Each the burden of its care,
Care that gives to joy its rest.

Never when surpassing fair
Will they linger when we plead;
Never hasten for our prayer
When in grief we bid them speed.

One by one they come, they go;
Fleeing onward, fateful, stern,
Like the river's ceaseless flow,
Onward, never to return.

JED'S WIFE COULDN'T VOTE.

BY JULIA D. PECK.

"Are you going to vote for license, to-morrow, Jed?"

"Mebbie I shall and mebbie I shan't," was the guarded reply.

"That's sufficient. You don't need to say any more. Anybody that is going to vote 'no-license' ain't ashamed to tell of it. Well, Jed, if the Lord had made me in His image and I went by the name of a man I'd try to live up to it." And Jed's wife looked the scorn she felt.

"Women can talk—that's easy enough, but they don't know what they'd do if they was men," said Jed. "Some of the principal men in town think just as I do about it. Good church members, too. Mebbie their opinion is worth as much as yours."

"Good church members, are they? Well, I pity the church then. I know the Lord must be ashamed of them—"

"Hold on, Tryphena, that's going a little too far," said Jed, uneasily. "Women are so unreasonable; they can't argue without getting so excited you can't do nothing with them and they don't know nothing about politics anyway. They'd better keep in their own sphere. I don't try to teach them how to make bread or darn stockings."

"If they don't know nothing about politics," said Tryphena, "they know about that poison that causes them more sorrow and abuse and wretchedness and sends more of them to untimely graves, than anything else under the sky."

"You don't look at the subject in the right light," said Jed, reaching for his hat. "Somebody is going to sell it anyway you can fix it, and they might as well pay for it. It will be a good thousand dollars in the town's pocket, if we license."

"Oh, Jed Sparks! you make me sick. Ever since the world was made weak men have used that argument to palliate their weakness and stifle their consciences. If there is anything original to say, in excuse for your conduct, do say it, I beg. But, of course, there isn't anything new. It's best to license rum-selling because somebody is bound to sell it anyhow; and it's best to license murder and theft and polygamy and every other sin because somebody is going to do these things and we might as well make some money out of it. If you want any of the miserable 'blood money' wrung from the broken hearts of wives and mothers, go vote for license."

"That's just what I'm going to do to-morrow, and all you can say won't turn me, Tryphena Sparks. You just write that down."

Tryphena sat very still for several minutes after the door closed behind her husband, then she arose and went about her work.

"No, I shall not write it down," she said to herself, "and perhaps you won't cast any vote to-morrow, Jed Sparks."

When Mr. Sparks came home to supper he was surprised to find his wife awaiting him with a smile of welcome instead of the look of scorn which was on her face when he left her. She did not even allude to the disagreement of the morning. When supper was nearly over she said, in her most persuasive tone:

"Let's go over to Clayton's this evening. They have asked us to come and eat warm sugar and there'll be a moon about the time we shall come home."

"All right," said Jed; "when will you be ready?"

Mrs. Sparks' brother Clayton lived three miles from the village on a farm, and an evening spent with him and his wife at the farm-house was always an enjoyable one. Besides, they were strong temperance people and Mrs. Sparks felt sure they would aid her in carrying out her little scheme.

While the men were taking care of the horse Tryphena had a little private conversation with her brother's wife.

"We'll help you all we can, you may be sure," Mrs. Terry assured her. "I will manage to have a few words with Clayton when he comes in. He is very much waked up on the subject of license."

"Be sure to tell him not to mention town meeting to Jed," said Mrs. Sparks.

When the men came in they talked over the news for a while, then Mrs. Terry said:

"What do you think about having 'An Old Folks' concert,' Jed? There is nothing people like better, and we've got plenty of good singers in town who will be glad to help if you'll agree to train them. I believe we could make a hundred dollars towards repairing the church."

"I'm ready for anything of that kind," answered Jed. "You may count on me every time."

They were all fond of music and whenever they were together a part of the time was spent in singing. Mr. Sparks had taught "singing schools" in all the towns around.

"You run over and ask Joe Bangs and his wife to come over, and I'll hunt up the old singing books and we'll try some of 'ye ancient hymns.'"

Mrs. Terry brought out an armful of books, their neighbors joined them, and soon the house rang with the old time melodies. One after another favorite was called for and the hours went by unheeded. But at last Jed closed his book and started to his feet.

"It must be time for us to be going home," he said. "I'm surprised at you, Tryphena. You never think you can be out after sundown. What is the matter of your clock, Emma?"

Mrs. Terry glanced up at the clock.

"Well, if that hasn't stopped again," she remarked. "But it can't be very late. Here is 'Coronation,' we must try that."

Jed sat down again and opened his book. He could sing as long as any one, he thought. Then Mr. Terry said:

"There's 'Cousin Jedediah.' That's a good one to close with. That always brings down the house."

It really seemed as if it would "bring down the house" over their heads, but strangely enough it remained intact.

"Now we'll have some warm sugar," said Mrs. Terry, rising. "You put it over didn't you, Clayton?"

"No," said Mr. Terry, "I left that for you."

"I'm afraid we ought not to wait," said Tryphena, "I'm sure it must be late."

"I shan't go home till I have some warm sugar, if I stay all night," said Jed. "That's what I came for."

"Of course you won't," said Mrs. Terry, "and we will have it very soon. Clayton, you see there is a good fire; I'll have it on directly."

But the fire seemed to be in a perverse mood, and the syrup was long in coming to a sugar boil.

"You men get some snow. There is a big drift down to the lower end of the orchard," said Mrs. Terry. And when they were gone she said: "I thought it would burn fast enough with green wood. Jed doesn't mistrust it is three o'clock, or of the pit we've dug for him to fall into."

"I only hope he'll fall into it," said Tryphena. And then those wicked schemers laughed merrily.

When the men came back with the snow Mrs. Terry tried the sugar, but it did not wax.

"It will be done in a very few minutes now; you get some nuts and crack, Clayton, and it will be ready," she said sweetly.

At last it was ready and was delicious enough to pay for the long waiting. Jed sat down his empty saucer, after having it filled three times, with a sigh of satisfaction, and reached for his hat.

"Oh, Jed, I want to ask you about that mowing machine that you are agent for," said Clayton. "Are you sure that it is the best one on the market?"

Jed sat down again and Mrs. Terry drew Tryphena into the other room to show her a new dress.

"You won't start for half an hour now they have got to talking mowing machine," she said. And the little clock in the pantry pointed to the figure four before they were fairly on the way. They had not gone far when they heard some one calling, and Jed reined up his horse as he saw a man beside the road.

"Is that you, Jed Sparks?" he called out. "Well, that is fortunate! I had started for the doctor. My little girl is sick, and my wife hates dreadfully to be left alone. Would you call to Dr. Fletcher's and ask him to come as quick as he can? It would be a great accommodation."

"Providence is going to help me out," said Tryphena to herself, while Jed answered:

"Oh, certainly; I'll send him along. Half a mile out of the way," he grumbled. "I wouldn't a bit wonder if 'twas one o'clock by the time we get home."

"Jed Sparks! you ought to be ashamed if you can't do a little thing like that for anybody in need," said his wife.

"Perkins' wife is always sending for the doctor," said Jed. "She's always worrying about something."

Tryphena was glad when they finally reached home to find that the clock had run down at twelve o'clock.

"'Tisn't so late as I expected," Jed remarked, looking at the clock. "I nearly got to sleep unharnessing."

It was late when she awoke the next morning. Jed was snoring soundly, and she crept out of bed and out of the room, closing the door softly behind her. She had taken the precaution the day before of shutting the blinds and pulling down the shades, so not a ray of light could enter. All the morning she watched the front door that no one should ring the bell, and the house was as silent as a church on a week day.

But at last the bedroom door opened and Jed came out.

"What did you want to hurry up so for?" he asked. "Couldn't you wait for me to make the fire?"

"No, Jed," his wife answered, sweetly, "I really didn't feel as if I could. You see, dear, you overslept this morning. Clayton called in a few minutes ago and said the town meeting had adjourned and the 'no-license' men won the day by one vote. You just write that down!"

Jed's wild eyes sought the clock. The hour hand pointed to the figure three.

CIVIC REFORM.

News, Notes and Comments.

BY LA SALLE A. MAYNARD.

Secretary of the Patria Club, of New York, Member Executive Committee American Institute of Civics, etc.

The notion that the American people have nothing to learn in the way of higher and better methods of government from the so-called effete monarchies and older civilizations of the world can no longer be entertained by any intelligent mind. As a matter of fact, the greatest and most salutary civic reforms now in progress in this country were imported from other lands. For our new and better safeguards around the ballot-box we are indebted primarily to Australia where the first blanket ballot law was enacted in 1858. From the kangaroo country the secret ballot system came to England in 1872, thence to Canada, and finally, in 1888, to Massachusetts. Now there are only four states in the Union—Georgia, Louisiana and the two Carolinas—which have not reformed their ballot laws upon the Australian model. Civil service reform, which has already done so much for purer and more efficient government here, is also a plant of foreign birth. It has flourished in England for more than fifty years, and was long ago recognized there as an absolutely essential feature of every department of public service—the only thing that can insure an economical, efficient and business-like administration of public affairs.

So we have been learning recently from Mr. James Bryce, Mr. Albert Shaw, and other writers, that in respect to such matters as street lighting, street cleaning, sanitary regulations, gas and water supply, parks and tenements, the municipalities of Berlin, Paris, London, Glasgow and Birmingham are far in advance of anything we have to show. In fact, so far as municipal government goes, we are compelled to acknowledge the justice of Mr. Bryce's criticism that that is our one conspicuous failure. Other competent critics are not so charitable as that. Ex-president White, of Cornell University, declares that our city governments are the most corrupt, the most inefficient, and the most expensive of any in the world. It is high time evidently that we imported other reforms in addition to the civil service and the blanket ballot. We ought to sit humbly for awhile at the feet of Glasgow and Birmingham.

The ballot reform movement has made a large and positive gain by the recent enactment of the Raines ballot law in New York state. This law provides for a blanket ballot with the candidates of the parties arranged in perpendicular columns, surmounted by emblematic designs for the guidance of illiterate voters. For example, if the labor party is represented on the ballot, its column of candidates will be headed with a bended arm and hammer; the Prohibition column will be indicated by a glass of water, etc. The new law will also do away with the paster ballot, a vicious device for the corruption of the suffrage. One objectionable feature of the Raines law insisted on by the professional politicians in the legislature, is a clause providing that physically disabled voters may obtain assistance in preparing their ballot by selecting two officials of opposite political faith t accompany them into the voting booth. This provision was opposed by the ballot reformers on the ground that it would open the door to fraud and bribery. This abuse is guarded against, however, in some measure by another section of the law requiring that physically disabled voters shall make oath to their disability at the time of registration previous to each election day. On the whole the Raines law is a great advance upon the cumbrous, tedious and expensive system which it supersedes.

. . . . . .

No American citizen has ever lived who had a clearer vision, or who held up a nobler standard of civic duty than the late Phillips Brooks, Bishop of Massachusetts. He was a true New Englander in his ideas of love and loyalty to the nation which claimed his allegiance. Not long before his death, in a public speech, Bishop Brooks made use of the following language, which deserves to be written in letters of living light: "I plead with you for all that makes strong citizens. First, clear convictions, deep, careful, patient study of the government under which we live, until you not merely believe it is the best in all the world, but know why you believe. And then a clear conscience, as clear in private interests, as much ashamed of public as of private sin, as ready to hate and rebuke and vote down corruption in the state, in your own party, as you would be in your own store or church; as ready to bring the one as the other to the judgment of the living God. And then unselfishness; an earnest and exalted sense that you are for the land, and not alone the land for you; something of the self-sacrifice which they showed who died for us from '61 to '65. And then activity; the readiness to wake and watch and do a citizen's work untiringly, counting it as base not to vote at an election, not to work against a bad official or to work for a good one, as it would have been to shirk a battle in the war. Such strong citizenship let there be among us; such knightly doing of our duties on the field of peace."

. . . . . .

Perhaps the most notable evidence of the remarkable development of public interest in civic matters now in progress in this country, is the great number of societies, local, state and national, recently formed, having for their object the promotion of various civic and political reforms. Time and space would fail us even to mention the names of such organizations formed in the past six months. No less than thirty Civic Clubs, Patriotic Guilds, Civic Federations and Good Government Clubs were represented at the first annual meeting of the National Municipal League recently held in Cleveland, and these comprised only a small fraction of the whole number of such bodies. A Civic Centre has recently been organized in Washington, D. C., and is already doing practical service. A new Civic Federation has been formed in Kansas City, Kan., having for one of its chief objects the suppression of liquor "joints." Youngstown, Ohio, has a new organization of the same name which is just now engaged in securing an enforcement of the Sunday laws. A local Christian Citizenship League has been formed in Philadelphia, which has for one of its declared purposes "to confer and act in concert with the civil authorities in all matters which may promote the moral and physical welfare of the people, especially in the suppression of vice and immorality, in public and in private." The national organization of this same name now has auxiliary Leagues organized in Illinois, Iowa, Kansas and other states. Organizations under various names, but having for their common object the elevation of the standards of citizenship, have been formed in Hartford, Conn., New Brunswick, N. J., Toledo, O., Beloit, Wis., and scores of other towns and cities. In view of all these things we may well join in the hopeful strain of Dr. Parkhurst who said, in a recent address in Boston on the outlook for municipal reform, that no "man who believes in God and sleeps well nights has a right to be pessimistic."

. . . . . .

The Patria Club, of New York, an organization devoted to the promotion of civic knowledge, begins its work at the foundation of things by devising a plan for the development of genuine patriotism among children. A part of this plan consists in a series of prize contests among the boys and girls in the schools of the Children's Aid Society and other charitable institutions of the city, the test of merit being the highest grade of proficiency in singing national songs, in patriotic recitations, and other exercises of this order. The first competitive exhibition was held in the Assembly Hall of the United Charities Building in the afternoon preceding Decoration Day. Nearly two hundred little children, representing twelve schools and eight nationalities, took part in the exercises. The average of the children participating could not have been more than ten years, but they entered into their work with zeal, intelligence and spirit, and showed remarkable proficiency. Other competitive exhibitions will be held during the year. Among the members of the Patria Club having supervision of these contests are Judge Noah Davis and Mary Lowe Dickinson.

SEVEN REASONS FOR SABBATH REST.

BY REV. WILBUR F. CRAFTS.

There are seven reasons why the Sabbath should be observed and preserved as a day of freedom for worship and from work, save works of necessity and mercy.

First, because the law of the Sabbath is the law of Eden, where the Sabbath was made for man as soon as man was made. In six divine days God made the originals of all things physical, and on the seventh day the germ of all things spiritual when the Sabbath was made for man. As God completed his creative work among minerals, vegetables and animals in six divine days, and has devoted the seventh day in which we live to the spiritual work of redemption, with works of necessity and mercy in sustaining His creatures, but no new creations, so man, in his smaller week, was taught to imitate God, ceasing his work for gain after six days, except works of necessity and mercy, that the seventh day might be given to rest and religion in a larger measure than other days.

"Was Adam a Jew?" I was once asked by a deacon. The question had caused a war of words among the grown-up members of his family. They had finally concluded to end the war by arbitration, and so had referred the question to me. If Adam was a Jew, then the Sabbath is a Jewish institution—not otherwise. If the Jews only are sons and daughters of Adam, then the Jews only are heirs of Adam, and no others have any right in either the family or the Sabbath, both of which God originally gave to him. But if we are all sons and daughters of Adam, we are all heirs of Adam, heirs to those first two gifts of God to man before the fall, the family and the Sabbath.

"The Sabbath was made for man." So taught Moses. So said Christ. What revelation thus declares reason confirms. Why should any one suppose that a just God would sentence us to fifty-two extra days of "hard labor" a year for being Gentiles? Hath not a Gentile muscles that need rest, and a mind that needs a day for fellowship, and a soul that needs a day for worship as well as a Jew? With this teaching of revelation and reason, the most ancient records make up a three-fold cord that cannot be broken at all. Wherever we search in the most ancient literatures, those of Assyria, Egypt, India, China, Greece and Rome, we find everywhere footprints of a primeval, universal Sabbath in the frequent and symbolic use of the sacred "seven" in poetry and prose, often in references to "seven days." For instance, discovered tablets in Assyria show that the Accadians, the immediate descendants of Noah, marked in their calendars the seventh, fourteenth, twenty-first and twenty-eighth days of each month—seven days apart—as days of rest from certain forms of labor, and called these rest-days Sabbatu. The very name Sabbath is older than the Jews, as well as the thing itself, which in the Accadian days of idolatry had become corrupted into an imperfect week and a partial rest which was nevertheless manifestly related to the Sabbath as recorded in Genesis. The proof that the Sabbath existed before the Jews was formerly only circumstantial, there being between the creation record and the Exodus only casual references to the "week" and to "seven days." But the ancient records discovered in recent years have made the claim that the Sabbath began with and belongs exclusively to the Jewish nation, a belated and benighted theory. The Sabbath is not Hebrew, but human and humane.

A second reason why the Sabbath should be observed is because it is a part of the Decalogue, the world's universal constitution, so recognized in the codes of Justinian, Charlemagne and Alfred, who built on the ten commandments, as a foundation, our modern civilization. The fourth commandment, which even theologians were formerly wont to call "positive," as distinguished from "moral," in the sense that it was arbitrary rather than based on the nature of things, has been in our day shown to be a natural law (there is no Saturday in it, but only a "seventh day" after six days of work), as truly "moral" as the command against adultery. The scientific argument for the Sabbath won a hygienic medal in the recent World's Fair in Paris, where ninety-nine years before the Sabbath had been assassinated as a useless requirement having no ground but church authority.

The fourth commandment has also suffered from the double assumption that the first table of the Decalogue includes the fourth commandment, and that all its laws relate exclusively to man's duties to God, none of which, therefore, should be incorporated in civil law. It is true that Christ's summary of the law suggests that love to God is the chief theme of the first table, and love to man of the second. And it is also true that nothing which is exclusively a duty to God should be enforced by civil law. But though the state may not compel worship, it may forbid public blasphemy as a "nuisance" not less offensive to a Christian population than indecent exposure, and not less surely injurious to public morals. As far as the Sabbath law is concerned, there is no reason to suppose that any but its first sentence was on the first table. People have been deceived by unwarranted pictures of the two tables, on church walls and elsewhere. We do not know where the law divided, but in the absence of evidence to the contrary, the prima facie case would be in favor of the middle period, which is that after the words, "Remember the Sabbath day to keep it holy." There also comes the change from laws relating chiefly to man's duties to God to laws relating to man's duties to man. "Remember the Sabbath day to keep it holy"; you can no more put that into enforceable civil law than you can put handcuffs on a sunset cloud. But the remainder of the commandment is as "civil" as anything that follows, for it relates to labor and rest, among parents and children, masters and servants, natives and aliens.

Those who admit that nine of the commandments are of universal authority, but ask us to believe that in the middle of such a code God inserted a temporary Jewish by-law about a temporary Jewish Sabbath, are hardly more absurd than those Christians who, accepting all the commandments as universal, treat that central one, the longest of all, as if it were least of all, regarding its violation as a much less serious offense than the violation of the command against stealing, which God, who could not misplace the emphasis in this, His only autographic revelation, wrote only one twenty-eighth part as long. Surely a man's rights in the lifeless things which a thief may steal, are that much less important than the rights attacked when one is constrained to break the Sabbath by work or dissipation—his rights to health, and so to life; his rights of conscience, and the rights of God! If we honored God's longest command even as much as the least, we could no more buy a Sunday paper than steal one; no more ride on a Sunday train than steal the money to pay the fare.

ENFORCEMENT OF LAW.

BY MARY E. METZGAR.

"But we know that the law is good if a man use it lawfully. Knowing this, that the law is not made for a righteous man, but for the lawless and disobedient, for the ungodly and for sinners, for unholy and profane, for murderers of fathers and murderers of mothers, for man slayers, for fornicators, for them that defile themselves with mankind, for men stealers, for liars, for perjured persons, and if there be anything that is contrary to sound doctrine."—I Timothy 1: 8-10.

In the year 1892 at an Illinois state W. C. T. U. convention, a new department called enforcement of law was created, its object being the better enforcement of laws. While we believe that in all work of reformation, the spirit of love should be in all and through all, we believe also the spirit of law should be recognized as an important factor. When we close a saloon or disreputable house, we confer a favor upon the inmates as well as remove a source of temptation, and we believe the Lord wants us to use as levers towards lifting weak, tempted humanity both love and law.

All states have some good laws upon their statute books against keeping saloons open and selling liquor on the Sabbath, selling to minors and habitual drunkards, keeping disorderly and disreputable houses; also providing for care of orphans and worse than motherless children. How shall we proceed to enforce them? First, appoint the wisest and most consecrated woman in the union as superintendent of this department, and let it be known that the union stands ready to aid in enforcing law. Next, secure the best evidence you can. This is often a difficult thing to do. It may come to you voluntarily or you may have to do as two women did in Rock Island, Ill., who spent a Sabbath afternoon bravely walking into the side and back doors of saloons.

After evidence is secured, take, if possible, one or more witnesses, or, if necessary, go alone to the justice of the peace or state's attorney. If the case is a violation of city ordinance, go before the justice of the peace and make your complaint. He will fill out a form which you sign, and then issue a warrant which it is his duty to see served. If the case is a violation of state law, go to the state's attorney. If you make your complaint by information it will go into the county court; or evidence can be given before the grand jury, then the case goes to the circuit court.

We would advise the women to make state cases whenever possible, to take them to the grand jury or the county court, because when taken before a justice of the peace, the defense generally demands a jury trial, which jury is usually composed of the saloon-sympathizing element, while in the circuit and county courts, the juries are composed of men from all over the county, and our cases are safer in their hands.

Some one asks: How are we to know the law? Study it as you would anything else you want to know. It would be a good thing, if, upon the table of every white-ribboner there were three books, the Bible, a copy of the state laws and a copy of the city laws.

It is the duty of the state's attorney to prosecute free of charge. One of the most hotly contested suits I have known in which a union was plaintiff did not cost the women one cent. If you feel your state's attorney is not equal to the successful carrying on of the case, a lawyer may be hired to help him, for whose fee the plaintiff or union will be responsible.

During the two years the Illinois women have carried on this line of work, their success has been surprising and encouraging, and the Lord has put His seal of approval upon it, as the women of Moline can testify. Before the state took up the work this union had a committee of enforcement of law. When the committee was appointed, some of the good friends, who in the past had stood nobly by the union with their money, took alarm and said: "You are making a great mistake. Your mission is to work along more womanly and less aggressive lines; if you persist in this work we must withhold the help we have given you in the past." The work went on, but with sympathy and support withheld to a large extent. The members of that union will never forget the next annual meeting when committees for the new year were to be appointed. Shall we retain the committee on enforcement of law? was the question. The little prayer-meeting that followed savored of Crusade times. The committee was retained without knowing where money was coming from to carry on the work.

A few weeks after, a wealthy widow died in our city, and a few days later a maiden lady, neither of them members of the union. In the will of one was a clause, bequeathing to the Woman's Christian Temperance Union of Moline, eight hundred dollars. In the will of the other was a clause giving one thousand dollars to the same organization. "The Lord does provide."

A few months ago a little girl fourteen years old was taken out of a saloon one Sunday night in a drunken condition. By Wednesday night, the saloon-keeper was placed under heavy bonds, his license revoked and the girl taken to the Industrial school in South Evanston.

It is hard work; only the blessed Lord knows how hard, but if it is faithfully and conscientiously carried on "in the fear of the Lord," our women will have not only joy by day, but "songs of joy in the night seasons," because of the blessing that will come to them.

WILLARD HALL, NOONTIDE LINKS.

He was tall, lean and ungainly; with more than his share of ugliness, so it seemed to me, but he straightened himself up in all the awkwardness of his six feet two and said:

"I helped to build this Temple. I helped to make Willard Hall beautiful as it is, and many a time I have laid down on this floor when beer had the best of me. Fourteen months ago I fell in with Jesus Christ, and, oh, what a comrade I have found Him. I ain't the same Bill any more. I've been down to the little village where I used to live, and every one says, 'Bill ain't the same Bill he used to be!' I hain't been in no saloon, nor used no tobacco, nor said a wicked word since me and Jesus got to be pardners."

. . . . . .

The ugly face grew positively handsome, even as a rose tint through a broken vase of alabaster glorifies the vase.

. . . . . .

The requests for prayers that come to me are enough to break a heart of stone. Verily, the Willard Hall noontide meetings stand for more to thousands of people than we know.

. . . . . .

But the thing that grieves me is to see the woman who built the Temple staggering under the load, when there is gold and silver to spare.

Let it be known that she carries all the financial burden of the rentals of Willard Hall, and any expense pertaining to the noon meetings, and that but for her they would cease.

THE METHODIST-WOMAN QUESTION IN ENGLAND.

DEAR UNION SIGNAL:—The following letter is from Miss Catherine Dawson, who was chosen by her Methodist friends as a delegate to the General Synod of Great Britain at its meeting last year, and was admitted to a seat, but with the understanding that the whole subject must come before the church. This will be done, with every prospect of a successful result, so far as women are concerned. Lady Henry Somerset and I were invited by Miss Dawson and the local Wesleyan pastor to speak before a district synod of the M. E. church near Reigate, and agreed to do so, but when the gentleman who is at the head of all the synods heard this, he vetoed the proceeding, with the declaration that it was "not in order," though the temperance meeting was in the evening, and was of a popular kind. There is a good deal of stir in Methodist circles in England on this subject, and the intolerance shown is far in excess of anything manifested in our own more progressive land. White-ribbon women will be interested in the letter of Miss Dawson.

Yours in service,
FRANCES E. WILLARD.

REDHILL, May 17, 1895.

DEAR MISS WILLARD:—Now the district synod is over, I am writing to express my deep regret at the action our chairman thought right to take with reference to you and Lady Henry Somerset taking part in the meeting held at the Market Hall on Wednesday evening. It was a public meeting, though in connection with the synod, and neither Mr. Camburn nor I thought we were committing the slightest irregularity in inviting you, and I am of the same opinion still! I have never felt more indignant and humiliated than when I heard that our president had decided that only members of the synod could be allowed to speak at that meeting. Sure I am that had John Wesley been chairman of the third London district this year he would have held out both hands to welcome the two elect ladies who had so kindly and graciously accepted our invitation to speak for the great cause of temperance on that occasion. I am more than sorry that you and Lady Somerset should have had this slight put upon you, but I have a firm conviction that out of this wrong good will come; it will hasten the time when our loved Methodist church will open her doors to their full extent, and men and women will sit side by side in all her meetings. I am hoping that the conference of 1895 will confirm the recommendation of the committee appointed to deliberate on the question of women being allowed to sit in conference. They will take their rightful place, and the day is not far off.

Forgive this long letter, and forgive, too, any annoyance or inconvenience you may have suffered through our action in inviting you. We meant well!

Yours faithfully,
CATHERINE DAWSON.

REINFORCEMENTS.

DEAR UNION SIGNAL:—I spent an hour this morning at Mountain Lake Park with dear Sister Jennie Smith, whom you will all be sorry to hear is sick in bed, but not too ill to think and talk of you all, especially the National officers. Her busy, active life must come to a halt, for tired nature to regain her wonted forces; but we trust the days will be few until she may be restored to her usual health again. Only one year since her companion, Addie Sherman, was stricken down and breathed her last in that beautiful mountain home. It is a magnificent spot; the most healthful climate and the purest atmosphere I ever experienced.

I have just closed a month's work in West Virginia and gave an address at Mountain Lake Park last evening. Now I am en route to Newark, N. J., to attend the state Prohibition convention on the 12th and 13th, after which I shall spend a few days in that state until the national conference at Prohibition Park. Then I expect to spend July in Cattaraugus county, under the auspices of the W. C. T. U. I have obtained three hundred new members to local unions since the call made in the last National Convention for each state to secure five hundred, and I shall not rest until I have obtained five hundred by my own efforts, and if each lecturer would do that much the Convention at Baltimore would report a strong reinforcement.

"THAT SISTER SPEAKS MY MIND."

DEAR UNION SIGNAL:—Miss Alice R. Palmer, in THE UNION SIGNAL of June 6, as to the importance of greater effort along the line of total abstinence for the individual, "speaks my mind," as well as Dr. Kate Bushnell's fine thought to make strong unions foster-mothers for weak ones. Miss Palmer's farther suggestion of how to go in and possess the land now unoccupied by W. C. T. U., I am certain, by observation and experience, is both wise and timely. We of the Rocky Mountains long for such a missionary who need not stay away from needy places for lack of the "needful." Miss Palmer's thoughts are sound and practical.

TENEMENT HOUSE REFORM.

DEAR UNION SIGNAL:—There are few reforms that have so strong a claim on the sympathies of those whose watchword is "Home Protection," as Tenement House Reform. It has been said truly by Mr. Riis that the foundation of our civilization is the family dwelling. The most serious obstacle met in attempting to civilize the negroes, the Indians, the slums, is the one-room family dwelling. The best results require one room for each, rather than one room for all the members of a family.

The most encouraging and instructive work in tenement house reform is that recently achieved by Mr. Richard Watson Gilder, editor of the Century, and his associates of the New York Tenement House Commission, who first made a thorough investigation and faithful report of the condition of the tenements of New York city, and then secured, even from the notoriously corrupt New York legislature, just adjourned, the enactment into law of all the commission's recommendations, which should be studied carefully by all friends of reform in the admirable summary which Mr. Gilder has prepared, and will, no doubt, send to all who are sufficiently interested to apply, with stamps, for a copy.

These new laws, for one thing, provide for thinning out tenements in crowded districts and putting in many small parks and playgrounds, of one block each. Another bill provides for an increase of sanitary inspectors and sanitary police, and puts them under civil service rules. Yet another bill provides added safeguards against fires in tenements, in which, though they constitute less than one-third of the buildings, more than half the New York fires have hitherto occurred. Rooms in tenements used for trying fats or for paints must be made fireproof and separated by walling up of doors and windows from other parts of the building. When walls are papered, the old paper must first be removed as a protection to health. The names of the owners of tenements must be filed and a new record entered whenever the property changes hands. More adequate provision than formerly existed is made for the condemnation of unsanitary buildings; for the limitation of the proportion of a lot that may be occupied with buildings, and for improved construction of future tenements. No tenement house can be used for a lodging house, stable or for the storage or handling of rags. Nor can a tenement house be used for a school except by special permit of the board of health. Dark halls, the scenes of dark deeds in the past, are forbidden—a light being required at all hours. "Whenever it shall be certified to the board of health by the sanitary superintendent that any tenement house or room therein being without sufficient ventilation is so overcrowded that there shall be afforded less than four hundred cubic feet of air to each adult and two hundred cubic feet of air to each child under twelve years of age, occupying such building or room, the said board shall issue an order requiring the number of occupants of such building or room to be reduced." The relation of the health and building departments is more exactly adjusted, so preventing friction. The effort of Trinity church to escape providing adequate water supply to its tenants has been defeated by the commission in the courts by the outlawing of a former tenement house water law. Through the efforts of the commission municipal baths and additional fountains and lavatories are being established.

The time was not yet ripe for New York to follow Liverpool and other foreign cities in erecting model tenements at moderate but self-supporting rents, but the wise and generous work of this commission of cultured and wealthy men in behalf of the poor and ignorant is one of the brightest outgrowths of Christian altruism and worthy both of study and imitation.

WILBUR F. CRAFTS.
National Bureau of Reforms, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SISTERS:—As our national jubilee day draws nigh many of you are planning to "observe." What band of people has a greater right to patriotic "doings" than we who are banded together "For God and Home and Native Land," to teach and preach the gospel of righteousness, to guard and uphold the home, and to wage war on the liquor traffic, our national curse.

The following letter from the recording secretary of the W. C. T. U. in Williamson, N. Y., may prove suggestive to those who are somewhat at a loss "what to do" on the Fourth:

"At our last annual meeting for election of officers (which is the first meeting in June) we voted to hold a 'Temperance Fourth,' and instructed our corresponding secretary to engage the pastor of one of our churches to deliver the oration, made some preliminary arrangements, and went home, full of hope and courage. But, alas, for human calculation! Two weeks later we heard that one of the adjoining towns was going to hold an old-fashioned celebration, and had engaged the band we had hoped to secure. Also that other neighboring towns were preparing for elaborate celebrations. It seemed altogether probable that every one we had hoped to benefit would leave town. However, we decided to go ahead and complete our plans as far as possible.

"The Fourth dawned clear and cool. At two o'clock the church where the gathering was to be held was packed. After an opening prayer by the Methodist minister, a brother Baptist read the Declaration of Independence. Chorus and congregational singing of appropriate selections filled us all with inspiration. After the address, which was full of pathos, power and patriotism, the audience was invited to the parlor to partake of refreshments. The patronage was liberal, expenses met and our treasury replenished, to say nothing of a 'temperance impression' made which we trust will be a lasting one."

Rally the boys and the girls on the Fourth. Be as liberal as possible with flags and bunting. If you can lay hands of peace on any number of children, provide an outdoor jollification for them in the evening, letting the honoraries and brothers-in-law manage the fire-works, thus saving the lads and lasses from various street experiences not to be desired. Lemonade, popcorn, flags, music, recitations and judiciously managed fire-works will make a safe, good time for any body of children, and all the "times" of the Fourth are not eminently "safe." It can be made a "temperance good time" by L. T. L's marching with banners and flags and singing temperance songs.

---

Lay in a good supply of temperance prohibition and patriotic literature. Impress honoraries and older L. T. L's into your service and by their aid send the good seed of the printed page, through picnics and public gatherings, into the homes of the people.

---

It is appropriate right here to mention temperance drinks, for July crowds are thirsty ones, and there is always abundant need for the knowledge of easily prepared temperance beverages to be substituted for freely flowing beer and other alcoholic beverages.

STRAWBERRY OR RASPBERRY WATER.

A nice drink for summer is made from a quart of good ripe berries, hulled and crushed in a bowl with a porcelain potato masher, mixing with this pulp four ounces of fine sugar and half a pint of cold water. Pour the mixture into a fine sieve, rub it through, and filter through fine muslin. Add the strained juice of a lemon and three half pints of cold water and ice.

FRUIT SHERBET.

Crush a quart of strawberries or other small fruit to a paste; add three pints of water and the juice of a lemon. Let the mixture stand two or three hours, then strain through a cloth to clear of seeds; add three-fourths of a pound of sugar and stir until dissolved. Add ice, and drink when quite cold. It is very delicious.

APPLE WATER.

Pare and core four fine, large, juicy apples and bake them. When baked quite soft all through, put them in a pitcher and fill with warm water. Simmer over the fire and when quite soft, mash them, and if necessary add more water until they become a thick liquid that can be drunk. Sweeten, and add lemon juice or rose water as desired. Drink it cool.

PINEAPPLE WATER.

Take a moderate sized pineapple, pare and slice it and pound to a pulp in a mortar. Put this into a bowl with the strained juice of a large, fresh lemon, and pour over it a pint of syrup made in the proportion of one pound of sugar to a pint of water, cover the jug which contains the liquid and leave it in a cool place for two hours or more; strain through a napkin and add two pints of cold water and serve.

OATMEAL DRINK.

Ingredients: Two ounces or two tablespoonfuls of fine Scotch oatmeal, one spoonful of brown sugar. Mix well together with cold water into a smooth paste, then add one quart of boiling water, stirring it all the time to avoid lumps. Add as much cold water as you please. It is then ready for use. A sliced lemon added is a great improvement.

BARLEY WATER.

Ingredients: Two and one-half ounces pearl barley, two quarts water, one lemon, sugar. Wash the pearl barley, simmer it in the two quarts of water until reduced to half. Strain it into a jug, add the thin rind and juice of half the lemon; sweeten to taste, and when cold strain again.

BLACKBERRY SYRUP.

Mash any quantity of blackberries, and to one quart of pulp add one pint of water; let it remain till the next day, then run it through a bag, and to every pint of juice add one pound of loaf sugar, broken small, and a little tartaric acid; boil for twenty minutes, and, when cold, bottle. Four tablespoonfuls to a tumbler of water.

If you have some of last season's grape jelly left over, it may be diluted with hot water (not dissolving readily in cold), and lemon juice and cracked ice added. This is especially nourishing for invalids.

In the LOCAL UNION of May 2, some one asked a question concerning the questioner stating that when the delicacy had been served she had declined to touch it; she wrote Mother Experience saying: "Are my views too extreme?" and Mother Experience, never having seen cider apple-sauce, but supposing she knew what it was, answered that the stand taken was not extreme and that this preparation is among those things which the W. C. T. U. does not taste nor handle nor indorse. But Mother Experience is enlightened now and is glad to quote from a letter written by one who knows:

CIDER APPLE-SAUCE

Cider apple-sauce, apple butter and apple jelly contain like material. First, the cider must be fresh from the mill, untouched by fermentation, else it will boil over and could not be used. Cider from sour apples is boiled down half, then sweet apples, pared, quartered and cored are put in, and all slowly boiled together for many hours without stirring. Then the amber-colored sauce is dipped into jars, and as it cools there forms on top a thick jelly, rendering the contents impervious to air. It will keep, if left undisturbed, for years, and is as free from alcohol as a Rhode Island greening when first picked from the tree in its unbroken jacket. All fruit juices, before fermentation takes place, are wholesome, and their use in food and drink should be approved by white-ribboners and no discrimination should be made between grapes and apples or other fruits. Let us stand for unfermented juices pure and simple, and teach owners of fruit orchards how to produce such juices and secure a market for them.

---

Apropos of the above comes an oft reiterated request for a recipe for making for sacramental purposes. The following is a sure and simple recipe: Express the juice of grapes as you do for jelly; heat immediately to the boiling point, bottle and seal exactly as you do fruit. Adapt the size of bottles or fruit jars to number of communicants, as the wine will ferment if left over from one communion to another, unless again heated and sealed. The juice may be sweetened before or after sealing.

UNFERMENTED WINE

There might be instances where grapes could not be procured, and no unfermented wine was obtainable. In that case the following directions for making would prove valuable. The extract is taken from a little work entitled "Alcohol in Society," and is a quotation therein from a Jewish authority:

"If you wish to make a small quantity for the communion table (for the wine will soon grow sour, having no alcohol) take a gallon demijohn or stone jug, pick three or four pounds of bloom raisins; break off the stems; put the raisins into the demijohn, and fill it with water. Tie a cloth over the mouth, and place the demijohn near the fire, to keep it warm. In about a week it will be fit for use, making a pure, pleasant and sweet wine, free from alcohol. . . . This is the wine we use on the night of the Passover, because it is free from fermentation, as we are strictly prohibited, not only from eating leavened bread, but from drinking fermented liquors."

---

Yours for a good use of God's good creations.

BY MATILDA B. CARSE.

Asa cried unto the Lord his God, and said, Lord, it is nothing with thee to help, whether with many, or with them that have no power: help us, O Lord our God; for we rest on thee, and in thy name we go against this multitude. O Lord, thou art our God; let not man prevail against thee. So the Lord smote the Ethiopians before Asa.—II Chron. 14:11, 12.

One hundred dollars is sent by Mrs. Emma S. Pike, from the W. C. T. U. of Upham's Corner, Mass. She closes her letter by saying: "May your hands be held up by all the women of the organization." If they were held up after the above method, soon every union in the land would be reaping a return from their investment, beside the impetus that would be given the work from the knowledge that the W. C. T. U. were sole possessors of their beautiful Temple. Oh, that the eyes of our women might be opened to see their great opportunity. We are glad to know that some of them are. One dear sister whose home is in Iowa, and does not want her name given, sends $100. She writes: "I am hoping and praying for the success of the Temple enterprise." Mrs. Freeborn Johnson, Providence, R. I., sends a check for $100, to place the name of her husband on the Rhode Island tablet; her own is already there. A white-ribboner in Baltimore, Md., writes: "I have long desired to help a little. I am praying for our Temple. I will be prepared when you come to the convention in October to give you $100." Another white-ribboner, from St. Louis, in sending a filled Wheel, says: "The Temple is not forgotten in my will." Mrs. Catharine Compton, Urbana, O., bequeathed on her death-bed $25 to the Temple. Her executor, Mr. Chatham, in sending a check for this amount, writes: "The success of the Temple and its objects were very dear to her."

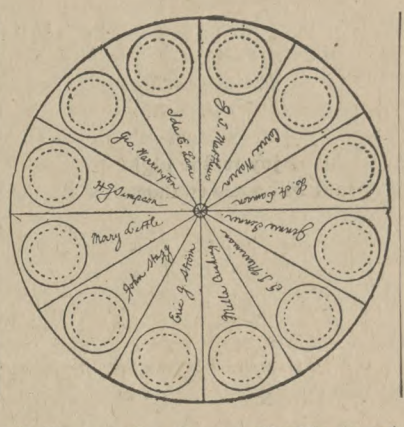
BOYS AND GIRLS, JOIN THE GREAT WHEEL RACE. REMEMBER BY JANUARY



THE THREE WHO FILL THE MOST WHEELS WILL GET $100, $50, $25, PRIZE.

Mrs. W. F. Stewart, Sea Breeze, Florida, in returning a filled Wheel, says: "I hope the device may prove to be the wheel of fortune." It certainly would if our dear women would only send them back to us quickly; but their tardiness in returning them is spoiling the plan very much. Mrs. M. A. Gillette, Kingman, Kan., writes: "I want to tell you about our Wheel tea, hoping some other unions who are too poor to do much will do the little we did. There were only four members at the meeting when it was proposed. The member with the large house offered the use of it and was made chairman of program committee. Another was given charge of the music, the third charge of the Wheels, and the writer was to see to refreshments and advertising. I managed to get the program in our weekly paper (the only one we have). I invited everybody to our Wheel tea to see the Wheels go round, telling them an admission of ten cents would be charged, but nothing extra for refreshments. We had solo and duet singing, beside singing of marching songs by children, a talk on the Temple and a recitation, 'What Means this Stone?' The house was decorated with flowers, and ice cream, cake and coffee were served in the dining-room. There was a large picture of the Temple on an easel near a table where sat our president writing the names on the Wheels. It was a delightful social, and yesterday we returned as a result of it eleven filled Wheels. The balance of the twenty sent us have been distributed, and we hope to get them all filled. I give you details so that you may tell other unions how to try to help just a little. Knowing that if every union would do the little that even a small one composed of four women did the debt would soon be lifted and your heart be relieved of its God-given burden."

Very sacred are the contents of a mite-box just received. It was filled by a little brother and sister, Charles and Anna Phelps, St. Mary's, O. In April a dark shadow filled the home; little Charley was taken very ill; a few days of painful suffering; suddenly the gates swung ajar, and a glorious light filled the house; the little sufferer looked up, and with extended arms exclaimed: "There is Jesus; He is come for me. Good-bye, papa,"—and he was gone; and another angel brightened heaven. Little Burrell Burgess, Detroit, Mich., although only five years old, has filled two mite-boxes, and now sends a filled Wheel. We want an army of such boys.

All orders for Temple Wheels and mite-boxes and everything pertaining to the Temple should be addressed to Mrs. Matilda B. Carse, The Temple, Chicago. Send two cent stamp for either the Temple Wheel or mite-box. Money orders and checks should be made out in the name of Mr. G. B. Shaw, treasurer, and sent to our financial secretary, Miss Sara G. Johnson, Room 1111, The Temple, Chicago.

PEACE.

BY HELEN W. GIBSON.

Lord, give Thy holy quiet to this troubled breast,
Thy quietness divine;
To many a weary soul has come Thy perfect rest—
Let it now come to mine!
Thou hast done much for me, I own the mighty power
That rules my proud self-will,
I love the voice that oft in passion's wildest hour
Still speaketh, "Peace, be still."
I thank Thee for the glorious "joy unspeakable"
That oft my soul hath known,
In sweetest hours of holiest fellowship
'Twixt Thee and me alone!

Yet these are but the "hidings of Thy power," the pledge
Of greater things in store,
Drops of that well whereof my soul may drink so deep
That it shall thirst no more.
I want the fullness of Thy great salvation, Lord,
Fullness of life in Thee,
Life that nothing knows of sin or earthliness,
The life of Christ in me;
The fullness of the Holy Spirit's power,
That blessed inner calm
Born of His conscious presence, gladdening all my life
Into one restful psalm.

When Thou such quietness as this dost give, O God,
Who then can trouble make?
What noise of earthly tumult, loud though it be and strong,
That deep repose can break?
It is not that earth's pains grow less, but that Thy peace
Surpasses all the pain;
The heart that knows Thy sympathy in grief can feel
No bitterness again.
Let but this "deep, unutterable" peace of Thine
For aye with me abide,
Fold me forever thus within Thy arms of love,
And I am satisfied.

WOMAN'S MUNICIPAL LEAGUE.

BY FRANCES E. WILLARD.

William Howe Tolman, Ph. D., secretary of the City Vigilance League, of New York, was the right-hand man of Dr. Parkhurst in his great crusade. He has just brought out what he calls a "Text Book of the New Reformation," a full account of the municipal reform movements of the United States, showing what they are and how they work. The book has an introduction by Dr. Parkhurst, entitled, "Facts for the Times."

It seems to me our local unions could not do better than to study this book together and act upon its reasonable and wise suggestions. To my mind, the most interesting chapter in the book is the account of the women's part in the great reform movements in the United States, which was led by Mrs. Josephine Shaw Lowell. It began by a suggestion of reporters to Mrs. Lowell that women ought to help. At first she thought that she could give no time to such an undertaking, but her conscience worked upon her to that degree that she finally called on Dr. Parkhurst with her daughter and asked him if he had any definite plan by means of which women could help. With the true instinct of a Presbyterian minister he answered, "No." Mrs. Lowell then asked if he would speak at women's meetings once a week until the election, with an audience invited by card and selected from the "Social Register," because Mrs. Lowell felt that the up-town women had the least appreciation of their civic duties, and if their interest could be aroused, they, in turn, would arouse the men. To this Dr. Parkhurst agreed, but suggested in addition that meetings should be held for the down-town women.

The first meeting was held in the Young Men's Christian Association Hall, and three thousand postal cards of invitation were sent out. Meanwhile a committee of thirty women had been formed, who met Mrs. Lowell and Dr. and Mrs. Parkhurst an hour before the public meeting. Three sub-committees were chosen, one on down-town meetings, a second on publication, and a third on drawing-room meetings. It was Mrs. Lowell's purpose that the organization should tell women the truth regarding the condition of the city, impress them with the fact that they had duties to the public, and induce the women to make the men of their families realize their political obligations and urge them to do their duty at the coming election.

In pursuance of this object twenty public meetings and fifteen drawing-room meetings were held. For the first time in the history of the American people women worked side by side with men in almost every department of political organization. They convened meetings, addressed public audiences, circulated literature and petitions, pledged men to vote right, and were universally recognized as one of the forces in securing the victory that followed. The distribution of leaflets on municipal subjects was one of their best thoughts. The questions and answers were so much to the point that we give them:

HAVE I ALL MY RIGHTS?

I.

"Is the street in which I live dirty and unhealthy for my children to play in? Yes.

"Then it is because the Tammany city government wastes the money to make it clean.

II.

"Do I have water enough, especially for flushing the closets?

"If not, it is because the Tammany city government allows it to be wasted, and me to be robbed of that which it is my right to have, by those who pay Tammany for it.

III.

"Is there water standing in the cellar which makes my family sick and my doctor's bill big?

"The health board of New York is run by Tammany Hall.

IV.

"Are the public schools so overcrowded that my children cannot go to school because there is no place for them? They are.

"This is because the Tammany city government wastes the money which I have helped to give to build more schools and hire more teachers.

V.

"Have I been compelled, under threats of arrest or stopping my business, to pay the police for protection in addition to the cost of my license?

"If I have not, many of my friends who keep street-stands, hucksters' wagons, or who are venders of wares of all kinds, have had to do so.

"The police force of New York is run by Tammany Hall."

RESPONSIBILITY OF MOTHERS.

BY MRS. M. E. GOODMAN.

There are many things in the immediate environment of children which mothers cannot control that tend to mould character and constitution. There are circumstances of poverty or wealth, accidents which produce sickness or deformity, surroundings which are unfortunate, or even criminal, which no mother can prevent. For all these she is in no sense responsible and need not burden her conscience, however much she may deplore them.

The responsibility of parents for physical development is very great, and the mother's share in it is overpowering. The time has gone by when it was considered unnecessary and out of place for a young woman to give thought to the study of her own body. It is within my own recollection that Mrs. Emma Willard, a pioneer in the higher education of women, introduced the study of physiology in her seminary at Troy, N. Y. It was an unheard of innovation, and a lady educated there who went to an academy in the same state to teach, relates that she attempted to introduce this study in her own classes and many mothers objected. She maintained her position, however, and on the day of public examination called the class forward to recite, when a number of ladies rose and left the room! Yet the book used was but the simplest outline of anatomy and physiology, prepared expressly for schools. But in the present day mothers are almost without excuse if they do not know something of their own physical make-up.

For pre-natal influence the mother is responsible. She is responsible, too, for the direct physical training of her children. No mother has a right to leave the preparation of food wholly to others. She must herself make a study of such matters part of her daily duty. Children's food, methods of dress, exercise and physical training, are now well understood and their study popularized to such an extent that it is easy to obtain all needed information on these points, leaving mothers without excuse for ignorance.

Especially is this true of the nature and influence of stimulants and intoxicants. The day was when infants were bathed with rum or brandy, and many infantile complaints treated with alcoholic combinations. Much food was also prepared with liquor. We are thankful that these customs are in large measure abolished, and in no way are temperance people doing better service than in spreading the news of this better method.

Besides the physical training of children she also has the care of their moral training. Almost before she dreams of it, the little eating and breathing machine which she has fondled much like an animated doll, begins to manifest that he has a will of his own, and the mother is puzzled to know when she must begin to train her baby to obey the right. She who permits her little one to slap her angrily because he is not pleased, may depend upon it if she does not show him the error then and win obedience, she will not be able to do so in years to come. As the child grows a little older lay down as the first principle of your discipline, that you must be obeyed, and it will save you and the child much pain later on and result in lifelong good for the little one. If we had the habit of obedience thoroughly secured at home we should have less trouble with the discipline of schools, and less violation of the laws of God and man.

To so educate the conscience of the child that he knows what is right and is willing to do it, is the one great attainment of moral training. In this way only can he be taught to speak the truth, not to covet or steal, to be tender and merciful and loving. "Do what is right" should be the ultimate appeal.

Then there is the intellectual training of our children. Few mothers undertake nowadays to teach even the simplest rudiments of learning, though it is to be wished that many mothers might be able to begin kindergarten training long before the children go to the public school. This can be done if mothers are willing to study those principles and apply them.

Mothers can and ought to keep a watchful care over home reading and see to it that no pernicious influences are at work to deprave taste and enervate mental power. Avoid baby jingles and let the first nursery rhymes be pure and simple. Keep all wicked trash from the house. There is an abundance of good reading to be had cheaply and there is no need to admit that which is harmful. Many wrecks lie along the shore of life's stream, warning mothers to beware how they thus endanger the safety of their children's "voyage of life."

But the question which should weigh the heaviest upon the hearts of Christian mothers is, "What is my responsibility for the spiritual training of my child?" As the intellectual training of children is so completely left to the school teacher by many mothers, so the spiritual training is relegated by many more to the Sabbath-school teacher entirely.

Heathen mothers train up their children to adhere to idolatry. What of Christian mothers who give no heed to the perpetuation of the principles of our better faith? Were all the pious instructions of the nurseries of this land at once and forever hushed, nothing could hinder the spreading of the dark pall of heathenism over the nation before another century had gone.

We all love the Sunday-school, but it should never take the place of parental and sanctuary influences. See to it yourself that the children form the habit of prayer—that they study the word of God and that they attend church. Never weaken the power of a pastor's influence by foolish criticisms or unkind remarks. Hold up the hands of the man of God by prayer for him and labor with him, if you would have your children honor the Sabbath and its holy services in after years. "Each tree has only one trunk but many branches, so every meek and quiet act of a pious parent's life is but one, yet it may branch forth into many and bring forth fruit for years to come."

It was a remark of much wisdom in one who said, "What France needs is mothers." It is what every nation needs—mothers of cultured minds and devout hearts. Let no mother feel that her sphere is limited and her usefulness nullified by confinement to home duties and the care of her children. They are God-given charges, and He will require faithfulness at her hands. "In the heraldry of heaven," says one who has now gone there, "in the heraldry of heaven, in which to be good is better than to be great, and to be useful is better than to shine, they may hold a place more illustrious and honorable than many of those who have wielded the sceptres of empire and filled the world with the thunder of their fame."

Then let the mother often carry these burdens to the Saviour's feet. Let her seek instruction at the throne of grace herself, and being taught of the Spirit she may hope to lead her children to green pastures where they shall dwell in purity of life and purpose.

Lo! amid the press,
The whirl and hum and pressure of my day
I hear Thy garments sweep, Thy seamless dress,
And close beside my work and weariness
Discern thy gracious form, not far away,
But very near, O Lord, to help and bless.

The busy fingers fly, the eyes may see
Only the glancing needle which they hold,
But all my life is blossoming inwardly,
And every breath is like a litany;
While through each labor, like a thread of gold,
Is woven the sweet consciousness of Thee!

THE BOYS WE NEED.

Here's to the boy who's not afraid
To do his share of work;
Who never is by toil dismayed,
And never tries to shirk.

The boy whose heart is brave to meet
All lions in his way;
Who's not discouraged by defeat,
But tries another day.

The boy who always means to do
The very best he can;
Who always keeps the right in view,
And aims to be a man.

Such boys as these will grow to be
The men whose hands will guide
The future land; and we Shall speak their names with pride.

All honor to the boy who is
A man at heart, I say;
Whose legend on his shield is this:
"Right always wins the day."

HOW JOE STOOD UP FOR HIS PRINCIPLES.

BY MARY L. WYATT.

The rain poured in torrents and the wind blew cold as it whistled around the little log shanty which served as a saloon in the lumber camp.

A group of lumbermen drew up around the open fire and in their midst was a bright boy of ten years named Joe. The men always called him "Jim's boy." Jim Lane had been caught in a terrible storm a few weeks before and had been frozen to death.

With the good-nature often found under rough exteriors these men had shown the greatest kindness to little Joe and had tried to make him forget his father's death. In spite of all their kindness Joe was often very homesick. His mother lived fifty miles away and Joe had come with his father to spend the winter in the camp and return in the spring as soon as the roads became passable.

As the men sat around the fire, good-natured stories were told, jokes cracked and yarns spun. After awhile mugs of hot whisky punch, which one of the men had been mixing, were passed around.

While Joe's father was alive, Joe had never been in the saloon, for his father had always sent him to bed early on those evenings, so that Joe had never before seen the men during one of their drinking sprees, but he was bright enough to know what was going on.

At last one of the men offered Joe a drink, whereupon the boy refused and pushing his chair back, stood up straight and still before them.

How the men laughed at his earnest, resolute look.

"What's happenin' to the boy?" said one.

"Hev a cheer?" said another. But still Joe refused to be seated.

The men set their mugs of toddy down on the table and poked fun at Joe who remained standing and did not speak.

"Hold on there, boys, quit your fooling, 'nough's 'nough," said a big, burly fellow, touched at seeing a tear glisten in little Joe's eye. "Let the little feller speak out and say what's the matter."

Joe brushed the tear away. "You see, men," he said, "that when I came away from home mother told me about how you sometimes drank things that hurt you, and she made me sign the pledge and promise not to drink liquor, and she told me always to stand up for my principles, and so when I saw you were all going to drink I thought I'd do as mother said and that was why I stood up, because I was standing up for my principles."

This little speech of Joe's was greeted with laughter and long applause. It seemed as if the little shanty would tumble down with the stamping and cheering.

It was now "Burly Ben" who brushed away a tear. He raised his hand as a signal for the noise to stop.

"Look a-here, boys," he said, "that youngster's got the right of it. I've been forgettin' all about my mother, but them's the very words she said to me when I left home ten years ago. 'Ben,' says she, 'I've brung you up right; don't drink nor don't swear, but stand up for your principles.' Them's her very words."

The mugs remained untouched and silence reigned. Ben was doing some hard thinking and a struggle was going on within; at last he spoke again in a subdued tone. "'Taint easy to do's you'd orter do always, but I'm bound to do the square thing if 'tis hard. Drink don't do us no good, 'n I've quit. I'm goin' to stand up with Joe for my principles, and here's my last drink."

Ben pushed open the door of the shanty and threw the contents of his mug out into the darkness and took his stand by the side of little Joe.

"Who's goin' to jine the recruits for standin' up for principles?" said Ben, good-naturedly, but with determination. "Nimble Dick" pushed open the door and following Ben's example, threw the contents of his mug out into the rain.

One of the men, Judas-like, grumbled, "What's the use of wasting all this toddy?" but the better feeling prevailed.

"I wish you would all come over and stand up with Ben and me!" said Joe, timidly.

One after another the half-dozen men took up their mugs and threw the whisky out of doors, where it mingled with the torrents of rain and coursed rapidly down hill.

Then the men shuffled over to where Ben and Joe were standing and took their places beside them. This seemed to affect them all as rather ludicrous, and they burst into a hearty laugh, and seizing little Joe mounted him on their shoulders and marched around the room. Some one struck up "America," and they sang it with a will. This was followed by other patriotic songs and ended with a grand handshaking.

"Look a-here, sonny," said Ben to Joe, not quite satisfied that the handshaking was voucher enough for future good order, "how did that ere pledge read what your mother got you to sign before you come away from home?"

"Let me think," said Joe; "it began 'I promise.'"

"That's good; go on," said Ben. "I'll write it down so's we shan't forgit it."

"I seen one of them pledges onct," said Nimble Dick, "and it said, 'so help me God,' in it. I remember that much."

"Oh, yes," said little Joe, "now I guess I remember it. You write it down as I say it."

So Ben wrote while little Joe dictated as well as he could remember. The writer was his own authority for grammar and spelling, and this pledge was the combined result of their efforts:

"i promis so help me God that i wont drink no Whisky gin sider nor nothin that makes Foks drunk, and no alkohol nuther."

Ben had written upon a leaf torn from his account book, and now surveyed his work with much satisfaction.

"It says something about smoking and swearing, too," said little Joe.

"Hold on there; you're asking too much all 't once," said one of the men who was fond of his pipe and a great swearer.

Ben took no notice of the man's remark, but to little Joe he said, "Let's have all of it; what's the rest?" Now that Ben had set out to reform he wanted no half way work about it. He would make a clean breast of it.

"The pledge said: 'I won't swear nor smoke,'" said little Joe.

As for himself Ben had made up his mind what he should do, but he was not quite so sure that the men would follow him in this.

He tore another leaf from his account book and wrote a separate pledge thereon, which was: "i promis i wont Smoke nor chew Tobako nor swear."

His hands were stiff and the pencil was only a stub, and he screwed and twisted his mouth, which worked in sympathy with his hand; but at last his name appeared in full on both pledges.

"There!" he fairly shouted, "there's no backing out now for Benjamin Grant Alexander. Who's goin' to come and do likewise?"

One after another the men signed the first pledge, but at the thought of giving up tobacco the rest demurred.

Ben thought, as one victory had been gained, it might not be best to push the matter any further, so he said: "Well, boys, you think about it. You'll find the pledges pinned to the wall in my palace, and you can step in and give us a specimen of your penmanship, any time. It's about time Jim's boy was abed, so we'll now seek our luxurious couches."

Little Joe was carried to Ben's cabin on the men's shoulders, and while Ben helped him into bed Joe murmured sleepily: "I'm glad—you—stood—up—for—" His head had touched his pillow, and he had vanished into sweet dreamland.

With such a staunch leader as Burly Ben the first pledge held good, and swearing was also tabooed. The rest may follow.

"A little child shall lead them."

SUMMER PRIZE ESSAY CONTEST.

To the boy or girl who writes the best and most helpful account of WHAT I HAVE DONE FOR TEMPERANCE THIS SUMMER, will be given the new game published by the Woman's Temperance Publishing Association, entitled, "Illustrated Authors." The essays must be written on one side of the paper; are not limited in length; and must be received not later than September 1. Be sure to give your age.

WHAT I HAVE LEARNED ABOUT THE WORLD'S PETITION.

BY JESSIE PIERSON (aged 15).

[ESSAY NO. 4.]

The Polyglot Petition originated in the United States, and has been circulated by the Woman's Christian Temperance Union. This Petition is addressed to the governments of the world. It asks for the prohibition of the sale of all alcoholic liquors as a drink, and all forms of social vice.

The W. C. T. U. has circulated a great many petitions. The number of signatures and attestations secured all over the world to their different petitions since 1875 amounts to over fifteen millions of names.

Mrs. Mary Clement Leavitt, of Boston, the honorary president of the W. C. T. U., was the first one who went forth with the Petition, in 1884. She was absent nine years, visiting nearly every nation in the world.

The signatures were mounted on white muslin by Mrs. R. C. Shuman, using over two thousand yards of cloth and over four thousand yards of braid, which she stitched on all by hand. The names are mounted in four columns; the Petition expresses the sentiments of over seven million people, one million of whom are men. The list was headed by that grand, noble man, Neal Dow.

The number of signatures from outside the United States is four hundred and eighty thousand. Three hundred and fifty thousand names come from Great Britain, with Lady Henry Somerset's name at the head.

Miss Morgan, of Wales, has superintended this work in Great Britain with the untiring help of the president.

The Petition was presented to President Cleveland by Miss Willard, Lady Henry Somerset and others. The President received them with a great deal of courtesy, cordially shaking hands with each one.

But would it not have been nice if he were a Prohibition President and signed his name?

The Catholic, Protestant and heathen are all represented, without regard to race or color.

We have reason to believe that in the Polyglot Petition we have the promise of a better time, and it will be indeed a glorious day when the sale of alcoholic drinks and opium are banished forever.

God bless the W. C. T. U., and speed the day when the right shall prevail!

CHRISTIAN CITIZENSHIP.

When we study the journeyings of the Israelites it is evident that many a time by the exercise of a little good sense, faith, courage and concerted action they might have taken a short cut to Canaan. The map of their wanderings is the proof sheet of a forty years' course of blindness and folly.

There is no necessity for any of our peregrinations in the wilderness, yet the tribes of the faithful double on their course, lose the vantage ground of their victories and meander as inefficiently as their prototypes of old.

What good and desirable thing is there which could not be assured in our land by the united effort of five million Christians?

The National Christian Citizenship League outlines a perfectly feasible short cut to millennial conditions, depending only for success upon the willingness of every soul whose watchword is "In His Name" to fall in line and obey marching orders.

The call for "good citizenship" is heard throughout the land. It means, in general, a demand for honest government, clean streets, well enforced laws.

Much is likely to follow such a demand. Sweeping reforms frequently cut a wide swath and leave some permanent results in consequence of a stirring up of the latent indignation of the masses. But the swelling waters subside, and unspeakable things are again long endured before there is a pulling together for another rising.

The "Christian citizenship" idea includes far more than these praiseworthy aspirations of the "good citizen." It is an organized movement with a life principle within. The indwelling Spirit of the eternal is invoked to insure its permanence as an ever present factor in sleepless readiness for action.

Briefly stated, it proposes the application of the principles of Jesus Christ to public affairs, and recognizes the fact that the power to make this application lies now in the hands of the Christian people of this nation, requiring only united action.

Its general purpose is "to reveal Jesus Christ as the Saviour of the state as well as of the individual—to make Christian principles operative in public affairs—to unite the followers of Christ in harmonious and aggressive action on the following lines:

"1. To prevent by personal effort the nomination and election of corrupt candidates and the enactment of corrupt laws in city, state and nation.

"2. To secure fidelity on the part of officers intrusted with the execution of the laws.

"3. To exterminate the saloon as the greatest enemy of Christ and humanity.

"4. To preserve the Sabbath.

"5. To purify and elevate the elective franchise.

"6. To promote the study of social wrongs and the application of remedies.

"7. In general, to seek the reign of whatsoever things are true, honest, just, pure, lovely and of good report."

It is proposed to organize Christian Citizenship Leagues in every town, city or county, coöperating on state and national lines. Any Christian man or woman may take the initiative in his or her city or town, addressing for information The National Christian Citizenship League, 153 La Salle street, Chicago.

But why not do this work individually? Why organize?

The argument for combination and concentration of force is drawn from the wisdom of the ages. The Divine rule of progression of force in comparison with numbers is by tens—"one shall chase a thousand," but the power of two "shall put ten thousand to flight."

The theory that a question of morals has no place in politics is of the devil, but it is curious that it has somewhat widely been adopted as an axiom by otherwise clear-headed people. It is cheerfully conceded that the ordering of their private life should be subject to His will, but the regulation of the affairs of collective humanity is relegated to a field from which the Lord is warned off as a trespasser. They will even advocate the bad measure instead of the good, because it is so wrong to legislate for better moral conditions. The widest opportunity must be allowed for evil doing—within, of course, certain limits—which could not have been established consistently with their plan, while we depend for safety and salvation on the persuasive powers of the preachers of righteousness.

If these men were to carry their political morality into their daily living they would be an immediate menace to the public safety instead of more slowly formulating conditions which threaten the national existence.

The recognition of "God in government" is by them considered to lead directly to the union of church and state with all its attendant evils.

The League for Christian Citizenship is no attempt to combine the visible church with the affairs of the state, nor is it the organization of a new political party, but contemplates the federation of existing forces in establishing the will of God on earth. The Woman's Christian Temperance Union should be especially ready to coöperate with this movement, for every one of its lines is formulated in our plan of work.

It is non-sectarian and non-partisan, but it does expect men to use a political enginery, which aims to work our will in these specified particulars.

A church or a religious society cannot properly, as an organization, enter politics; but the principles learned in these schools of righteousness should enable a man to make a political choice and take a political course in harmony with Christian character.

The consistent Christian can reserve no territory from the jurisdiction of his King. He will serve Him in the caucus and in the primaries as truly as in any experience in life, and he will vote as the Master would have him vote.

That history repeats itself is believed literally by many people. An eminent politician, once the governor of a great state, embodied in his speeches the idea that we are pursuing the inevitable course common to all nations, and has nothing to suggest beyond measures for delaying the day of our decline. This, truly, may be our fate, but these things do not happen without a cause. Mill's "Science of Politics" says, "As with individuals, so with society, the road to ruin is not a long one. As there are appetites and passions in the individual which must be curbed or he is ruined, so there are factors in the social life based in these same appetites and passions, which must not rule or civilization cannot abide." This is just as sure in its logic as that effect follows cause. The drunkenness and licentiousness which brought rottenness and delirium to the man whose grave we know, unchecked, produces the like effect upon the state, and among the graves of nations are epitaphs which read like his.

"Except the state believe on Christ it cannot be saved any more than a man," is one of the epigrammatic sentences of Professor Herron in "The Larger Christ." The heart of this nation must accept Christ. It is righteousness which exalteth a nation. The more we make for righteousness the more highly shall we be exalted. And the continuance of our exaltation depends entirely upon the continuance of our righteousness. If we are righteous we shall be exalted and stay so.

It will be readily admitted that the united action of our millions would work wonders. It seems strange then that there should be any difficulty in securing this union of effort, but that is where the difficulty will lie.

The National Christian Citizenship League, whose offices are 153 La Salle Street, Chicago, has invoked the aid of the pulpit by issuing a request for one hundred thousand sermons on the topic of Christian Citizenship on Sunday, June 30. "That day," says the president, Edwin D. Wheelock, "will be a most appropriate and opportune time for emphasizing the fact that 'Righteousness exalteth a nation and sin is a reproach to any people,' and for stimulating the Christian citizenship of our land to a more united and active demand for public purity." The League will send free to any minister applying, suggestive literature for the sermon. With cordial coöperation from pulpit and press, we predict a mighty forward impulse in this noble good citizenship movement.

WORLD'S W. C. T. U. CONVENTION.
President's Address.

[We are fortunate to be able to give our readers a portion of Miss Willard's address before the World's W. C. T. U. Convention in London. She will deliver it on Wednesday, June 19, the day on which many in this country will be reading it from these columns. More of the address will be given in another issue.]

THE COMMON JOY.

If a passer-by were asked why we are gathered here, he might reply, "Because they are busybodies in other people's affairs," or "They are temperance women from all over the world," or "They like to set everybody by the ears," or, "They are a lot of cranks and fanatics, who do not know what they want, except to take away the poor man's glass of beer and spoil his hours of recreation." If we were asked why we are here, our answers would be varied, too. I have put the question to myself in these pleasant weeks of spring, when I have lived in great quietness at Eastnor Castle, recruiting in health and preparing for these days of stress and crisis, and have many a time imagined you, converging like arrows to the mark, from all quarters of the globe, seeking humanity's capital, the center of the world's joy and the world's woe—the whispering gallery of the Anglo-Saxon race.

"Why do they come?" my heart demanded, and in reply my interest never once said, "Because they are teetotalers; because they believe in prohibition; because they are opposed to the exhibition of unclad women under the guise of living pictures; because they would enfranchise women," or even "because they seek the protection of the home," for even this broader generalization did not seem to cover all the meaning of your sacred pilgrimage. Looking out over the serene landscape with its restful hills and forests, listening to the bright bird-songs, and gazing up into the radiant heavens, I said in my heart, "They are coming, those dear and tender-hearted ones because they would increase the common joy!" For I believe, as one of our poets has said, that "Joy is the grace we say to God." It is the outcome of balanced faculties, and an environment that presses its good gifts equally upon all. Anything short of this shows "sweet-bells jangled"; an orchestra of purposes ill-tuned. The ardent, endless aspiration of mankind is for nothing less than joy. Intoxicating liquors, with their hallucination, seem to bring joy for awhile, and for this reason they are sought. But what if universal man should find after awhile—a long, long while, perchance—as the result of the combined work of countless light-bringers through unwearied ages, that we can only "take joy home" into a brain as normal as that of the bird in yonder tree-top, or the swan upon the placid lake below? What if he should find that only by desiring the very best for everybody else can he ever really come to the very best himself? What if man should grow so great as to desire the equal comradeship of the gentle partner of his joys and griefs? What if they should go hand in hand through all the fields of education, art, society and government? What if there should be some day no rich and titled, no poor and debased?

The common joy, then, is what we seek and help to work out in the best ways we can. We may not have learned the best, but we are learning; and many minds are better than one, so we will help each other by making common cause, by all we have learned through failure and success.

Under these skies of peace I ask myself, Why does the great mass tolerate the wealth, leisure and culture of the few? The mass could make it different if it would, because it is the mass, and borne in upon my spirit came this answer: Man seeks joy, but he is gifted with imagination—that angel of the mind—and in the ruder ages he rejoiced to see his dreams fulfilled in others; the gleaming knight, with graceful gesture; the lady fair, with cheek soft as the petal of a rose and voice as tuneful as a robin's; the stately castle on the height, filled with the gains of centuries, gleaming with color from the canvasses of genius, mellow with the light of knowledge from the pages of the poet and the philosopher—the humble man saw this, and was glad. A few glasses of gin, and it was all his own. Poor Burns, in his poem of a peasant's convivial exploit, said: "Kings may be great, but Tam was glorious."

The women who have gathered to the peaceful war-cry, "For God and Home and Every Land" would make Tam "glorious" without the gin. They can conceive of no joy that ought not equally to come to all; they work for nothing less. They believe that every heritage of life should be at the beck of the lowliest. They would not revolutionize, but help on the evolution of the common joy.

White ribbon women see in the people's love of pageantry the token of those days to come when through slow processes and under the guidance of a calm and steady brain the pageant shall become possible to all and all a part of it. We see the peers thronging to the palace, the people to the theater; what are they seeking each and all? That which is fit and beautiful, that which is gracious and self-poised, that which looks outward with calm eye, that which knows instead of guessing, realizes instead of hoping, enjoys not in expectation, but enjoys now. The poor factory girl, the sad-faced seamstress, the weary workingman—why do they seek the music halls? Not from bad motives, but from the instinct of the pursuit of joy; their lives are colorless but the theatre is roseate; their daily occupation is deadly prose, the theater is poetry and music. Some take a glass of fiery stuff and have their theater at home, or become sodden and forget that their lives are totally devoid of joy. Others seek sins that shall be nameless here, and degrade that which is highest to that which is most base. As a broken mirror distorts the features of the face so the pursuit of joy under conditions such as these smirch her lovely face and defraud her of the beauty that God has spread with lavish hand over the world and made brilliant under the gleam of stars and the soft radiance of skies.

We would not take a single jot of joy from any life but would hold up the sunglass of purity to catch the wavering beams and bring them to a focus. We are not Puritans, but we hope we are rational lovers of whatever in the drama, the orchestra, the tuneful human voice, the glowing canvas can add one throb of joy to any heart that beats a throb as natural, holy and sweet as that of the skylark's yonder singing above the meadow.

THE POLYGLOT PETITION PILGRIMAGE AROUND THE WORLD.

How to carry out in the best manner plans for presenting the Petition is one of the important questions to be submitted to this Convention. I have already explained in letters to THE UNION SIGNAL that after the arrangements were practically made to take up the world trip last autumn, urgent representations were made to me by white ribbon leaders in my own country that caused me to feel that after so long an absence from home they would be disappointed if I went away last autumn.

In June last I returned to America and remained until March of this year, when I came over to work with my pen in helping forward the preparations for our great meetings three months later. It is now proposed after presenting the Petition to the British government to go to Norway for the purpose of studying the Norwegian system of handling the liquor traffic and of presenting the Petition to the King of Sweden. It may also be deemed best to accompany Dr. Lunn's Mediterranean excursion, which would afford the opportunity of carrying the Petition to several other capitals.

It is my duty and pleasure to go home to our National W. C. T. U. Convention which meets in Baltimore, October, 1895, after which I earnestly wish that the journey to India, China, Japan, Australia and South Africa might be taken up as consecutively as possible and completed before the close of 1896.

Having frankly stated the position from my own point of view I commend the subject to the consideration of my comrades. We all know that it will be of the utmost importance to the success of the expedition for the president of our British forces to be at the front throughout the journey around the world. She will present the subject to you from her point of view and by a free consultation we shall arrive at the unity, wisdom and what seems to me to be the wisest and most "up to date" body to whom a decision so weighty could be committed.

POVERTY AND DRINK.

Under the searchlight of knowledge in these later days it is folly for temperance people to ignore the mighty power of poverty to induce evil habits of every kind. It was only our ignorance of the condition of the industrial classes that magnified a single propaganda and minimized every other that led the temperance people in earlier days to believe that if men and women were temperate, all other material good would follow in the train of this great grace. But we know now that the rapid progress of invention is constantly diminishing the number of workmen required in the different lines of industry. We know that within a few years a machine has been invented which sets type without the intervention of the human hand, so that one man can do as much with this machine as five could accomplish in the same time without it. We know that electricity has but begun to play its part as man's proxy in the world of forces. For instance, by means of a platinum wire stretched between two poles and used as a saw, heated to whiteness by electricity, trees are now felled much more quickly, and by a cleaner stroke than in the past, and eight trees may be cut down by this method while one is being brought low by means of axe and saw. The steam laundry successfully contests the washerwoman's means of gaining her livelihood. The steam plow, thresher, roller, and scores of other ingenious contrivances are replacing the silent force of the human hand by the Cyclopean power of the unhasting, unresting force of steel and iron, backed by nature's most powerful agencies, harnessed by man's skill. There are millions of men and women in Great Britain and America who would gladly work, but the pitiless, restraining hand of invention and monopoly hold them back, so that an opportunity to earn their bread by the sweat of the brow is already fought for as strenuously as men in other times fought for their lives. And the condition of things grows more threatening, and must continue to do as new races enter the competition and rise to the level of utilizing all the inventions of all the nations of the earth.

Under this pressure of relentless competition men are ground into dust, and that by a heavier heel than old-time tyrannies could boast, and they seek forgetfulness in those indulgences whose hallucinations deteriorate body and soul. They drink and debauch themselves, they gamble, they seek gross scenes of amusement and revelry; on the one hand they try to forget, and on the other to crowd into the brief space given them for recreation the utmost possible amount of sensation and delirium.

I know that this position, which I take with a full understanding of the criticism it must involve in certain minds, will be controverted by the statement that the alcohol disease, the opium craze, and the insanity of base amusement is not confined to the hand-workers of the world. It has passed into a proverb that the unemployed rich and the unemployed poor live along strangely parallel lines in respect to their indulgences and tastes; but the plutocrats form a very small group compared with the great army of wage-workers, and it is universally admitted that the habit of drink, and other disintegrating modes of living are slowly dying out among the intelligent and fairly comfortable classes that live in the temperate zone between the two extremes.

Nothing short of willful ignorance can account for blinking the fact that poverty is perhaps the chief procuring cause of the brutal drinking habits with which whole areas of population are sodden throughout the English-speaking world. That declaration of Holy Writ, which was not a permission but a statement of fact, is ominously true in the present condition of things, "Let him drink and forget his poverty, and remember his misery no more."

In view of these facts it is more than short-sighted folly, it is unpardonable stubbornness, not to say criminal apathy, in us as temperance workers if we do not clasp hands of intelligent and earnest sympathy with the wage-worker and the unemployed. We must lengthen our cords and strengthen our stakes until they reach so far over into the camp of our bread earning brethren that ours shall be for evermore two "camps allied" in thought and purpose to bring in the better day. We must be able to see that the eight hours' law is a temperance measure, a purity measure, a gospel measure, and nothing less, for by means of the eight hours' law one-third more men and women now unemployed, can find standing room in the bread winning battalions, where they can fight for a free and independent life and a well ordered home. The living wage means not only that the wage-earner shall live, but he shall live well. Ruskin has wisely said that there is no wealth but life; and it is the duty of the nation to clear away the impediments that hold honest and industrious people from coming to their own, developing their best capacities, enjoying that life "more abundant" to which every human heart is drawn by an instinct as irresistible as the force that draws the tides toward the sun.

REALIZATION OF PRACTICAL POLITICS.

Among the many and excellent definitions of the white-ribbon movement are the following:

"It is the church in motion." "It is an embodied prayer." "It is organized mother-love." "It is an effort to usher in the day when strength shall mean protection, and power shall mean kindness." All these are admirable guesses at truth, and each is reverently accepted by us as an attempt to set forth the ideal toward which we climb. But the logic of events and the arguments of defeat have taught us many things not to do, as well as many more that should be done.

It took some of us well nigh twenty years to see what the prophetic mind of Wendell Phillips long ago discerned, when he was wont to say to his friends: "Some of you will live to see the temperance question, the woman question, the labor question, the purity question, all merged in one mighty movement of the people, massing itself in a political party that shall make for righteousness, and save the nation from its sins." This declaration applies to no one people, but it is true of every one in proportion to the development at which they have arrived. None has as yet reached the heights from which so wide an evolution is possible, but all are on the way, and the two great English-speaking nations, mother and daughter, will be first at the goal. This Convocation, in which the representatives of these two are so largely in the majority, is a milestone on the long, slow, patient journey toward that realization of practical politics which shall practice morality and incarnate the spirit of the gospel in custom and in law.

FITTEST TO SURVIVE.

The law of the survival of the fittest has, in the popular mind, two methods of application; tested by them both, ought the liquor traffic to survive?

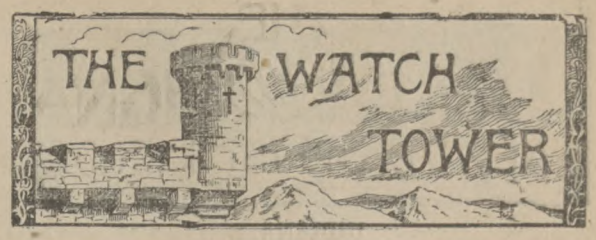
In the first place is it fit? In the days of our ancestors intoxicating liquors were made by men who stood as well in the community as the average tradesman. They were sold in the same places where flour and other things essential to the physical well being of the people were to be had; and no reproach rested upon those who dealt them out or drank them down. But it is no longer equally reputable to sell wheat and whisky, bread and beer, apples and ale.

In exact proportion to the New Testament character of his daily life, a man is held back by his principles and record from being a publican or a saloon-keeper. Birds of a feather flock together, and wholesome foods are now wholly separated from unwholesome drinks in public thought. As a general rule they are not sold in the same place, and those who sell them do not stand on the same plane in public confidence. There must be a reason for this, and it is found in the outcome of their respective use. The fittest has survived. Food holds its place as a necessity; intoxicating drinks are losing theirs; and from great numbers of the most highly developed communities they have been banished altogether. New England furnishes the most salient illustration. Our forefathers brought with them in the "Mayflower" the Bible and the cask of beer; they founded churches, schools, homes; they distilled and brewed intoxicants and sold them in shops along with other good creatures of God. The churches still abide, and in them are trained the best examples of our civilization; the schools abide and are the glory of our nation; the homes abide and are the harbingers of heaven; but the saloon is the confessed outlaw of our civilization. It has been banished from three of the five New England states, and cannot long survive in any.

Another meaning of the famous phrase is that whatever is best fitted to its environment survives, or that which adapts itself best to its surroundings possesses the inherent quality of survival. But as man develops along the lines of self-government, drinks that intoxicate or which have a tendency to produce that condition, become more dangerous to him. Under a feudal system, when he was but the parasite of the lord of the castle, his personal habits counted for but little only so that he was brave as a Turk in war. But his environment has changed his value to himself, to his home and the state that depends on the conservation of his forces, physical, mental and moral. Intoxicants degenerate his personality in all of these particulars, and they do this either actually or through his descendants.

The places in which intoxicants are sold have become the rendezvous of those classes which are either the foam of society or its dregs; the do-nothings of the upper and nether edges of the great social wave. One of our Chicago mayors gave as a reason why he did not close the saloons on Sundays that "they were the traps in which he was sure to catch criminals." If bakers' shops were the lurking places of the burglar and the tramp, if the basest political plots originated there, we should combine against the baker rather than the publican.

We are here, then, English-speaking women, gathered out of the leading nations of the world, with a few native pioneers from Oriental and Continental countries, to put our heads and hearts together for the building up of the woman's home protection movement, because it is the fittest to survive, the best adapted to its environment, and we are here for the pulling down of the liquor system, because, judged by its effects, it is the most unfit and the least adapted to that slowly improving environment which is the outcome of Christianity working on the minds and bodies of the human care.



We all come not infrequently to a crossing of the roads where we are obliged to take leave of revered and beloved friends with whom we can no longer keep step and do justice to our own beliefs. A letter has fallen into my hands that illustrates how we may take leave so gently as not even to have to say "good-bye": "Just a word of acknowledgment of your very kind letter, which I sincerely appreciate, nor do I believe that we really differ so much as may appear. We both believe in the personal coming of Christ; you think it will be in the future and visible. I do not oppose this view, but am more helped by the one I hold, namely, that although invisible, the influences of the Christ who has passed into the heavens are raining down upon the world, and will ere long be reigning in it, through Christian customs and the law of the Lord, wrought not only in the individual heart but on the statute book. With such a unity as to the root principle of His regnancy, 'whose right it is,' I am sure we can go on with mutual appreciation and good will."

It is interesting to note that the majority of attendants upon university extension lectures have been women, and especially women of leisure. Look over an audience at one of the lectures by a leading exponent and the fact is illustrated. The records of the four years' work of the American Society for the Extension of University Teaching bear out the statement that women more largely than men avail themselves of the privilege of evening lectures. Query: Where are the men?

Ellen Battelle Dietrick sends this delightful new version of Rudyard Kipling's verse,

"A million surplus Maggies are willing to bear the yoke."

She says: "As this circulates largely in the United States, it may be well to remind American men that that rhyme was written for England, and is vastly misleading so far as the situation in this country is concerned. It may be true that a million surplus females in England gives man the opportunity to compel woman to wed him with his cigar or not at all. But on this side of the Atlantic the attitude of the sexes is exactly reversed. There are, at this present time, one million five hundred thousand more males than females in these United States. I would, therefore, suggest that we publish the following supplement, as a substitute for Mr. Kipling's verse, to be used by American readers:

"A million surplus Patricks are eager to bear the yoke,
But a man is only a man, and we won't have him with his smoke.
Bring us another offer; we hold to our first sworn vows;
If Patrick won't leave off smoking, we'll take no Pat for a spouse."

The W. C. T. U. of Plymouth and Terryville, Conn.—the former of which has had "no-license" for nineteen years—have designed a temperance Centennial souvenir, of which they may justly be proud whenever they present it to friends (or "enemies"!) with their compliments. On the opposite pages are contrasting temperance facts, those of one hundred years ago over against those of 1895. One hundred years ago the "churches paid for liquor to be drank on public occasions; there were no total abstinence societies; there was no temperance literature; no legislation on the subject; no buildings were dedicated to temperance, and in 1789 the first temperance society was formed in Litchfield, Conn., when two hundred farmers pledged themselves not to use distilled liquors during the farming season. At the present time,—unfermented wine in a majority of churches, and their doors opened to temperance workers; the W. C. T. U. in nearly every foreign country, and with five missionaries in the foreign field; two hundred and fifty million pages of temperance literature published annually; the scientific temperance instruction law in every state of the Union but two; temperance publishing houses, headquarters, etc., and the National Temperance Hospital and great Woman's Temperance Temple, and to crown all, the Polyglot Petition, representing seven million people and fifty languages. This little lesson in comparison "in a nutshell" is full of inspiration and uncontrovertible testimony for "the cause."

INDIANA.

SCHOOLS OF METHODS.

Our schools of methods, twenty-one in number, closed on May 29. These schools are pronounced by some of our intelligent members as more beneficial and enjoyable than state conventions. The first school was held April 3 and 4, at Alexandria, the last on May 28 and 29 at New Castle.

In many places the schools awakened enthusiasm, causing enlistments into our ranks. Our state vice-president, Miss Mary Hadley, as superintendent of these schools, prepared the programs, which not only gave full scope to the intellectual powers of our state officers but developed the talent of the members of the local unions. The following are some of the subjects: "How shall we marshal and equip the on-coming army against rum?" "What is the objective point of our work?" "Our place in the Nation's Triangle—the Home, the Church, the State"; "Symposium: Equality in Citizenship, in the Gospel, before the law and in Public Opinion"; "God's law vs. Indiana's law."

Our corresponding secretary, Mrs. Mary Balch, who is also state superintendent of medal contest work, arranged to have a contest at most of the schools of methods. She gave an original recitation on equal suffrage which enlivened the symposium and was followed by an address on the same subject, by Mrs. Cammack, and one also by Miss Hadley.

Mrs. Cammack's lectures on temperance, social purity and L. T. L. work are all well received by her audiences.

At Dunkirk, Alexandria and other places, the members were made glad by the presence of our state president, Mrs. Beck, who assisted in the discussions and addressed the evening audiences on the subject, "The Growth of the W. C. T. U. Idea."

At Ossian eleven members were added to the union, and a club of new subscribers to our state paper was obtained. At Dunkirk a club of forty-two names, and at Alexandria one of thirty for our Organizer, and a club of eighteen for The Union Signal. The interests of both papers were presented at each school with varying success. Our state treasurer, Mrs. McWhirter, presented the subject of systematic giving to many of the schools.

At Columbus Mrs. Nichols delivered the evening address, which called forth repeated applause.

The report of the progress of the work in Bartholomew county should inspire all W. C. T. U. workers. There was no temperance organization in the county until September, 1889, when, at the request of some of the ladies, an organizer was sent to them. This organizer was Miss Alice Palmer, our missionary to Africa. She so thoroughly taught and inspired the twelve members of the new union that, though some of the little band are in other states, two in Ohio, one in Washington, D. C., and one in Chicago, they still possess the zeal of new converts and labor earnestly for our cause.

Within the intervening five years, four other W's and three Y's have been organized in Bartholomew county, the membership increasing from twelve to one hundred. These women bring into their county fifty-two copies of our state paper, The Organizer, twenty copies of The Union Signal and twenty-five copies of The Temperance Banner, besides miscellaneous temperance literature. Within the five years they have had four schools of methods. They have also had among them such lecturers as Mother Wallace, Mother Trish, Mrs. Edholm, Mrs. Haggart, Miss Alice Palmer, Mrs. Nichols, Mrs. Cammack, Miss Reed, Miss Hay, Mrs. Beck, Mrs. Gougar, Mrs. Calkins, Miss Dickson and others. Their L. T. L. numbers two hundred. In their oratorical contests, when the ages of the contestants debarred them from the Demorest medals, a silver cup or some other prize was given.

Promptly meeting every demand their financial standing is unexcelled in our state. Their treasury is often replenished by various entertainments, medal contests, also by furnishing lunches on public days, etc. By means of an embroidered quilt they made fifty dollars for our Hadley Industrial School. The county also may be congratulated upon having an efficient president whose beautifully worded report I am tempted to copy verbatim.

During our summer months our churches are virtually closed, our ministers seek places of rest, public speakers generally need recuperation, humanity usually seeks relaxation, but our W. C. T. U. lecturers take no rest. Mrs. Cammack and Mrs. McConnel will remain in the southern part of the state until October.

Our workers are making a vigorous effort to have Miss Willard at our state convention. By an increase of five hundred in our membership we hope to claim the fulfillment of her promise.

Six new unions have been organized in Marion county. Two new counties have been organized. Three unions by Mrs. Calkins, and three by Mrs. Cammack, whose ability to overcome obstacles is worthy of our cause.

Our state corresponding secretary, Mrs. Balch, delights her co-workers by her systematic methods. She has arranged an easy method of obtaining a fund to be divided between our state paper and our superintendent of literature, for the free distribution of literature.

Fairmount union makes a specialty of medal contest work. The union gains new members at nearly every meeting.

Blackford county reports an increase in membership, also Clinton county.

Many unions in the state have assisted the Nebraska sufferers.

Hadley Industrial School still needs our assistance. It is opened for a small number of pupils, but we hope its full capacity can be utilized by September.

Our treasurer, Mrs. McWhirter, called upon our unions to follow the example of the Greencastle union in offering prizes to the pupils of the High Schools for the best essay on the subjects of "Temperance" and "Narcotics"; The first prize, a five dollar gold piece, the second a two dollar and a-half gold piece.

Several prominent temperance and labor advocates in Indiana were contestants for prizes offered by that union.

The following was received recently from North Judson: "Mrs. Charlton Edholm lectured here April 20 and 21 on 'The Traffic in Girls' and 'Mission Work,' to large and sympathetic audiences. Every one was charmed with her sweet manners and deeply interested in the work. We feel that much good has been done by her lecture here, and hope that we may be so fortunate as to have her with us again. Five new members were secured during her stay here."

What a privilege to work for our Master!

MINNESOTA.

RECENT ACTIVITIES.

Chatfield union has kept up the battle for the home steadily with but little to encourage the workers until recently. The license element has always been so strong that the late spring election, although not a complete victory against the saloon, was yet a surprise to all. The dreadful scenes that have taken place upon the village streets during the past two years, together with the influence of a series of temperance lectures just prior to election, caused the thinking people to consider the question of license in its proper light. The result was that license, instead of carrying by over forty majority, as was the case last year, had only eleven majority, and that too, after the saloon element had put forth every effort to win. The union, therefore, feels very hopeful, and is determined to do more effectual work during the coming year. They have a great advantage in their ministers, who are all outspoken temperance men.

Fulda union, during the last two months, has held two medal contests, the first one among children between the ages of twelve and fifteen years. Miss Blanche Timlin carried off the medal, her oration being "A Freeman's Ballot." The second contest was between young people of from fifteen to twenty-five years. Miss Nellie Nevins taking the prize, her subject being "Young America's War-cry." Ten cents admission was charged and the proceeds amounted to $18.20.

"Marshall union is, as usual, very much alive," their reporter writes. Heavy burdens have been met with the determination that knows no defeat. Petitions favoring the anti-cold-storage bill before our late legislature were circulated with marked success. Every lawyer and leading citizen signed, and even one saloon-keeper. Money was raised by subscription to send a young man to the Keeley Institute. He is fully restored, holds a good position, and stands firm for the right.

Northfield union "cannot point to any great thing accomplished," but having an efficient superintendent of scientific temperance instruction and also of juvenile work, they have labored together to instruct the children in school and out, thus laying a firm foundation for the future. At the beginning of the year twenty copies of Monthly Advices were placed in the hands of the teachers in the schools of the village and surrounding country. Some time since about one hundred invitations were issued to a temperance tea, which proved a very pleasant occasion; a program was given, and the indefatigable medal contest superintendent was presented with some souvenir spoons. Two silver medal contests have been held, and contestants secured for a gold medal contest. Other lines of work are not neglected, mothers' meetings, press work, literature and other departments being carried on.

Richland union has twelve members. The meetings have been much interrupted, on account of sickness among the workers. A fruit social was held some time ago, the L. T. L. entertaining the guests with recitations and temperance songs. The receipts were over six dollars, half of it going to the L. T. L. The union has sent two dollars to the Temperance Hospital and voted two to our state paper. Four honorary members pay dues.

Red Wing union some time ago offered a prize of two dollars to the pupils of the high school for the best essay on the effects of the use of alcohol and tobacco; also a prize of one dollar to the pupils of the grammar schools for the best answers to ten questions on the same topic, the questions being prepared by a committee of the union. No essays were received from the high school scholars, and the union thinks it was owing to some misunderstanding. Those who had sent answers to the questions given the grammar school pupils were invited to meet with the union, the answers were read and the prize given to the one judged as best, while the others received fifty cents each. No doubt the effort has been beneficial. This union recently held a flower social and tea, with about seventy-five guests present. Some very pretty paper flowers were displayed and sold, and the evening was much enjoyed by all.

Atwater union has a membership of nineteen. They have held three gospel temperance meetings and are arranging for the fourth. Four lines of work are carried on —railroad, press, flower mission and lumberman's. The union has worked hard all winter for the uplifting of humanity and the downfall of the saloon. Quarterly teas are held, also mothers' meetings, and all are well attended. One dollar has been sent to the Temple. A Y of nineteen members is in good condition.

Litchfield's reporter says: "I deferred writing until after election, hoping to have a favorable report, but am sorry to say that as far as election is concerned, we have not a solitary ray of comfort. The entire whisky ticket was elected from top to bottom. There is now not one no-license man in the council. However, we of the union will simply change our tactics and go on with the work, never saying die." The union holds mothers' meetings at irregular intervals, on Sabbath afternoon, the speaker usually being the pastor of the church in which the meeting is held, it being in the different churches in town. A large number of the Annual Leaflet were sent for and distributed.

The Cover union, of Stillwater, recently held its regular meeting in the home of Mrs. De Wolf, and after adjournment the hostess surprised the ladies with a delightful luncheon, in honor of Mrs. Irvine, the district president, who had met with them. White pinks, tied with knots of white ribbon, were given each guest.

The St. Paul Park union held its first regular meeting May 31, in the First Baptist church. Mrs. Irvine was present, and a very pleasant time was enjoyed by all.

HENNEPIN COUNTY CONVENTION was held in Simpson M. E. church, Minneapolis, May 7 and 8, the president, Mrs. Frances Neal, occupying the chair. The convention was considered by some to be the best ever held. The condensed report by the secretary concerning the condition of the local unions showed very good work done. The treasurer's report gave the receipts of the year as $37.57. Twenty-five dollars had been sent on the pledge of one hundred dollars to the Temple in Chicago. A number of excellent papers were read, showing thought and care in preparation, particularly one by Miss A. M. Choate on the needs of the hour, and one by Mrs. M. J. Thompson on franchise, and another on the same topic by Mrs. Spencer, which was very bright and witty. A paper on narcotics and a leaflet on press work were also read. Mrs. Da Foe gave her report on jail work, which evinced much good accomplished and much seed sown.

Mrs. Neal was reëlected president, and it was voted to hold a semi-annual county convention again next fall, as was done last year, with excellent results.

Mrs. Fry, who was present throughout, and aided not a little, gave an address on one evening of the convention, and the other was occupied by a silver medal contest, but owing to the lack of a sufficient number of contestants the medal could not be awarded.

A letter from the president of the says the district "is in good health though not reporting lately." The president, Mrs. Bullivant, has been visiting the unions, and lately spent a Sabbath in Eden Valley. Found the unions there had been resting somewhat on their oars, but never for a moment thinking of giving up, and have now gone to work again with renewed and stronger purpose. A Sabbath was spent in Holdingsford, also a tedious drive of forty miles being necessary to reach the place. Here, a few faithful ones are holding the fort, and hoping and working for reinforcements.

St. Cloud union has recently established a Rescue Home for unfortunate women. Mrs. Bullivant expresses the hope that all unions, at least in the eleventh district, will send aid to this enterprise, and suggests that ten-cent socials be held for the purpose, and the proceeds be sent to Mrs. M. E. Ketchem, St. Cloud.

THE EDITOR OF OUR STATE PAPER

has met with a sad bereavement in the death of her husband, Mr. Robert L. Scovell, who passed over to the other side April 21. He went away very suddenly from the quiet of a beautiful earthly Sabbath to the place where Sabbath rest has no end. Heartfelt sympathy is extended by every member of the state W. C. T. U. to Mrs. Scovell, who sorrows not as one without hope. Waterville union passed resolutions, a copy of which was sent for publication in The Union Signal, but space forbade.

CAPTAIN VAN ETTAN,

the Dakota Cyclone, who has spent some time lecturing in our state, has everywhere met a hearty welcome and very many unions write of the good accomplished by his lectures. A series of six lectures was given in Marshall that wrought great changes in public sentiment. From Fulda and Waterville, too, come news of his successful efforts to rouse the people. A letter from Captain Van Ettan himself states that he has held about one hundred meetings in the state, generally a series of meetings in each place. One meeting does not effect more than a gentle ripple, but two or three evenings generally turn the whole town to temperance talk. The Captain takes only the free-will offerings of the people, but says he gets plenty of pay to satisfy any one working for humanity, and states that he has been well paid in this state and right royally entertained.

DELAWARE.

W. C. T. U. HAPPENINGS.

In writing to the different unions for news, the following letter came from Mrs. A. H. Berlin, secretary of Wilmington union: "I have thought it might be of interest to you to hear something from us as a union, especially so, since we have taken a new lease of life in our scientific temperance instruction department. For some time this department of our work has languished, for we seemed only able to reach the appointing and declining stage. At last, however, we have been more successful, and scientific temperance instruction is 'looking up.' Mrs. J. R. Milligan, our new superintendent, has been industriously working away, and has finally formulated a plan which the union has endorsed and to which the members have promised all possible assistance. The scheme was the offer of prizes in each of the public schools for best essays written bearing upon the subject of temperance. A list of topics has been carefully selected by a committee from the union, and a call issued by our city superintendent of public instruction asking the teachers to coöperate in this movement. The money for these prizes has been secured by personal solicitation. For the high school and each grammar school the prize is a five dollar gold piece, and for each primary school a two and a half dollar gold piece. All essays to be in by June 1, and submitted to committees, a special committee for each school having been chosen by a committee from our union.

Early in June a grand rally was held in our Opera House. A trained chorus composed of high and grammar school pupils sang, and music was furnished by the Boys' High School Orchestra. Distinguished visitors were present. Speeches were made, the prize essays read and the prizes awarded.

Souvenir books are being prepared containing fine cuts of buildings or points of interest in the city, and we expect to send one to the great convention in London and also one each to Lady Henry Somerset and Miss Willard.

We trust that by this movement new interest will have been awakened and the children will have learned a new lesson of the importance of temperance work.

Hilles union, Wilmington, reports an unusually large attendance at their regular May meeting. They are planning for a Harvest Home some time during the summer.

The South Wilmington Y and W. C. T. U. held, during the first of May, the fifth anniversary of the occupancy of their headquarters at No. 100 West Eighth street. The rooms were beautifully decorated with palms, ferns, blooming plants and cut flowers placed in every nook and corner. Miss Annie Semple and Mrs. Sarah Bringhurst were hostesses and were assisted by Mrs. George S. Capelle, Mrs. Thomas Darlington, Mrs. M. A. Taggart, Mrs. M. E. Francis and Mrs. Sarah Tally. The Rev. J. H. Howard made a brief address. Seventy-five dollars were received in offerings for paying off the mortgage on the building.

For some years the combined efforts of the W. C. T. unions of Wilmington have been mothering an Industrial Home for Girls in that city, but, because of lack of funds and insufficient legislative support, have been compelled to frequently change headquarters. During the early part of April a friend came to the rescue in the guise of Mr. Samuel Bancroft Jr., who gave to the home a lot valued at $8,000. The annual meeting of the managers of the home was held in May, when the officers were elected and the building committee was ordered to secure plans for the new building and to submit them to the board of managers as soon as possible. A board of trustees was organized, with Mr. Samuel Bancroft Jr., chairman. The total outlay during the year, for rent, fuel, gas, provisions, clothing, house furnishing and education was $1,819.82. There are now fourteen in family. At no time during the year have there been less than eleven girls.

Notwithstanding the fact that our just adjourned legislature has brought Delaware into such notoriety—we are sorry not to be able to say fame—we have in Wilmington Rev. Robert Watt, a Methodist Episcopal minister, who, by his repeated public utterances lately, in the defense of "God and Home and Native Land," is bringing fame upon himself, his cause and his state. His fearless pulpit declarations denouncing the late political wranglings and the horrible places of crime in Wilmington, and his avowal by all righteous means to ferret out these crimes, have brought upon him the criticism of the police board, but the admiration of all interested in moral reform.

Newport union is assisting in the support of a kindergarten in their headquarters. They have a successful Loyal Temperance Legion, and will have, very soon, a parlor musicale.

Smyrna W. C. T. U. held a supper on Wednesday evening, May 15, in the Opera House. They received about twenty-five dollars over expenses.

On Thursday evening, May 23, a temperance mass-meeting was held in Millsboro M. E. church, at which a W. C. T. U. of twelve active and five honorary members was formed by the Sussex county president, Mrs. Annie Fisher, of Nassau. It is thought that the interest manifested indicates a vigorous union. Surely the field is ripe for the harvest. On her way home on Friday, between the early morning and noon trains, Mrs. Fisher called a conference of Georgetown W. C. T. U. workers, to formulate plans for the summer's work. She suggested holding a temperance day at some of the camps during the summer, this being one of the best ways of disseminating healthy temperance sentiment. The conference was quite an inspiration to all present.

On Saturday afternoons the union in Georgetown visits the jail, led by Mrs. D. B. Jones, superintendent of prison work. The ministers of the town alternate in assisting. Hymns are sung, prayer offered and literature distributed. "Inasmuch as ye did it unto one of the least of these, my brethren, ye did it unto me."

WASHINGTON.

KING COUNTY

convention opened with a parlor meeting in Seattle at the home of Mrs. Simison, our state secretary. The following subjects were discussed: "What is the thing most needed in the W. C. T. U.?" "What are the living issues of the day?" "What should W. C. T. U. members read?" Mrs. Fifield, state president, was in attendance, and as the county president was absent she filled the chair. Thursday morning the devotions were led by Mrs. Katie Bartlett. Reports of heads of departments were read and discussed. Some lines had been well worked up, others neglected. We should exercise wise judgment in selecting those best fitted for the work. There is only one L. T. L. in the county, the one at Ross. Seattle Central union is our largest and strongest union. They reported good work done in the way of distribution of temperance literature. There have been Demorest medal contests in Kent, and Seattle and Ross. Two other unions are preparing for contests. Mrs. Wood, superintendent of Sunday-school work, reported good results in Seattle, also in Auburn. Seattle sent money and clothing to the Crown Jewel Home, an orphan asylum at Winlock; Fremont also sent money; Kent, money and clothing. Kent union, with the aid of the church friends, send a little deaf and dumb girl to the school for deaf and dumb at Vancouver, furnishing her with clothing. One child was sent from Kent to the Crown Jewel Home. Petitions have been circulated for franchise, Polyglot Petition, against vivisection, for kindness to animals and against "ladies' entrances" to saloons. A number of parlor meetings were reported as being held and adding greatly to the interest of the unions holding them.

The corresponding secretary read her report. The secretary read the county president's address, which was accepted with a rising vote of thanks. The address brought forth a discussion on the interest taken by railroad men in temperance thought and work and a feeling prevailed that we should do more to advance the interests of railroad employés and employers along the line of temperance and against their foe, the saloon. A discussion was held on the standing of the W. C. T. U. in church circles. Seattle Central union reported the placing of three water fountains in the city.

In the afternoon the election of officers for the ensuing year was held. Heads of departments were selected with care. It was voted that the county furnish a bed in the Crown Jewel Home. A number of articles were donated for the purpose at once, Miss Mary Cornelius of Kent, to have the matter in charge, as she is superintendent of homes for the homeless. This dear sister has been an invalid all her life, and through suffering has a heart full of sympathy for the homeless little ones or any who are afflicted. "Behold, we count them happy which endure." (Jas. 5: 11.) The convention adjourned to meet at Fremont, at the call of the president.

WHATCOM COUNTY

had very attractive printed programs. Mrs. L. B. Shockey, the county president, opened the convention by the usual preliminary exercises, appointing of committees, etc. Mrs. J. C. Wright, of Fairhaven, led a consecration service followed by reading of paper on various subjects. Mrs. E. C. Graves led a model union. Mayor Lindsay, of Fairhaven, was introduced and welcomed the guests to the city. Mrs. Marsh, of Sumas, responded. Papers were then read and discussed as per program followed by a symposium on alcohol, given by the school children. The evening session was given to a Demorest medal contest. The silver medal was won by Walter Hinman, of Fairhaven. Wednesday morning Mrs. Logan led a praise service. Department work received due attention. Mrs. C. McDermoth presided. Reports were read, after which lunch was served in the church parlors. It was decided to hold a five cent supper, the proceeds to go to the county treasury. The afternoon session was opened with devotions followed by election of heads of departments. An excellent paper on "Some of the Causes of Social Impurity" was read by Mrs. Edson, and was ordered printed. A paper on "Scientific Temperance" was presented by Mrs. Selby, for which she was given a rising vote of thanks, and it was ordered printed in the Pacific Lancet. Memorial service was conducted by Mrs. E. C. Graves. A paper on "The Life and Work of Mrs. Mary Beavers" was read by Mrs. Beeman. "A Sketch of the Life of Mary A. Woodbridge" was read by Mrs. Stevens. "A Sketch of Mary T. Lathrap," by Mrs. Pierce.

"Woman's Worth and Work" was the title of a paper by Mrs. Simpson. Mrs. Logan had an able paper on "Narcotics." The question-box was then opened by Mrs. McGinnis. The following resolutions were adopted: That mothers' meetings be held by all unions in the county. That we petition the city council to prohibit children under fifteen years of age from being on the street after nine o'clock at night, except with guardians. That we present a request to the state board of education that a hygienic text book be adopted for use in our public schools." The place of holding the next county convention was fixed at Sumas.

LEWIS COUNTY

met in convention in the Baptist church at Centralia, which was beautifully decorated. To the regret of all present, the county president, Mrs. Stewart, was too ill to be present, but under the skillful leadership of Mrs. Mattie Graves the work of the convention moved forward without any perceptible delay. Delegates and guests were served with appetizing dinner and luncheon each day in the church parlors. The morning and afternoon sessions were devoted to business and reports. Dr. Ella Fifield was present through most of the session, and by her wise counsels and gracious womanliness won all hearts. Mrs. Ready held a "model mothers' meeting," and Dr. Fifield gave a parliamentary drill. The evening session consisted of addresses, music, recitations and praise service. Mayor Birge gave the address of welcome. Rev. McKillop, in behalf of the churches, paid a grand tribute to the Christian spirit of the W. C. T. U., and Mrs. Graves' address of welcome made white-ribboners feel the reality of the "tie that binds." The music by C. N. Graves and the talented Matin Quartette was especially fine. Recitations by Ethel Honeywell, Janie Clark and Master Clyde Clark were well rendered. Responses by Mrs. Wilson and Dr. Fifield helped not a little the features of the program. Brother Miller, of Winlock, gave an address on "The Press"; Dr. Fifield on "Good Citizenship," which abounded in keen logic and convincing argument. In response to a very generous proposition by Mr. Miller, the Beacon was indorsed as the official paper of the Lewis county W. C. T. U.

The union at Shelton, Mason county, has been greatly benefited by a visit from Mrs. Dr. Fifield. Her informal talks to the ladies in the afternoon in relation to the different departments of our work were a wonderful help. Her suggestions were practical and are already bearing fruit in the increased interest in our meetings. Dr. Fifield's lecture here in the evening was pronounced the best we ever had by some of the men who were present. A white-ribboner said to her, "I believe that is the strongest dose we ever got." Her laughing reply was, "I am no homeopath." She was at all times so fair in spite of her forcible language that even the saloon-keeper on the front seat was not only interested but paid respectful attention throughout the lecture, laughing occasionally because so condemned he did not know what else to do. Shelton has sent good donations to the White Shield Home. The people of Shelton take great interest in the home and are always ready to assist it. Ten subscribers were secured for the state paper that was never published. We regret it for we need a paper of our own so much. A number of copies of THE UNION SIGNAL are taken, but we need a state organ as well. Mrs. Ready, of Centralia, visited Shelton and gave us such an earnest, motherly talk on social purity and mothers' meetings.

INDIAN TERRITORY.

ANNUAL CONVENTION.

The Territorial W. C. T. U. convention met at Claremore May 15 and 16. Eight delegates were present. The following officers were elected: Mrs. Ratcliff, Vinita, president; Mrs. Florence White, Claremore, vice-president; Mrs. Allenette Cook, Vinita, corresponding secretary; Miss Dell Lago, Muskogee, recording secretary; Mrs. Laura Harsha, Muskogee, treasurer. Delegates to the National Convention at Baltimore, Mrs. Allenette Cook, Vinita.

Convention will meet at Muskogee, Indian Territory, Wednesday and Thursday of the last week in October, 1895.

The following resolution was adopted in memory of Mrs. L. Jane Stapler: "We are indeed deeply grieved to note the death of Mrs. L. Jane Stapler, of Tahlequah, 'territorial advisory president.' Her gain is our great loss. She was kind, gentle and affectionate, never taking a prominent part in anything; but her advice was sought by all on all subjects. We will miss our kind adviser more than we can tell. She was one of the W. C. T. U's most reliable helpmates." Miss Frances E. Willard wrote Mrs. T. M. Fuller and the W. C. T. U. such a beautiful letter in memory of Mrs. Stapler. The following is the letter:

"EASTNOR CASTLE, LEDBURY,

It was so kind of you to send me the sad message—sad for us, but beautiful for that bright spirit, that motherly heart. I loved our sister, Jane Stapler, from the first, and always felt that she loved me. The conventions she attended, Atlanta, Boston and Cleveland, were made more memorable by her benignant presence and tender words. I am glad to have seen her so lately. I am gladdest of all that I shall see her in heaven. For our stay here is brief at longest, and when we have put in what honest toil we could to leave the world a little better than it was when we found it, we shall gladly wing our ways to scenes more fair, and find in the fields of light those who have outstripped us in the race for immortality. God bless you, brave women of the white ribbons, who have lost your blessed leader. God comfort those men and women who compose the family group in that hospitable home. Anna Gordon and I recall it lovingly, and are so glad we have been there. May her mantle fall on some sweet, strong, brave soul, who will lift the standard and bear it on. I hope you will send to THE UNION SIGNAL some account of her dear life and death and how she left you all as to the work. Lady Henry Somerset reverenced and loved our white-ribbon Cherokee chieftain, and so did our dear Anna Gordon. They both unite with me in tender sympathy for you all and loving remembrance. God bless you, and may we live our days in loyalty, love and good works, and go home to our blessed Lord when He shall call with joy and gladness, is the prayer of

IN MEMORY OF MISS ROSILLA CORBUT.

Early Tuesday morning, April 9, 1895, there passed away one of the sweetest characters it has been our lot to have with us, Miss Rosilla Corbut, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. J. J. Corbut, aged thirty-three years, who was born near Sedalia, Mo., December 7, 1861. Miss Rose was well known here and loved by all who knew her. She fitted herself for a teacher and taught several terms successfully. She also mastered the study of shorthand and was proficient in music. She united with the Presbyterian church, March 15, 1885. Some years ago that dreaded disease, consumption, brought on by exposure while teaching, laid its hand on her, and all through these years she has suffered with quiet resignation the ravages of this disease. Her Christian fortitude has been wonderful, so much so that many have been strengthened after a visit to her room. She was an active worker in the W. C. T. U. while her health lasted. Her sickness and death was a great sorrow and loss to us. The release was welcome to her and was indeed a falling asleep in Jesus, for she closed her eyes and passed away, just when no one knows. Verily, He giveth His beloved sleep.

IN MEMORY OF MRS. H. N. WRIGHT, ATOKA.

The death of Mrs. H. N. Wright, of Atoka, ex-treasurer of the W. C. T. U., Indian Territory, was a sad blow to us. Our loss has been great this year, Mrs. Stapler and Mrs. Wright, two of our best workers. We are at a loss to know how to work without them. But the dear Lord who knoweth and doeth best in all things will guide us and show us the way. Mrs. Wright was a kind and loving woman, and the empty chair in her home is a sorrow to us all. Truly God knoweth best.

KENTUCKY.

FLOWER MISSION DAY.

When the sainted Jennie Casseday, lying on her bed of suffering, sent her young friends out bearing flowers to those who, like herself, were confined to beds of sickness, she had little thought whereunto that simple act would grow. But even she was permitted to reap somewhat of her sowing, and now flower mission day is observed in all this broad land, and the custom has even crossed the ocean, and June 9th is looked forward to, not only by those confined to beds of sickness, but those behind the prison bars, to whom the day comes as a blessing, assuring them that they are not forgotten, but that Christ's followers are planning and praying and working that they may be lifted up from the mire and bondage of sin and wretchedness into the love and freedom which is in Christ Jesus. The 9th coming on Sunday this year the 8th was celebrated as Flower Mission Day in Kentucky. As has been the custom for some years, the penitentiary at Frankfort was visited by a number of ladies from the unions at Louisville, Lexington, Versailles and Midway, to which were added quite a number of ladies, residents of Frankfort. They were met at the station by the chaplain of the penitentiary and the warden and his wife, and were taken to the house of the latter where they had a short prayer service before going into the penitentiary. The chaplain, the Rev. Mr. Cooper, is in hearty sympathy with the W. C. T. U., and always writes before the time, urging as many ladies as can to come; but only mature, consecrated women are suitable for this work. Under the old lessee system the prisoners had to give up part of their dinner hour if they wished to attend the religious services.

In the course of time they granted them an hour, then a half-day's holiday and for the past two or three years, under the present system, the whole day has been given up to the flower missions. The prisoners, therefore, look forward to the day, not only to seeing people from the outside world, but to a cessation from labor.

There are between 1,100 and 1,200 prisoners confined there, forty of them women, eighteen white women among the number. A service was held for them first in the hospital of their department, which was appropriately decorated for the occasion, with Scripture texts on the walls, such as "I was in prison and ye visited me," etc. The chapel in which the service for the men was held was tastefully decorated with evergreens, and over the platform in letters of living green, was Welcome, W. C. T. U.

It was too small to accommodate all the prisoners who wished to come (for none are required) so the white men came first. The resident physician of the penitentiary welcomed the ladies with a few appropriate words, and after prayer and hearty singing, led by the prison choir, Mrs. Munnell, state superintendent of flower missions, and Mrs. Beauchamp, state organizer, made an address to the prisoners, which was listened to attentively. A little bunch of flowers and Scripture text was given to each prisoner and they filed out and the colored men came in and a similar service was held for them. The warden said he had a few words to say, and calling a small boy to his side, appealed to the ladies to use their influence in having a house of refuge established for boys of this age, who are constantly being sent to the penitentiary.

The chaplain, ever mindful of all, asked that some of the flowers be kept for the men in the dungeon and the ladies visited them and read and prayed with them. Though defiant at first they were somewhat softened by the words of these godly women.

They have a Christian Endeavor society in the penitentiary, numbering one hundred and twenty, and some of these acted as marshals of the day.

After lunch a few of the ladies went to the jail where a number of moonshiners are confined, awaiting trial, and held a service, which made a deep impression, some being moved to tears. The ladies left, praying God's blessing on the services of the day and hoping it may bring forth fruit to eternal life.

Cor. Secy's Notes.

The convention of Ohio's twenty-third district, and Michigan's twenty-first annual state convention, have been among the pleasant events in your corresponding secretary's life, since we last met in this column. It is always a delight to come into closer touch with our workers in their own home fields, and to mark their skill and efficiency; and although it must sometimes happen in our busy lives, as in this instance, that the speaker is too physically worn to be at her best and thus to give enthusiasm, she cannot fail to receive it and to come back to her work feeling more than ever sure of the permanency of our organization, and its ultimate victory. Michigan has done itself the honor of electing Mrs. Benjamin to its presidency, and she, feeling it to be clearly a call of duty, has accepted the position, nominating as her vice-president-at-large, the efficient corresponding secretary, Mrs. Parish. The other officers are the same as last year. The convention was one of unusual interest, and the work promises much for the near future.

While in Battle Creek, where the convention was held, I had the pleasure, not unmingled with pain, of calling upon the brilliant and efficient president of the South Dakota union, Mrs. Emma A. Cranmer, at the sanitarium, where she is a patient. Her untiring work of years has told at last in the return of a former illness, but it was good to see that skillful treatment and rest were already doing their work. She will, without doubt, be better equipped than ever before for the fall campaign. Meantime, let us not forget to hold her close in our love and prayers.

Again the daily papers are filled with the announcement of Miss Willard's coming marriage. It is a little embarrassing for the general officers to deny this report, since, if we were to be put upon our oath, we could not "swear" that Miss Willard is not to be married, having heard nothing from her to the contrary! Nevertheless, as we feel confident that we should hear of so important an event, were it to take place, we feel very safe in affirming that the rumor is wholly without foundation, and that it doubtless arose from the fact that the marriage of her niece, Katherine Willard, in Berlin, was so largely noticed by foreign and American papers. The reporter, wise above what is written, and with the keen scent for news which so strongly characterizes his class, probably seized upon the name as a nucleus for a choice morsel, and his vivid imagination did the rest. We are sure that, when so important an event takes place, our leader will have notified her coworkers here, so that the first announcement will not come through the daily press!

The president of the Peace Association of Friends, William G. Hubbard, of Columbus, O., makes this very liberal offer to state conventions: If each state convention will give an hour on its program to this subject, Mr. Hubbard, whose lectures on this theme have attracted much attention, will give an address, and there will be no expense connected with it, beyond traveling expenses and entertainment. This is a very liberal proposition, and I sincerely trust our state conventions will avail themselves of it.

Mr. S. C. K. Rutnam, of India, who has been laboring with Dr. Bushnell and Mrs. Andrew in the anti-opium crusade, and who is fully equipped to address audiences on "Missionary Work," "The Religion of India," "The Position of the Women of India," "The Opium Question," etc., is in this country, and is very desirous of making engagements to address conventions, summer meetings, etc. He may be addressed care Y. M. C. A., 40 East 23d St., New York city. This will be an excellent opportunity for our Chautauqua work, and coming in connection with the World's Convention and the missionary plans which will be originated there, it seems especially fitting that our unions should avail themselves of the opportunity to hear Mr. Rutnam.

An envelope, bearing date of May 2, from Toledo, O., was received at this office, unsealed, and with no enclosure. I trust this may reach the eyes of the sister, who, without doubt, is wondering what a corresponding secretary is for if not to answer letters. It is an easy thing for such a mistake to occur. Nevertheless, you will see that if the envelope was intended to hold anything important, it is not in any sense the fault of the officials at this end of the line that the object of the letter was not met. Please be careful that your letters start right, sisters, and we will do our best here.

A very bright idea, and one which ought to be made effective, has come to us from Kansas. It consists of an envelope and blank modeled exactly after those used by the telegraph companies, called a telegram. It bears the heading, "Heaven's Telegraph Company," and contains messages from God's Word, addressed to "A. Soul." This may be made a very effective means of reaching those whom the older form of tract or card might not reach. I hope it will be widely disseminated. Those wishing to secure a sample copy may address Mrs. C. E. C. Quick, of Nickerson, Kan.

In these days, when the alcoholic habit seems to be fastening itself upon the people, through countless avenues, it is well to be guarded upon all sides. The liquid essences seem, in themselves, perfectly harmless, and yet so many sad stories are coming to us constantly of those who have been injured through their use and of those attempting to reform, who have been led into temptation through them, that it is time for us to call a halt along this line also. Various attempts to provide a substitute have been made, but none so effective, to my thought, as the essences sent out now by the Consolidated Perfume Company, of Chicago. Their essences are absolutely pure, and have such great strength and delicacy of flavor that those who have used them once are not willing to return to the old form. This is not an advertisement in any true sense of the term, but simply an indorsement of a very honest effort to present pure food and aid in temperance reform.

Again there is a hiatus in the Organizers' Column arising, without doubt, from some good reason on the part of those to whom were apportioned these special dates. Please remember, sisters, that this space is yours and that each date has been carefully assigned, therefore, if you find a blank instead of a column of breezy news, rest assured that some one other than the editor of THE UNION SIGNAL is at fault; turn your eye back upon your own memory, or better still, your memorandum and, ask, "Is it I?"

Up to the date of writing, June 13, official blanks have been received by your superintendent from eight organizers, giving a total of seventy-nine unions organized by them. The list stands as follows: Mrs. Bullock, 15; Mrs. Skelton, 14; Miss Parrish, 13; Miss Ensign, 10; Mrs. Calkins and Mrs. Unruh, 9 each; Miss Carter, 8; Miss Kearney, 1. These foot up a total of 1,166 active and 372 honorary members, received from new unions. In addition, Mrs. Skelton has sent in blanks certifying to 234 new members secured to old unions in Kentucky alone, and Miss Kearney to 29 in other points. I am sure this report is very inadequate. In one instance alone, that of Miss Kearney, I know that several unions have been organized where no blanks have been sent in. Doubtless this is true of many from whom none have been received; the organizers are probably keeping them to send all together in the summing up of the year's work, but I thought it might be helpful in the absence of personal reports to give this little bird's eye view of what has been already accomplished by a few. My views on the subject of organization and the status of organizers are much more pronounced than before my Southern trip and I am earnestly hoping that there may be wise legislation in the matter at the forthcoming Convention.

SPIRITUAL GIFTS AND GRACES. By Rev. W. B. Godbey. This little volume is published by M. W. Knapp, of The Revivalist, 520 Chase avenue, Cincinnati, O., and is a clear and compact exposition of the doctrine of the indwelling of the Holy Ghost as taught in the Scriptures. In less than one hundred pages the author, himself a living exemplification of the doctrine, discourses of the incompleteness of the life of the individual and of the church without the indwelling Spirit, the nine distinct gifts of the Spirit as enumerated in I Cor. 12:8–11, spiritual graces as distinct from these gifts, closing with a burning plea that Christians do not fail in loyalty to the Trinity—the Three in One.

THE BROWNIE SONG BOOK. By S. G. Pratt. This is a collection of nine merry Brownie songs set to merry music, sure to please the little folks, their friends and teachers. Everybody loves the quaint, mischievous, mirth provoking sprites of Mr. Palmer Cox's creation, and will welcome this addition to their repertoire.

With a pair of bagpipes under his arm;
He could sing nothing but fiddle-cum-fee

LUTHER HALSEY GULICK. Missionary in Hawaii, Micronesia, Japan and China. By Frances Gulick Jewett.

"Lives of great men all remind us"—

None more so than this breezy book. At fifteen Halsey Gulick wrote: "I will claim the whole heathen world as my countrymen." The resolve was kept.

The "life" is distinctly what Browning thought the only object worthy of study, the history of a soul. The inner life, gathered from journals and letters, is portrayed with rare skill and fidelity. The father's mantle of self-effacement and of pithy expression has fallen upon his daughter and biographer.

To the temperance worker a passage of deep interest is that relating to good King George of Kusaie, the one example in Micronesia of a man who, before the advent of Christianity, did right because it was right. His philosophic mind was alive to preventive measures. Only one missionary and his wife were suffered to live on Kusaie at first, for this reason: "Like one white man come; not many. If many come, rum come, fight come."

The writer adds: "His sentiments on the temperance question were manifest everywhere. Total prohibition was the law of the land, a law so strenuously enforced that he allowed no cocoanut tree to be tapped on Kusaie. In the forceful words of King George, 'Plenty white men speak me very good; tap cocoanut tree; get toddy. Me say no, no good. Plenty men get drunk on shore; too much row; me like quiet; no tap cocoanut tree on Kusaie.' And that was the end of it. Kusaieans did not get drunk. An autocrat in heathen Micronesia was able to enforce temperance legislation."

Congregational Sunday-school and Publishing Society. Boston and Chicago.

THE CHRISTIAN SOCIETY, by George D. Herron, is a most admirable little work upon social problems, their cause and their cure. Yet it will not receive a popular reading for it levels hard blows at many who, although identified in one way or other with these causes, want none of the true cure. The author gives plain utterance to the world's need of Christ,—not a future Christ but a present Saviour who shall rule in market and street and home. "Laws cannot make men unselfish," writes the author. "They can restrain; but all legal righteousness is but temporary. Police righteousness is not divine righteousness. Force-justice is unreal justice. The state cannot, by any possible process, make the rich man unselfish, or the poor man thrifty. The state cannot establish justice and righteousness on the earth; but justice and righteousness must establish the state. Except the state be born again, it cannot see the kingdom of God." Mr. Herron treats his subject in five chapters: I. The Scientific Ground of a Christian Sociology. II. The Christian Constitution of Society. III. The Gospel of Jesus to the Poor. IV. The Message of Jesus to Men of Wealth. V. The Political Economy of the Lord's Prayer. The book is wholesomely honest; it contains nothing new. It is only one more utterance out of a conviction born of God.

ALMOST A MAN. By Mary Wood Allen, M. D., superintendent department of purity, National W. C. T. U. A booklet of thirty-nine pages, setting forth in a very apt story the need that children should learn the truths concerning their bodies from the lips of mothers or wise friends. Dr. Allen's pen is never more pointed and facile than when writing on this and kindred subjects, and the above-named work is but a fresh exemplification of this truth.

IN THE LAND OF LORNA DOONE, by William H. Rideing, we have a delightfully graphic re-introduction to the scenes of Mr. Blackmore's charming romance. Exmoor is one of the wildest countries of England, and the author sounds a warning note to "the wayfarer who thinks it as easy to cross afoot as it looks," so deceptive are the distances of the wild moorland. "Nearly everywhere in the neighborhood there is something to remind us of Lorna Doone and John Ridd." We also take a trip "In Cornwall with an Umbrella," "Coaching Trips out of London," see "A Bit of Yorkshire Coast," and visit the historical home of "Amy Robsant, Kenilworth and Warwick."

Published by T. Y. Crowell & Co., Boston and New York. Cloth, Price $1.

One of the most forcible books that has reached our TABLE is one not great in size nor striking in title,—MASTER AND MEN, by William Burnet Wright. The "Master" is Christ; the sub-title explains the purpose of the book more fully: "The Sermon on the Mountain Practiced on the Plain." The opening chapter contains this sentence: "Some of the most conspicuous characteristics which distinguish Christendom from Heathendom puzzle plain men." Some of the puzzles are presented and they are the inconsistencies between the Master's life and precepts and our common practice. Taking as a text, the Beatitudes, the writer attacks these puzzles, and under the magic of his touch they become plain. The book ought to be a power for good in these troublesome times when reformers, philanthropists, socialists, are knitting brows, burning midnight oil and expending energy on the snarl of human conditions. But behind Mr. Wright's words are the "Blesseds" of the Master,—and they alone hold the secret of all peace and victory.

SOCIAL REFORM AND THE CHURCH. By John R. Commons, Professor of Economics and Social Science, Indiana University. Introduction by Richard T. Ely.

The world is looking more and more to the church for a solution of the great problems that each day are growing in importance and in difficulty. Such a book as Professor Commons' is well calculated to have awakening effect. He is himself a church member, but he is not blinded to the faults of the church and he does not withhold the scourge of criticism. It is not negative criticism but practical and positive and constructive. From the thesis that "Christianity is the cause of our social problems" he deduces the arguments that the church, if it is to represent the cause of Christ must instantly grapple with the social ills of the day. Marriage and divorce, intemperance, crime, pauperism and poverty, wealth and luxury, the relations of labor and capital, all come under the great complex laws which regulate the duties of man and therefore are of equal importance with the more distinctively religious functions of the church as expressed in the worship of God. Even those who may differ from Professor Commons must admire the man's earnestness, courage and zeal. He fortifies his position with a strong array of facts, he argues closely and logically and pushes home his logic with practical illustrations.

Here and There.

"Were you ever up before me?" asked a police justice.

"Shure, I don't know, yer anner. What time does yer anner get up?"

Little Natalie was out walking with her mother at night, when for the first time she noticed an electric light. Pointing to it with her chubby little finger, she exclaimed, "See ze moon on a stick!"

Little two-year-old Eleanor was greatly interested in seeing her mother mend a hole in her little stocking. The next day she ran to her mother, exclaiming, "Baby's got a hole in her hand. Mamma mend it." She held up her fat, chubby little hand, and the hole was—a dimple.

Teacher.—Why was George Washington a great man?

Tommy.—Because we don't have no school on his birthday.

An old Scotch lady who had no relish for modern church music was expressing her disike to the singing of an anthem in her own church, one day, when a neighbor said: "Why, that is a very old anthem! David sang that anthem to Saul." To this the old lady replied: "Weel, weel! I noo for the first time understan' why Saul threw his javelin at David when the lad sang for him."

Able Editor—"You have not yet turned in your regular batch of jokes, Mr. Hawhaw."

Mr. Hawhaw (the professional humorist)—"I'll try to do them to-morrow, sir, I haven't felt in the mood to-day."

Able Editor—"What is the matter? Are you ill?"

Mr. Hawhaw—"No; only out of humor."

It doesn't take a sleight-of-hand performer to get a square meal off a round steak.

Here is a somewhat paradoxical remark found in a recent historical work: "Rain fell heavily all day long on the battle field. By nightfall ten thousand men had bitten the dust."

The English language is not so rich as some others in the matter of rhymes, but even in English there are many happy coincidences of sound—spring and sing, for example, bird and heard, and worm and squirm.

In these days of frequent burglaries it is well to observe all reasonable precautions. A Chicago paper says that a man went home from business and found this notice in his wife's handwriting in a conspicuous place on the front door: "Dear Fred: I have gone over to mother's, and have hidden the key so that no one can find it but you. It is under the left lower corner of the door mat."

A Buffalo photographer lost a customer the other day, according to the Courier. When he had everything in readiness, he said:

"Now, lady, look beautiful and happy. So! that's it. There, I have you. Now you may resume your natural expression."

A summer boarder inquired at the local book store for the "Letters of Jane Welch Carlyle," and was snappishly informed, "This ain't no postoffice."

Home Hints.

Any family that can afford it should possess a freezer. Ice cream is expensive in cities, because of the high price and poor quality of fresh cream, but fruit ices are not costly and are more palatable in hot weather. Here is an excellent recipe for

PINEAPPLE-LEMON ICE.

One grated pineapple.
Three lemons.
Two tablespoons gelatine soaked in cold water half an hour.
Two quarts water.
One quart sugar.

Boil sugar and water and cool; add gelatine, pineapple and lemon just before it cools.

When entirely cold, freeze.

If well packed in ice, let it stand two hours before eating. For lemon ice, without the pineapple, use eight lemons to one quart of water and the white of one egg (added in the freezer) in place of the gelatine.

These directions for preparing a rose jar come from one who is enjoying one so made seven years ago. Gather fresh rose leaves in the middle of the day. Put them in small bowls or tumblers, first a handful of leaves, then a pinch of salt, until the receptacles are full. Other fragrant leaves, lavender, rose geranium, etc., may be used if desired. Let them lie loosely until thoroughly moistened through before adding the spices. Use cinnamon, cloves, nutmeg, allspice, ginger and coffee, all or any of them, as you choose. Do not use ground spices. The leaves should be emptied out and stirred daily, until thoroughly cured. In about a week they will be ready for sachet powders and other perfumes, used liberally. Two or three drops of attar of roses will give lasting strength and fragrance. When all prepared, place in your rose jar, which, left open for a little time, will fill your room with the breath of the roses.

To make a delicate dessert take bananas, remove the skins, pour over the fruit a little sugar and water, and bake as you would apples, serve ice cold, with or without cream.

---

The time of vacations, with plans for the country, mountains and seaside are here. Many a nerve and brain wearied woman will further wear herself out, by the way in which she prepares for her journey. How natural for many to put off trunk packing until the last day. Turn over a new leaf this year. Begin collecting in one place as you come across them, the things you are to pack. The mind, without making a burden of the matter, will seem to catalogue your belongings, and on the last day it will be but a small task to do the final assorting and packing. This is the greatest surety that nothing will be forgotten.

---

To remove traces of disagreeable smelling substances from the hands, use a paste of ground mustard and water.

---

To preserve the delicate tints in flowers press them between paper which has been previously saturated with a solution of one per cent of oxalic acid in water. Herr Nienhas, a German scientist, discovered this method, which, he claims will perfectly preserve the palest hues.

---

The teakettle is a source of much impurity in cooking, because it is not daily washed and dried. Water that has stood in the kettle over night, or which has boiled and stood on the stove for any length of time should not be used, as it gathers impurities from the atmosphere.

---

The top to a glass fruit jar and the glass bottle stopper are among the things which oftenest show "the perversity of inanimate objects," for they generally refuse to be opened when one has but little time to bestow upon them. We are told that there need be no trouble if the can or bottle is quickly inverted and the head plunged into a kettle of hot water. The heat expands the neck of the article so that the cover or stopper can readily be removed. Here is another unfailing way to open a glass stoppered bottle. Place the head of the stopper in the crack between the door and the jamb on the hinge side, close the door sufficiently to hold the stopper as in a vice. Turn the bottle firmly and out comes the obdurate top. Still another method is to heat the neck of the bottle by the light of a match.

Publisher's Notes

BOTH BUSINESS AND PHILANTHROPIC.

Subscribers to our monthly Bible and Responsive Readings will readily understand that a program arranged at the beginning of the year for the ensuing twelve months must, in the very nature of things, be subject to change. We have to announce a change in both the Bible and the Responsive Readings for July. Circumstances having made it impossible for Mrs. Weaver to furnish the former as expected, we take pleasure in giving our unions a Reading prepared by Mrs. Anna M. Vail, entitled "Some Christian Graces." The writer makes special application of the subject to white-ribbon women, rendering it an exposition of peculiar interest and power to W. C. T. U. workers.

Mrs. Maude Greene being still too ill to prepare the promised reading on "Chalk-Talks," the July Responsive Reading will treat of "The Young Woman's Paper," the author being Mrs. Frances Yarnall, a leading Y worker of New York state. Speaking as it does for the Y National organ, Young Women, and its mission as a strengthener of the "Branch" which is itself a present strength and future hope of the parent organization, both W's and Y's should make special effort for the extensive use of this Reading by local unions.

A white-ribboner who sent in six renewal subscriptions to THE UNION SIGNAL, thus securing for each the aquarelle portrait of Miss Willard, writes: "The pictures of our dear Chief came to hand promptly. The sisters are delighted with them, and all unite in thanking you for sending us this treasure."

L. T. L. workers will be glad to know that a revised pamphlet of L. T. L. Plans on the subject of Diplomas and Seals has been prepared by Mrs. Rice, and is now in press.

It will be remembered that some weeks ago an appeal was made through THE UNION SIGNAL—called forth by a letter received at this office from a convict in one of our penitentiaries—for donations of literature to be sent to the prison. A second letter just at hand says: "The request for reading matter has brought many kind letters, several bundles of papers, books and a box of flowers. A man must be made of stone if he does not see that there are yet those who will help even a convict. The flowers were a happy thought of a kind heart. All the papers are read and passed on. We pretend no reform, ask no help of any clergy, but let us read and think. I know of seven who will never more drink, who have been drinkers and gamblers and total unbelievers. So much has been done, not by talk but by reading. I have no language at my command to thank you—so deep do we feel in debt to you for helping us out of what was our past curse and might have been our future ruin. Also the good readers of your paper that so generously sent us letters and papers."

Hundreds of the girl friends—and oubtless many older friends—of white-ribboners are planning to master the fin de siècle Bucephalus, the bicycle, as part of their summer program. The steel steed draws its votaries from all classes, for it is the most democratic of "thoroughbreds," and for the school-girl, the "sweet girl graduate," the society belle, the wage-worker—for all who are learning to ride—Miss Willard's little book, "A Wheel within a Wheel," will possess a peculiar charm. No more fitting gift could be found for an embryo cyclist. We will send THE UNION SIGNAL for one year and a copy of this popular and helpful book for $1.35, providing the order reaches us before August 1.

Summer Meetings.

UNITED SOCIETY OF CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR.

Fourteenth annual convention, Boston, Mass., July 10–15.

EPWORTH LEAGUE.

Second International Conference, Chattanooga, Tenn., June 27–30.

POLITICAL REFORM—A CALL FOR A NATIONAL CONFERENCE.

University Temple, Prohibition Park, Staten Island, June 28–July 4.

The object of the conference is to be an interchange of views on leading questions.

The discussion shall be open alike to those who are friendly or hostile to these various views, believing that the way to reach a closer union is through free speech and a clearer understanding of the views held by all. If possible, without a violation of principle, the friends of political reform should enter the next presidential campaign united. No harm can come from a frank talk along these lines.

The conference will be a representative one, all political reform organizations being invited to participate; as, the Prohibition party, People's party, Socialist Labor party, organizations that advocate civil service reform, single tax, direct tax, Sunday observance, and all other organizations that aim at cleaner politics and a better government.

NUMBER OF DELEGATES:—Local organizations to be entitled to one delegate to every twenty members; representative organizations less than state, five delegates each; state organizations, ten each; National organizations, twenty each. Each delegate will be expected to present credentials signed by the proper officer of the society or organization he represents. Other delegates may be granted the privilege of the floor, but not the privilege of voting.

The resolutions or motions adopted or carried will be expressive of the sentiment of the conference, but will not be binding upon the individual delegates or the bodies they represent.

ASSESSMENT:—Each delegate will be required to contribute one dollar to meet the expenses of the conference. The auditorium, lighting, and much of the general advertisement, are contributed free.

RAILROAD FARE:—It is expected that special rates can be secured on the railroads for delegates and friends. Full announcement will be made later.

HOTEL ACCOMMODATIONS within the Park at $1 to $2; good accommodations at the Park Hotel at $1.50 per day, or guests who prefer can stop in New York city.

MOODY BIBLE INSTITUTE.

At this season of the year there are a great many ministers, evangelists, Christian workers and others passing through Chicago who would be glad to see the various forms of Christian activities in this city. The Bible Institute, which is open throughout the entire year, is glad to announce that during the month of June Dr. A. T. Pierson, who filled Mr. Spurgeon's Tabernacle the first year after his death, will lecture each morning at eleven o'clock, except Sunday and Monday, in the lecture room at 80 Institute Place, on the North side of the city; and Prof. W. W. White at nine o'clock.

Pastors with their wives desiring to see the work of the institute for a day, while passing through Chicago, may room and take their meals in the Institute building if they so desire.

TO ALL MINISTERS OF THE GOSPEL.

Greetings, "In the name of the Lord of Hosts."

The National Christian Citizenship League was organized in Chicago in 1894. It already has auxiliaries in various states and territories, and exists for the following purposes, viz:

1. To reveal Jesus Christ as the Saviour of the state and nation as well as of the individual.

2. To make Christian principles operative in public affairs.

3. To unite the followers of Christ in consistent, harmonious and aggressive action for these purposes.

In furtherance of this three-fold object we invoke the special aid of the pulpit on Sunday, June 30, just preceding the Fourth of July.

That day will be a most appropriate and opportune time for emphasizing the fact that "Righteousness exalteth a nation and sin is a reproach to any people," and for stimulating the Christian Citizenship of our land to a more united and active demand for public purity.

We ask for a hundred thousand sermons on Christian Citizenship on that day, and suggest that extracts therefrom be printed in the public press and otherwise given the widest possible circulation.

The enemies of Christ are united and aggressive. The people of God must be aroused from their apathy and led to stand for the supreme right of Christ to rule in everything.

This League has prepared helpful and suggestive literature on these lines which will be sent free to ministers on application.

We cordially invite correspondence from all pastors and others interested, and hope that there may be a grand united effort in the interest of Christian Citizenship.

Signal Notes.

TWENTY-ONE temperance associations have been formed in India during the past winter, with an enrollment of two thousand new members.

A RECENT compilation of the mission gifts of Congregational churches show that the contributions for home missions are five times as great as for foreign work.

IN Cork the Woman's Christian Temperance Association has a membership of three hundred and fifty in the third year of its history. It is doing effective work in the south of Ireland.

ACCORDING to the report given at the London May meeting of the Salvation Army they now have fifty rescue homes in England and other countries, which receive annually three thousand women.

TENT ENDEAVOR is the place of meeting for all temperance workers during the great C. E. convention in Boston, July 10-15, 1895. Mr. John G. Woolley is to speak on "Church Resolutions vs. Saloon Resolutions."

THE first white woman to penetrate the interior behind the coast belt at Batanga, West Africa, is Mrs. C. J. Lafflin, who with her husband walked the greater part of the long journey to Efulen, a Presbyterian mission station, displaying great courage and endurance.

A VETERAN journalist, George Augustus Sala, has been comparing the cost of living at the present time with that of half a century ago. His conclusion is that while the great majority of articles and the accessories of civilization are considerably cheaper than they were, the cost of living is much greater, because all classes consume or enjoy a great deal more than they formerly did.

A GOOD work has been begun in Chicago for homeless women, under the name of the "Model Workshop and Lodging House Association." The enterprise is supported by thirty-three of the women's clubs of the city. For fifteen cents a night a woman can have the privileges of a bath, a clean gown, use of sitting room and library besides a comfortable bed. If penniless she can pay for lodging by housework and sewing.

THE recent supreme court decision at Des Moines, Iowa, will probably result in the closing of all mulct saloons in that city. The saloon men will be obliged to prove the validity of all signatures to the petitions of consent, which purport to contain over one-half the voters registered at the last general election, in favor of open saloons. This they cannot do. The temperance league in other cities will commence similar suits with great hopes of success.

THE Boys' Brigade, which began in Glasgow twelve years ago, now numbers seven hundred and fifty companies, with over two thousand six hundred officers and thirty-three thousand boys in the United Kingdom. If these boys are not being trained for war, appearances are very much against them, armed as they are with swords and guns. Lord Aberdeen has accepted the presidency of the Canadian branch, which now numbers four thousand members.

OXFORD, PA., United Presbyterian church society has issued an impressive appeal in an open letter to its theological seminaries quoting the declaration of the Church General Assembly in 1894, and then presenting an array of pointed questions regarding the duty of the Christian voter toward the rum power in politics. Their request is that the answers be given through the church papers for the benefit of the many interested. The Christian temperance readers of those papers await with interest the outcome.

AND now comes the belated Canadian Royal Commission, in the face of astonishing majorities, in every province of the Dominion excepting Quebec, favoring prohibition, reporting against it. They hold to the wilted arguments that the government cannot be run without the revenue derived from liquor sellers, and could not raise funds enough to compensate the latter for the suppression of their business. The sister and mother countries have already destroyed the latter fallacy, of payment for the privilege of removing a public injury. Experience has proved that the liquor traffic's impoverishing power far offsets its financial support. A Rip Van Winkle commission surely, but liable to be awakened from its lethargy ere long.

Young Mothers

should early learn the necessity of keeping on hand a supply of Gail Borden Eagle Brand Condensed Milk for nursing babies as well as for general cooking. It has stood the test for 30 years, and its value is recognized.

Half Fare Excursion via the Wabash

For the International Christian Endeavor Convention, which is to be held at Boston in July, the Wabash railroad offers a rate of one first-class, limited fare for the round trip. Tickets will be on sale at the Wabash ticket office, 97 Adams St., Chicago, July 5, 6, 7, 8 and 9. The Wabash has been selected as the official route from Chicago by the Christian Endeavor organizations of Iowa, Nebraska, Colorado, Illinois and Chicago. Secure your tickets via this route and go by the way of Niagara Falls. For map of Boston, time tables, full information as to routes, etc., send a postal card to F. A. Palmer, A. G. P. A., 97 Adams St., Chicago.

To Teachers and Others.

For the meeting of the National Educational Association at Denver, Colo., in July next, the Western trunk lines have named a rate of one standard fare, plus two dollars, for the round trip. Variable routes will be permitted. Special side trips at reduced rates will be arranged for from Denver to all the principal points of interest throughout Colorado, and those desiring to extend the trip to California, Oregon and Washington, will be accommodated at satisfactory rates. Teachers and others that desire, or intend attending this meeting or of making a western trip this summer, will find this their opportunity, The Chicago, Milwaukee & St. Paul Railway (first-class in every respect) will run through cars Chicago to Denver. For full particulars, write to or call on F. A. MILLER, Assistant General Passenger Agent, Chicago, Ill.

THE INCOMPARABLE CHICAGO & ALTON.

In these United States of America at least, and it is highly probable that throughout the entire world, the official record for the safety and welfare of its passengers made and maintained by the Chicago & Alton Railroad cannot be surpassed, if indeed it can be equaled.

Over its completely rock-ballasted, dustless roadway between Chicago and Kansas City, Chicago and St. Louis and St. Louis and Kansas City, eighteen magnificently appointed express trains are run on uniformly fast time every day. But in spite of this heavy passenger traffic the official records show that from December 4, 1879, to December 4, 1890, eleven years, there was no passenger, who was in place as a passenger, killed on Chicago & Alton trains. Moreover there was not a passenger seriously injured, to the extent of losing a limb, an eye or a member of any kind during that time.

During the entire period of the World's Columbian Exposition in Chicago, when it was not an uncommon thing to find the usual passenger traffic of the road increased two, three and four-fold, and special excursion trains and extra sections of regular trains were very many, there was not an accident of any kind—a most remarkable record.

Besides being America's most popular railroad, the Chicago & Alton is the Pioneer Dining Car Line, the Pioneer Pullman Sleeping Car Line, and the Pioneer Palace Reclining Chair Car Line.

Be sure that your ticket reads over the Chicago & Alton Railroad, when its matchless and direct lines can form the whole or even a part of your journey.

SINCE OUR LAST ISSUE.

Emperor William, of Germany, formally opened the Baltic and North Sea Canal, June 20.

Both Lord Rosebery, the Premier, and the Secretary of War in Great Britain's cabinet have resigned.

Dr. D. K. Pearsons gives fifty thousand dollars to Beloit College because it has admitted young women to its halls of learning.

Dr. William D. Mackenzie, of Edinburg, Scotland, has accepted a call to the chair of systematic theology in the Chicago Theological Seminary.

The Iowa State Prohibition convention was held in Des Moines last week. Mrs. L. D. Carhart, treasurer of the state W. C. T. U., was nominated for superintendent of public instruction.

The tetautograph was successfully employed by the Times-Herald of Chicago last week, in securing autograph letters from prominent members of the National Republican League in session at Cleveland.

A brewery in Brooklyn, N. Y., was seized June 18 by internal revenue laws on the charge that canceled stamps had been used. A deputy was placed in charge and the United States government continued to run the brewery.

THE Hillsboro, O., W. C. T. U., held a memorial meeting in the old Crusade church on June 21, just before its complete demolition. We are anticipating a graphic account of the exercises for our next issue from Mother Thompson's own pen.

MRS. MARY CLEMENT LEAVITT wishes us to say that as she has not yet reached her sixty-fifth birthday, she cannot claim the honor of being "nearly threescore years and ten," as we stated in our issue of June 13. We took the statement from a Portland paper and are glad to make the correction.

ONE of the very best suggestions for the betterment of the unemployed has already been put into practice in New York city and vicinity. Owners of vacant lots and idle land have been requested to allow these spaces to be utilized for gardening purposes and arrangements made to exploit the product for the benefit of those who till the ground. In some cases the proprietor has himself agreed to pay wages to unemployed men who thus develop the value of ground heretofore useless. Mrs. Charles Lowell is stated to have given it as her opinion, and she is probably the best expert in the city, that it would be better for the helpless poor to be henceforth entrusted to individual care, and the united energies of organized societies to be devoted to finding work for the workless.

THE great temperance meetings of the past week in London have been made signal events by the international press. Never before have our conventions been so amply reported, even in the home lands. The many dailies of Chicago, which have come under our observations most extensively, have granted prominent position, not only to the cable dispatches, but to the subject matter of the addresses and reports. Our readers have already had a large part of Miss Willard's address through these columns, and in our issue of July 11, we hope to present considerable other matter of importance. A cablegram to THE UNION SIGNAL dated London, June 21, says: "Convention closed; magnificent meetings Wednesday and Thursday and wonderful demonstration Thursday evening. Miss Willard reëlected. London made the headquarters. UNION SIGNAL reaffirmed as the official organ." Miss Stewart's account of the voyage will be found on page 4. Our delegates left London June 24 for Grindelwald, and are enjoying the rare ozone and inspiring scenes of that wonderful valley.

WE had thought that Mrs. Mary H. Hunt had gone to London for the World's Convention, but, on June 18, received a telegram from her, dated Boston, Mass., and containing these words of jubilee, "The New York bill for a stronger temperance educational law was signed Saturday. A marvelous victory." We rejoice with Mrs. Hunt and our Empire sisters and congratulate Governor Morton for his courage and fidelity in signing the bill, which was so strongly opposed not only by prominent members of his party but by the state superintendent of public instruction. The next good news that we shall hear from Mrs. Hunt will be from the states of Arkansas or Georgia, the only remaining ones that have not passed some kind of a scientific temperance instruction bill. With all the children of her native land under temperance education laws, she will doubtless seek for more worlds to conquer, and we trust that the next biennial convention of the World's W. C. T. U. will report not only the United States, but England and other countries teaching their youth the dangers of strong drink. Apropos of this, we want to call the attention of our readers to the fact that Mrs. Hunt's birthday, July 4 (quite likely that's the reason she is so patriotic), has been designated by the National W. C. T. U. as scientific temperance day as well as a national holiday. It should be a time of great rejoicing this year with four new states under control of temperance text-books.

Two more notable donations have been made to the Temple this week. One of seven thousand five hundred dollars, from Mrs. Dora M. Root, wife of the late John H. Root, the architect, and another of five thousand dollars from Mrs. A. F. Chamberlain, a member of the Chicago Central W. C. T. U., who has given large annual subscriptions to the various missions of the Central union. These gifts, with the five thousand dollars reported last week, and one thousand not yet recorded, make eighteen thousand five hundred secured within a fortnight. Let us all hold up Mrs. Carse's hands in prayer and faith these days.

THE UNION SIGNAL takes no stand either for or against "free silver," because, while it recognizes the importance of the question, it considers it an issue too large to be taken up in addition to its own distinctive work. However, the financial question is one of such universal interest that we cannot altogether ignore it and whenever any incontrovertible facts appear which bear upon either side of the question, we consider that we do not step outside of our proper "sphere" but follow a plain duty in calling the attention of our readers to them. Such a fact just now presents itself in connection with the revival of business. A short time ago one of the old school political economists, in combating some modern financial ideas, made the statement that a change in the money of the country would injure the laborer more than any other member of society, because, while prices would advance wages would not; that wages were very slow to move. From our own general information we were inclined to dispute this statement at once and the flat denial of it is now given by the actual facts. From all sides come statements of the rise in wages as one of the strongest evidences of the revival of trade and recently the New York Times published a list of more than a hundred large firms which have advanced wages from five per cent to twenty per cent, the advance affecting some one hundred and sixty thousand workmen. This simply proves that almost the first thing to show the return of financial prosperity is the wage-fund; an advance in wages is the first instead of the last thing to occur.

To think upon public questions is in itself a means of grace and growth. A woman whose mental vision is not limited to the horizon of her household cannot help being a larger, truer woman and a greater power for good in the world. Municipal reform will never succeed until men and women undertake it side by side, but whenever reformers advocate woman's ballot for the saloon evil, the gambling house abomination and the horrors of the house of infamy, the best people cry out in unison, "But, if you give the ballot to all women think of the bad ones that will vote." Do these well meaning people really believe that there are more bad people in civilized and Christianized communities than there are good ones? The publican and brewer do not think so; the distillers and gamblers do not think so. The principal brewers' organ in California stated recently that in a free country like this the liquor dealer has nothing to fear at present; his interests are safe. But beware of woman's suffrage, if that gains ground we are undone." The trouble is that government is at present largely materialistic; it is a government of business interests; in our legislative halls, dollars and not conscience speak. In fact, the real conscience of the country at large is seldom heard on any public question. This is not because men are essentially worse than women, but it is due to the fact that the standards of men and women are on an entirely different ethical basis. A man is born handicapped, so far as morals are concerned, for he soon learns that a lower basis of conduct is not only tolerated, but expected in his case; and men are received in good society whose deeds, if done by women, would forever bar them from that charmed circle.

A PRAYER OF JUNE.

BY LOUISE S. BAKER.

Would that my life were rooted hard in love!
Love so divine and consecrate, above
All petty fears, all turbulence, that strong
And sturdy it should grow; its place among
The noble and the true. With heart of gold,
With purity of thought and royal bent,
Would that its petals beauteous might unfold
Flower after flower of sweet and fragrant scent.

This wish, this prayer, O yearning soul of mine,
Can only be fulfilled by daily shrine.
By incense of devotion and its deeds,
By patient lighting of the flame of hope,
By sure content in broad or narrow scope.
Sometimes the inner struggle brings the beads
That tell of conflict on the heated brow.
'Tis well! Should we not also willing, bow
Our heads, since He, our Master, often knew
Of pain and sorrow that He might be true?

Keep on, my soul, there's much of sun to cheer,
To warm and cherish. Gather to thyself
Not eagerly, the sordid, wasting pelf
Of earthly fame alone, but now and here
Live unto Him whose heart is like the June.
All sweetness, love; who makes the midnight noon,
Or fills it full of stars; who makes our days
So full of gladness and demands our praise.

Nantucket, Mass.

NOT A POPULAR REMEDY.

BY J. F. COWAN.

"Yes," said a loud-mouthed declaimer in the saloon, setting down his glass upon the table with a thump and raising his hand high in gesture, "the wrongs of the poor man must be remedied. Things can't go on this way much longer. Flesh and blood won't stand it. I tell you if they don't begin to pay some attention to our mutterings pretty soon, they will hear something which will open their ears."

"That's right," broke in a boon companion removing his mug of beer from his lips long enough to second the sentiments of the other. "This thing has gone on long enough. Here we toil a half mile under ground, in the darkness and cold, to dig out fuel to make other people's homes warm and cheerful, and in return for our dangerous and exhausting labor are treated like dogs. Our wives and children go ragged and hungry and we get poorer and poorer every year. In God's name how much more do they think we can stand?"

"I say," broke in a third miner of the group, who had been listening attentively to what the others had been saying; "there's a fellow who moved into one of the vacant houses to-day that was a-talkin' with me and my wife, and what he said is real sensible and businesslike. He was inquiring about the prices of things here and the way we lived, and 'lowed he could live decent and comfortable for less money than it was costin' most of us, by applyin' some sort of new rules that some fellow had got up for providin' healthy food and clothin' without any waste. I told him to go ahead and work the thing out, and if it was a go to let us know and we'd all pitch in. They're makin' a fine start at their place, though."

"Oh, drat it! What's the use of coming here and talking such rot as that? The man who says laboring men and their families are extravagant is a liar. He doesn't know what he is talking about. He sits down in his fine parlor or in his handsome office, with its silver cuspidors and walnut desk and Brussels carpet, and figures the thing out of his head. I'd like for some of 'em to come here and try their new-fangled notions of living for awhile on a miner's wages. Don't you suppose they're fools enough to do it! Not while they're so comfortably fixed, with the top of the market on their tables and servants to run at every call. He must be one of them there philanthropists, or whatever they call 'em, that's going around among the poor people to teach 'em how to take better care of what they've got. We don't want any of his help. What we want is fair wages and honest treatment, and if there isn't a bill put through the legislature before many weeks giving it to us, I tell you there's going to be trouble." The man's brow darkened as he spoke, and he struck his fist upon the table with a thud.

"That's what is the matter!"

"You're right, Jack! Give us more of that kind!"

"What we want is fair laws for the workingmen!"

These and a number of equally hearty expressions of approval of the sentiments the first speaker had just uttered came from the lips of those gathered around him, engaged in drinking beer and smoking.

Back in an obscure corner of the room, where he had not, up to this time, been observed by those who had been talking, sat Paul Atherton, a tall, handsome young fellow, who last year had been crack oarsman on the university club and who had graduated with the highest honors of his class. Deeply interested in the social problem of the day and with abundant means and leisure to pursue his investigations along that line, he had resolved to test the utility of the university extension idea, and for this purpose had rented and moved into one of the humble miner's cottages in Scottsville, with the fixed purpose of familiarizing himself as intimately as possible with all the details of the lives of those around him. With a view of getting into the drift of their thoughts, he had become a frequenter of the best patronized institution of the place—next, at least, to the company's store—the saloon run by Pat Murphy. Calling for a bottle of ginger ale, he had seated himself in a corner with his newspaper and engaged in conversation some of the men nearest him, while he listened very carefully to everything that was said.

"Very evidently," he reflected to himself, after being an interested attendant upon the dialogue which we have just related, "whatever merit the university extension scheme may have, it is not the popular remedy for the condition of things which exist here. That noisy fellow over there, I know hasn't dug a ton of coal for years. I do not sincerely believe that he is interested in bettering the condition of his fellows. He is interested in ingratiating himself into their favor as leader; and in order to do that, he must make them believe that theirs is a political evil which only a political remedy can reach. He expects to fill his pockets by levying upon them for his services in manipulating political affairs their way. I doubt if he sincerely believes there is any real remedy for them in legislation. Yet it is far easier for him to make them believe he is their friend, than for me. They receive him with open arms as a deliverer, while they look with suspicion upon me, though I am devoting my time and means freely to solve the problem of their betterment. Nevertheless," he thought to himself, "it is not the first time in the history of the world that this has been the case. If it was true of the Saviour of mankind, that 'He was despised and rejected' of the very men He came to save by giving His life, I guess that we who profess to be humble servants of His, ought to be willing to work along a line of reform which we know to be unpopular, but which we believe to be wise and beneficial in the end."

And so the little colony of university extension people in Scottsville kept on its quiet way, making friends every day, gaining the confidence of the people; while Timothy O'Brien, the labor agitator and eloquent orator of the saloon, kept on his way, assuring the miners that he was their friend, and only through his efforts could they look for redress of their wrongs.

But before the winter was over they had begun to lose confidence in him. Things had not worked out his way. It was known that the funds with which he had been plentifully supplied by contributions out of the scant wages of working men, had been spent for whisky and cigars and Pullman car berths and high-priced hotel bills.

Meanwhile the nearest neighbors of Paul Atherton were beginning to yield to the quiet but persistent influence of his example. They saw that his home was better kept and better supplied than theirs. He conversed with them freely, and showed them his monthly accounts. They were surprised at the results which were accomplished by putting a little brains and forethought into the purchase of the necessaries of life, and into the planning of nourishing bills of fare for the daily table.

The upshot of the matter was, that the miners soon began to see clearly that waste and drink were worse enemies of theirs than the avarice of their employers or the hard times supposed to have been precipitated upon them by the advent of a new political administration. The women began to plead with their husbands to save, for the sake of their children and their homes, what was going into the saloon-keeper's till; and the example of their more thrifty and sober neighbors convinced them that their wives were right.

The world has not changed much in eighteen hundred years. It still looks for a temporal Messiah, a leader of armies or a reformer of outward things, instead of an emancipation of the life and heart from the bondage of habit and the slavery of environment.

SEVEN REASONS FOR THE SABBATH.

II.

BY REV. WILBUR F. CRAFTS.

A third reason for Sabbath rest is that it is the law of Christ, who taught us to keep it by precept and practice.

Sunday papers, with their new theory that the Sabbath was made for money, sometimes confuse uninformed Sabbath-keepers by claiming that if the Sabbath is to be observed at all, it must be on Saturday, beginning at the previous sunset, without fires, and with capital punishment for violations. This sophistry or ignorance comes from mixing three temporary Sabbaths with a perpetual one. When Christ came, He found four coeval Sabbaths. There was, first, the petty Pharisaic Sabbath, often confused by ignorant anti-Sabbatarians with the Biblical or Jewish Sabbath, although it had no Bible authority. It was made up of hundreds of petty sectarian rules. The velvet garment of the Sabbath is lined with iron. One might wear shoes on the Sabbath unless they had in them one or more iron pegs, in which case they were a "burden" and so must not be borne. One might not kill an insect on the Sabbath because that would be hunting, suggesting that the Pharisaic sect was itself an insect, whose chief mission seemed to supply petty annoyances. This Sabbath Christ attacked. He was called a "Sabbath-breaker," and He did break the Pharisaic Sabbath as one would break barnacles from a ship that hindered its progress—broke it in eight different sections of Palestine by Sabbath healing, which the Pharisees forbade, in order to teach, what is still needed, that the Sabbath is not kept by mere idleness, but rather by doing good. "It is lawful—that is, it is the law—to do good on the Sabbath days."

There also existed at that time the Jewish ecclesiastical Sabbath, having Old Testament authority for that preparatory dispensation only. Its chief feature was doubled sacrifices, whose meaning for us is doubled worship; and it would not be amiss if we should put into the day, in the interest of toilers, something of the modern meaning of "sacrifices." There was also the Jewish national Sabbath, observed on Saturday, not because there was any Saturday in the fourth commandment, but probably because that was the day of deliverance from Egypt—beginning at sunset because that was the common beginning of each day. Fires were omitted, not to make the day a dreary fast, for it was rather a feast to the Jews, but to lighten the cook's labors by omitting newly cooked food in the interest of fruits and other provisions requiring no present labor. Capital punishment was also a feature of the Jewish civil law, applying only as widely as that law, although suggesting to us that Sabbath-breaking is not, in the God's-eye view, the trifling foible which even Christians commonly deem it.

But there was a fourth Sabbath law which existed when Christ came that had in it no sectarian narrowness, no restriction to the Jewish church or nation—the fourth commandment, the Sabbath of which Christ declared "was made for man," and which was therefore made for us.

At the close of an address in which I had spoken of the Jewish Saturday Sabbath and the Lord's Day, a Seventh-Day Adventist preacher, followed by his little flock, came to me and said in calm defiance, "I should like to ask you which Sabbath Christ kept?" I replied, "He kept both." When He was living on earth as a Jew, observing circumcision, Passover, Pentecost and the Feast of Tabernacles, He also kept the Jewish Saturday Sabbath as an observant Jew. But when on the cross He had been lifted up to be the world's Redeemer, He buried the Saturday Sabbath in His own grave by lying there on that day and so making it forever impossible for His friends to regard it as the brightest and best day of the week; and then by His resurrection, and a week later, by his reappearance, He transfigured the first day of the week into the glorious "pearl of days," "the Lord's Day" in spiritual preëminence.

A fourth reason for Sabbath rest, in this case on the Lord's Day, is apostolic example. The evidence that the apostles treated the first day of the week as the Christian Sabbath is of the same kind as that by which science proves gravitation and the roundness of the earth; namely, that this view alone includes and harmonizes all the facts. John speaks of "being in the spirit on the Lord's Day." We know, beyond all question, from the subsequent use of that new name by the church fathers, that the Lord's Day alluded to by John is the first day of the week, the weekly celebration of the Lord's resurrection. The view that this was the day of assembling for worship harmonizes with Paul's request to the churches, that offerings for the poor should be made on "the first day of the week." This view also harmonizes with the fact that Paul waited a whole week at Ephesus in order to preach and "break bread" on the first day of the week. It also harmonizes with the fact that while Paul declares abolished not only Jewish feasts, but also "Sabbaths," using a Greek word never used in the plural for anything but the Jewish

Saturday Sabbath (used in the singular only for the Day of Atonement) he proclaims with equal emphasis, the permanence of the Decalogue as "holy, just and good."

A fifth reason for Sabbath rest, that should be sufficient for church members, if there were no other, is that it is a law of the church in all its branches, to break which is to become guilty of the perjury of breaking the solemn oath or vow in which church membership began.

A sixth reason for Sabbath rest is that it is the law of the state, which we are bound as good citizens to obey, to break which makes one a criminal none the less that executive officers have neglected to put him under arrest.

The seventh reason for Sabbath rest—a reason that even a California infidel, denying the authority of the Bible and the church, and residing in the only state, save Idaho, having no Sabbath law, can not escape—is that the law of the Sabbath is the law of nature, written in mind and muscle. The proverb that "doctors disagree" does not apply to the doctrine that pursuing one's ordinary work seven days a week weakens health and shortens life.

O Sabbath of God, we hail thee in thy march down the ages and around the world, thy left hand filled with blessings for the body, thy right hand filled with greater blessings for the soul! The evil triumvirate of Greed and Appetite and Lust can not stay thy benignant march, for God has sent thee, and heavy-laden humanity needs thee. In thy rest for the weary, in thy joy of pardon for the sinful, God is still saying in the dark places of the earth, on every first day of the week, "Let there be light."

MEN WHO HAVE HELPED US.

II.

Adama Von Scheltema.

BY FRANCES E. WILLARD.

AS THE UNION SIGNAL is not only the organ of the National but of the World's W. C. T. U., it is fitting that it recognize in its pages the true and good men in every country who stand for our cause and do their utmost to help us. Hence, this sketch of the good pastor in Arnheim, near The Hague, Holland, who has been for years our chief "stand-by" among the people of that country. He has translated our literature, and put before the people some account of our history, methods and leadership. He is about a hundred years ahead of his time, and must seem a curious phenomenon to the solid people of that solid realm.

Passing swiftly through its green meadows and smiling fields a few months ago, noting the manufactories that are springing up on every hand; studying the exceeding nicety with which every line of agricultural work is carried forward; observing the sturdy figures of the women in the fields, and thinking of sweet Wilhelmina, the young queen of Holland, not yet fourteen years of age, I rejoiced in this beautiful and trustworthy land, whose heroic history our great historian, John Lothrop Motley, has set forth with a pictorial vividness attained by no other writer, and which offers a link of silvern speech, connecting the liberty-loving Hollander with the liberated American. Such souls as our good pastor, Brother Adama, have laid the firm foundations for what we feel sure will become one of the most progressive countries in the world. The Hollanders move slowly, but they are a folk whose staying qualities are not rivaled in any other nation. The women have a vigorous physique which goes a long way in the building up of a people, and when they perceive that the greatest good to the greatest number has its foundation in the equal status of men and women in every line of life, Holland will be the most delightful home-land in the world.

Father Von Scheltema has dedicated his genial culture to bringing about this result. He long ago perceived that the printed page is the wonder-worker of our time. The home mission work, of which he is the head, includes four buildings, handsome and substantial, some of them erected thirty years ago. Here he has an infant school where five hundred little ones are taught, and near it another higher grade with four hundred pupils. Besides these there is a home for sailors and fishermen. There are a great many English fishermen in Holland. He has gospel meetings, temperance meetings, and meetings of every description. He publishes several papers, leaflets, pamphlets and song-books, and is interested in every form of Christian work that occupies white-ribboners here. Indeed, it is through the deep, underlying sympathy that is between us that he came to know of our organization many years ago, and he has, to the utmost, fostered a knowledge of it among his own people. A long time back, thinking that he was coming near the end of his life, he distributed his large library to those he thought would use it for the good of others.

Adama Von Scheltema is an earnest gospel minister, and a man of high accomplishment. He reads English and writes it in an elegant manner. Perhaps he is most delighted when translating the speeches and other writings of our reformers, and he reproduces our hymns and songs with the music for his own people.

As far back as 1860, he chose as his work the visitation of the poorest part of Amsterdam, and found five thousand people in a neglected condition; almost no one of them ever stepped inside a church except for baptism, marriage or funeral services; no church, no school, but a hundred gin-shops existed in the neighborhood. He himself had been an abstainer from spirits since 1844, but the book by Mrs. Wightman entitled, "Haste to the Rescue," opened his eyes in 1861 to see that in Christ total abstinence is the true method of the Golden Rule. In a recent letter to Lady Henry Somerset, this good man says:

"After thirty-one years' incessant labor I do not know twenty of the fifteen hundred ministers in our country who are total abstainers; of Roman Catholic priests I know not a single one. We are behind Belgium in that respect, partly because priests look on our cause as something Protestant. Four-fifths, at least, of the traffic is in the hands of Catholics, and one of the greatest helps in building their churches." In another letter he says: "Our ladies hitherto are very, very quiet; a visit from our American and English leaders would be useful to instill in them a more progressive spirit. I myself have so much more of the American 'go-ahead' character that I can hardly suffer slowness in the holy cause. In my papers I strongly plead for the 'do-everything' policy, and have all my life tried to follow it out to the best of my ability." So broad and liberal is the spirit of this good reformer of Holland that he does not hesitate at any of our new departures, but is always sending us words of happiness and cheer.

While abundant in labors Father Von Scheltema has known much of family care. He has given his people a sound and wholesome literature and pointed the way to social reform; but none the less is he a man who values the home and knows its joys and sorrows. He writes: "From 1862 to 1872, when I lost my first wife and became a widower with a large family, I regularly visited London two or three times annually to study every kind of philanthropic work. Among my best friends have been Dr. Davis, and now Dr. L. Borrett White, of the Religious Tract Society; Mrs. E. L. Ranyard, of the Domestic Mission; Canon Battersby, at whose invitation I attended the Keswick convention; Messrs. Smithies, Robert Rae and Fred Smith." While so fully engaged himself, Mr. Von Scheltema has had the joy of seeing his children walk in paths of truth and honor.

In times gone by he has stood almost alone as a ministerial temperance reformer; now he has a growing support and a wide recognition is being accorded to his work. Recently the Queen of Holland conferred on him the Order of the Lion. He is now in his eightieth year, but still hard at work, translating among other books the "New Hymns and Solos." We trust that his last days will be the brightest and that the Divine blessing as well as the coöperation of friends, will encourage and sustain him.

ALCOHOL AND CRIME.

BY F. L. OSWALD, M. D.

THE EMMETT EPISODE.

In Vino Veritas—"There is Truth in Wine," is an ancient proverb often quoted by alcohol apologists who would have us believe that liquor merely reveals the true character of the toper, rendering the kind-hearted more demonstratively amiable, and lifting the mask of dissembling ruffians. But the truth is that alcohol turns the brutal into fiends and the naturally gentle into vicious brutes. J. E. Emmett, known to patrons of the variety stage as "Our Fritz," and to theatrical managers as a gifted but eccentric and rather unreliable comedian, has often pleaded his harmless good-nature in extenuation of his manifold escapades, but a few days ago found himself obliged to deprecate a charge of murderous and unprovoked assault with the plea that strong drink had turned him into an irresponsible beast.

On the afternoon of June 8, 1895, Emmett made the rounds of the San Francisco rum shops, and returned in the evening swaggering and blaspheming, threatening to kill his wife on the spot if she should persist in trying to restrain his privilege of free speech. Mrs. Emmett, hoping to avoid a scandal, urged her husband at least to moderate the violence of his remarks, but was chased all around the house and finally driven out into the street at the point of a pistol. Here he fired at her at close range, kicked "Baby Sinnott," a child who plays with the Emmetts and tried to pacify the drink crazed brute, kicked and "butted" bystanders who attempted to wrench the pistol from his grasp, and catching his wife by the throat beat her brutally about the face till two stout young men dragged him off by main force and turned him over to the police. His wife was taken to a hospital, but refused to have her wounds dressed, though according to the statement of the examining surgeon her life was saved only by the circumstance that the pistol ball glanced from her temple and lodged under the scalp. Nevertheless the case will probably be dropped,—as usual, where an indictment would involve legislators who permit the public sale of madhouse extracts.

THE HARDY CASE.

The records of our police courts abound with instances of cruelly abused wives refusing to prosecute the father of their children and concealing or denying the extent of their injuries; still there are limits to that kind of endurance, and it is not likely that the crime of Thomas Hardy will be entirely ignored. In the early morning hours of June 1, the attention of patrolman Walsh was attracted by shrieks for help in a yard near No. 82 Milton avenue, Chicago. Hurrying to the scene he saw a woman staggering about in a vain attempt to quench the blood streaming from a wound in her throat, while her aggressor at sight of the policeman, took to his heels, but was pursued and captured in "Clipper" Flynn's liquor saloon on Crosby street, and turned over to patrolman Poggansee. Walsh then returned to Milton avenue and found the prisoner's victim moaning and almost blinded by deep, dirk-knife cuts in her face and on her scalp, and still bleeding from a gash that extended from her chin to a point below her left ear. Seeing the woman about to drop from exhaustion, the policeman summoned an ambulance, and an examination at the county hospital seems to make it doubtful if she can survive her injuries. She had been beaten, kicked in the breast and side, and cut all over the head and face, shoulders, arms and hands.

The prisoner was arraigned the next morning on a charge of assault with intent to kill, and then added foul slander to his brutal crime by claiming that he caught a stranger in his wife's bedroom and acted under the impulse of uncontrollable excitement. By way of elucidating that point the court summoned two of the prisoner's children and learned that Hardy had returned home at midnight and proceeded to violence the moment his wife reproached him with having spent another week's wages. Fearing for her life, the poor woman took refuge in an adjoining room, and two or three of her children joined her in trying to hold the door, while her husband was squatting in the chimney-corner, deliberately whetting his dirk-knife.

WHY NOT BE A VEGETARIAN?

BY J. HOWARD MOORE.

To one accustomed to obtain his supply of protoplasm chiefly from the bones of other animals instead of from the kingdom of the plant, the assertion that it is possible not only to sustain, but to enhance existence, on a flesh-less diet seems very strange. It is not strange that such a statement should seem strange. Anything is strange to the uninitiated. And the amount of ignorance on this subject is, to speak tenderly, well-nigh pitiable. The delusion that meat is the only genuine source of human energy has become so constitutional that it actually disturbs the respiration of ninety-nine out of a hundred to be told that meat, compared with many vegetables, is a very dilute form of nutrition, and that more than half the inhabitants of the earth to-day are from choice or necessity prosperous and contented vegetarians.

There is no reason in the world why human mammals may not keep up as successful and interesting an existence without flesh as with it. In fact, after a careful study of the science of nutrition and an experience of many months, I assert with considerable enthusiasm that physiological integrity may be much more accurately sustained by a judicious diet of fruits and vegetables than by a diet in which carrion is a distinguished constituent.

The Vegetarian Eating Club, of the University of Chicago, which has now been in existence about one year, and which is to-day one of the most prosperous gastronomic enterprises of the many connected with the University, is a living and formidable illustration of what I have just said. It was organized in April, 1894, amid profuse prophecies of premature collapse. It began its career with a membership of less than a dozen. To-day the club has a membership of about thirty, with facilities strained. It is composed of both ladies and gentlemen, and around its tables gather many of the brightest and most interesting people of the University. The club runs at the uniform rate of $2.50 per week, and by eliminating the uneconomical element of meat, our menus are able to compare favorably with those of carnivorous clubs paying $3.50 and $4 per week. We use fruits, grains, vegetables, nuts, dairy products and eggs—in fact, everything of the nutritious sort except the flesh and bones of other animals.

Most people who are not vegetarians and who are ignorant of the ways and glories of vegetarianism, imagine that without meat there must be such a monotonous and inexpressible lack of variety. The thought that comes to one who for the first time contemplates the vegetarian régime is that he will either starve to death in a short time or else drawl out his existence on a depleted diet of bread and milk. I had just such apprehensions when my visions first became vegetarian. I became a vegetarian for ethical reasons before I knew of other vegetarians in the world, and I was enthusiastically dubious about its hygienic advantages. I now know my apprehensions were those of ignorance. The variety of fruits and nuts is so bewildering and the possible inflections in their preparation are so nearly endless that the most exacting epicure may be satisfied. In the preparation of the menus, which differ each day, care is taken to supply the demanded amounts of albuminoids, carbo-hydrates and minerals.

Vegetarianism is adapted not only to summer, but to winter. It is a general mollifier of climatic rigor. Meat is largely a stimulant, and, like alcohol, it creates a fever, which, in the long run, is detrimental to the endurance of a refrigerating climate.

The nutritious values of vegetables, nuts and grains are everywhere underrated. Even in albuminoids, in the supply of which meat is supposed to be rather exclusive, there are vegetables, nuts and grains that far exceed mutton chops and steaks. Fish, for instance, contains about 13% of albuminoids, pork, on an average, 16%, and beef 17½%; while nuts (besides being very rich in the oleaginous) furnish from 8 to 25% of albuminoids, grains from 7 to 15%, eggs 14%, cheese 29%, peas 22%, lentils 25%, and beans from 22 to 35%.

To any one contemplating the vegetarian régime, I will say: You may at first encounter opprobrium and some slight inconvenience from the change. But persist. The opprobrium is simply the thorns that every initiative must wear, and the inconvenience will pass away as surely as time passes. After a few weeks of fruits and vegetables, there will come over you a feeling of buoyancy and emancipation that will be truly novel. Physically, you will feel clarified and refined, your brain will be more obedient; your muscles will be newer; you will be heartier and healthier; abrasions will heal without soreness and suppuration; your aches will either leave or grow feeble, and your conscience, which for so long had suffered bewilderment, will feel a serenity and complaisance that only the purified feel.

Vegetarianism is a luxury, and it would become fashionable and epidemic in a little while were it not compelled to make its way in a world made up, for the most part, of intellectual yolks.

WILLARD HALL, NOONTIDE LINKS.

The topic was personal influence, and the leader said:

"Last evening my daughter invited me for a row upon the river, and as neither of us have experience in such matters the start was made with fear and trembling. Before and behind us wound the river, and on its bosom we were adrift.

"We very soon discovered that if we went far and returned alive, one must be all hands and obedience, the other all eyes and warning.

"Of course our conversation was limited and as near as I can remember, this was the gist of it: 'One more dip of the oar to the left, be careful, daughter, there now; steady, steady, splendid! Keep away from the shore; Good. We have made the arches of the bridge in safety and all is well. Now, my dear, bend to your oars and pull steady.'

"The trial trip was over, but the picture of my daughter, sitting there with her eyes resting in full confidence on me will haunt me ever, and as I walked up the road with my arm around her waist, I thought a world of things I never thought before, and the memory of that hour will make me go softly the balance of my days."

. . . . . .

For two months he sat in the same chair each noontide hour. We grew to watch for his coming, this fair, young lad from some city office. One day we asked him to say a word for Jesus. The testimony was short but rang true. The very next day his chair was vacant. Two days after there came to me a letter bearing a postmark from a Michigan village, and ran this-wise:

"When I returned to the office last Tuesday my employer said he could not keep me any longer. But I want to tell you how glad I am that you asked me to speak the last time I was at Willard Hall. It will never be so difficult again for me to testify for my Master, and I shall remember you as long as I live."

. . . . . .

The leader's eyes were full of tears, and loud above the city's din she seemed to hear some one saying:

"They that win many to righteousness shall shine as the stars forever and ever."

EDITORIAL CORRESPONDENCE.

White Ribbon Pilgrims Afloat.

Dear Union Signal:—"This vessel cannot sink; too many prayers have gone up for it and its precious freight," said a New York white-ribboner amid the bustle and confusion of the Berlin's departure from New York. Those prayers have availed not only in the preservation of life but in the continued happiness and health accompanying a prosperous voyage.

From the last glimpse of the mass of friendly faces with waving handkerchiefs, sticks and hats, on the New York pier, during the nine days of ocean travel, the hours have glided swiftly and happily by. Very little fog, some rain, a great deal of sunshine and moderate winds made the journey comparatively easy and pleasant. Those who stayed at home in dread of Neptune will find themselves greatly disappointed. Those who faced the unfamiiar life of ocean travelers fared far more comfortably than they hoped. So closely had The Union Signal's editorial suggestions been studied and read that every white-ribboner was prepared to do the right thing at the right time. Words of praise were heard on every hand for these admirable directions without which many of our company would have been quite "at sea" (in another sense).

The first morning out, after a foggy night and rest disturbed by the unmusical tones of the necessary horn, few of our party came on deck. The dining salon, with its long array of cozy arm chairs flanking the damask-covered tables, was woefully deserted. Each succeeding meal, however, saw new recruits at table, and few of the pilgrims were sufferers for any length of time in getting acclimated to their unaccustomed habitation.

Glancing along the upper decks after that unpleasant first day, the eye met a pleasing sight. Along the lee side were ranged chair after chair, leaving but the narrowest passage way. These bundles of rugs and bales of clothing hid specimens of humanity, who, on closer inspection, could be recognized as well-known members of the "best society" afloat or ashore. The more vigorous members of the company were indulging in games and promenades, and others were quietly engaged in earnest conversation. A kindly mannered gentleman in red brown suit and navy blue cap, easily recognized, could be seen going from chair to chair, inquiring into the comfort of each occupant. This was Rev. Docking, of Rhode Island, the conductor of the tour, who was constantly besieged by information-seeking querists.

At the noontide hour a group gathered about the leader (there was a different one for each day) and prayers were raised to the Almighty for the safe conduct of the ship and the progress of the work the world around. Very much blessed have been these hours of devotion in mid ocean.

The Sabbath services (in the dining salon) were just what they should have been in helpful thought and uplift. Of the eight divines who are members of the tour, four participated: Rev. Dr. Thomas of Philadelphia, Rev. Dr. Wickes of Attica, N. Y., Rev Docking and Rev. Dr. Morris of the Boston University. The latter preached the sermon, taking for his text, "Casting all your care upon Him for He careth for you." The "women" had begged to be excused from this service which, owing to "ship housekeeping" arrangements was necessarily brief. In the evening, however, Mrs. Barker, our National treasurer, led the devotions, assisted by Mother Prindle of Florence Mission, New York city. Mother Stewart spoke of her work in Great Britain nineteen years ago, and was followed by Mrs. Hoffman and others. That it was flower mission day was not forgotten. Loving reference was made to the life and work of the departed Jennie Casseday, whose birthday we were thus celebrating on the billowy highway. Mother Prindle did not forget her mission. Assisted by a dozen or more members of the party and a Salvationist, an afternoon service was held in the steerage, during which testimonies were given and several received acknowledged light.

The week-day evenings found many in the cabin, too small to accommodate all, where lively and instructive games made the hours fly swiftly. The "one minute speech" game proved a great success, and was very profitable and enlivening. It consisted in choosing a timekeeper and a president who assigned to each in turn her subject. The speech must be made on the spur of the moment and last just one minute. The walls of the cozy cabin resounded with noble thoughts and witty utterances, but many an orator just rising to an eloquent peroration was "called down" by the inexorable holder of the timepiece. A good discipline, perhaps!

The friendliness and closeness of the white-ribbon sisterhood was never more in evidence than during this voyage. This social spirit was so manifest that even the obliging deck steward was heard to say, "'Tis not often we have a crowd like this. Generally they are strangers and never mind each other, but these are all so friendly and want to be together."

One hundred white-ribboners, shut up within hearing distance of each other for nine days! What an opportunity for exchange of thought, opinion and plans. Subjects as wide and deep as the sea and as limitless as the horizon were discussed and friendships formed which were lasting and true. The twenty-six brothers, sadly in the minority, resigned themselves to their fate and obediently listened when the women talked, applauding vigorously, of course. It was wittily said of the ministers, "We can't do anything with them, but we can't do without them," so of these good fathers, husbands and brothers, who are such helps and abettors in all the enjoyments of the tour.

The letter from the "Chieftain" addressed to the white ribbon comrades on the great deep was read aloud and passed from hand to hand. It was a forecast of the important events in which the Pilgrims were to participate and was written in Miss Willard's happiest, and most comradely prophetic vein:

Eastnor Castle, Ledbury, May 20, 1895.

To my dear Comrades who "take ship and come over" to the great Camp Fire of the World's and B. W. T. A. white ribbon conventions—Greeting!

It is in my heart to send you some token of the loving remembrance in which you are held "at this end o' the line," and I have arranged that Lady Henry's paper shall be sent you—the latest copies—so that you may know what we are "at."

We greatly admire your "grace, grit and gumption" in coming over to help us, and pray for a pleasant voyage, which the season seems to assure.

Never since "women were women" was there such a stirring up along white-ribbon lines. We have thought, and justly, that our conventions were models of their kind, but when it comes to what our English friends call we must give them the precedence. The very hugeness of London would determine this, but that is the least of it:—the world's metropolis has

"A demonstration,"

"The long result of time
All that Art yields or Nature can decree," to fall back upon in every case, and such an environment must be more impressive than any other.

My heart rejoices to feel how much you will enjoy it all—the whole trip from first to last. And to realize the incalculable gain to our whole cause from all you bring and will take home with you as the result of the excursion.

It was a happy thought to have a reception when you gathered in New York, and as guardians of the Polyglot (or "Poly Pet," as we call her in home language) you are a notable company as well as in your own dear right.

As you know, there are to be excursions to Windsor Castle, Eastnor, Reigate Priory, etc.; the Somerset fountain is to be unveiled (a duplicate of Anna's and the children's in Chicago). The Women's Industrial Inebriate Home is to be opened and "what not" beside. Things are greatly stirred up in England now because the Local Veto Bill is pending and the Liberal party which fathered it is half inclined to disown its child. Our meetings are expected to help on the pending "cause" for our English allies.

May 22.

P. S.—I hardly dare detain this letter longer. Am writing for latest facts about the meetings to be sent you from headquarters. We are all well and getting just as good "a ready" as we can. The B. W. T. A. has six hundred delegates already enrolled. Anna Gordon is well advanced with the secretary's report and the treasurer's. Jessie Ackermann has sent in hers as round-the-world missionary and superintendent of anti-opium work. Nearly all the World's W. C. T. U. superintendents have sent in theirs.

A great local veto meeting is to be held in London, Saturday evening, May 25. Anna and I shall go to it—one hundred miles or more. Lady Somerset and several members of parliament are to speak. The proof sheets of Mrs. Andrew's "History of the World's W. C. T. U.," and of my hand-book, "Do Everything," are now being corrected and my biennial address is nearly ready.

We commend you each and all, beloved sisters, to the loving care of God. May you come safely and happily across and bring the Polyglot Petition in good heart (you) and it in good condition.

Always yours,
Frances E. Willard.

Some good reader writing to The Union Signal before the sailing of the Berlin congratulated the "Pilgrims" on the prospect of being in a place where no tobacco smoke would penetrate. Probably no vessel on ocean was ever more free from tobacco taint than this has been, but even into these guarded precincts the narcotic fumes have penetrated. "Where on earth shall we find peace?"

An approximate summing up shows that there are among the pilgrims about seventy accredited delegates and thirty visiting white-ribboners. The balance of the party, numbering fifty, is equally divided between gentlemen and other lady tourists. Ohio leads with a solid delegation of ten, headed by Mother Stewart, who has borne the voyage wonderfully well despite her eighty years. Pennsylvania is second, led by Mrs. R. B. Chambers, state corresponding secretary; Illinois, New York, Massachusetts and Missouri follow. In all twenty-two states and Canada (which has a delegation of five aboard, with Mrs.

DEAR SISTERS:—For the benefit of new local unions that may find some difficulty in outlining the first programs for their meetings, we give extracts from a letter from a union in Buffalo, N. Y.:

"The first week of the month is always our regular monthly business meeting, with roll-call, reports of officers, superintendents of departments and standing committees for the month previous to meeting.

"The second week is given to one of the superintendents. Thus, in January, Parliamentary Drill; February, Press Work; March, Loyal Temperance Legion, etc.

"The third week is devoted to evangelistic work and Bible study.

"The fourth is given to mothers' meetings.

"The fifth, when it occurs, is given to a superintendent, as is the second.

"In our L. T. L. we study the regular Lesson Manuals, having finished Julia Colman's catechisms. We have a medal contest committee, consisting of three members of the union, one new one elected after each contest, the chairman being dispensed with. Thus each member assists at three contests. We hold them as often as we can find contestants. We have an entertainment committee of four who act on the rotation plan. This committee fills up 'gaps' in the weekly meetings with appropriate numbers.

"We do a great deal of charitable work, such as giving clothes and food, paying rent, etc.; collect old linen and make it into garments for the use of a summer hospital in the country for sick babies who are taken from the hot and dirty city to fresh air and health. Many little garments are needed. Tea is served at these 'thimble parties.' We have standing committees on relief work and visitation."

---

In some unions only monthly meetings are held. Guard against any hit-or-missness in arranging for these. The W. C. T. U. of Dorchester, Mass., has a program for the year printed on a pretty card folder. The outside of this folder bears an appropriate text, the year-date; the words "Plan of Work," are followed by name of union, list of officers—president, vice-president, secretary and treasurer. Within are given topics for monthly meetings, with dates and names of leaders. On the fourth page of the folder is given the pledge of the W. C. T. U. and "Conditions of Membership." Such a folder would not cost much and would be valuable for distribution.

A correspondent in writing of some very successful mothers' meetings says:

"We were invited to stay for a little social time and a 'cup of tea.' As I passed from one to another, I found a number of Swedes who had come by special invitation of the superintendent of the Swedish Sunday-school. One of them said to me, 'Why, I was never in such a meeting; may I come again?' The social cup of tea was to her an 'open sesame' to the hearts of the mothers present. May I suggest that this key be oftener used. There are lonely hearts in this big world of ours, with all its busy people, and there are strange hearts that yearn for a little love and tenderness. Let us take time from our busy cares and many enjoyments to think of these in that practical way which says, 'Your Father is my Father; we have the same Elder Brother; we are all of one family.'"

These suggestions on how to prepare for a mothers' meeting are helpful. We are sorry we cannot give our contributor's name, but it does not appear on her manuscript:

"Use from four to six postal cards every month. They are your best helpers. Write to Mrs. A——, and ask if she will kindly read for you a selection of her own choosing, or, if she prefers, one which you can give her, at your next mothers' meeting. Send four of these and be ready to send six if necessary. Name your subject on each one. Let the secretary of the union have your meeting announced always in the daily and weekly papers. Now, prepare your own heart. If there are children in your own home, you will be more careful to speak gently and more lovingly because you are to lead a mothers' meeting. If you have a servant you will keep back the impatient words at some of her mistakes, and think of the kind words of encouragement to say when she has really tried to do her best. You will remember that the husband is coming home tired and wants a sight of you, and will be rested at once if you are cheery and happy. So the month through, it will not be what you, as leader, say and do in your meeting, but what you are every day in your own home that makes your meeting a success. For when you have been, with God's help, faithful and true and lovely there, God will bless your meeting with other mothers, and will Himself direct and be present with you."

From the same unknown correspondent we have also the accompanying list of topics for these meetings:

The Home Training of our Children.

Temperance in the Home.

How can we bring our Children to Christ?

Obedience.

Mothers as Helpers in Public Schools.

Answers to Prayers for our Children and Others. (This is an informal experience meeting.)

Wherewithal Shall we be Clothed? (Use Mrs. Leiter's leaflets and Mrs. Barnes' responsive reading.)

Food Suggestions. (Substitutes for alcohol in cooking. Instance, mince pies, jellies, sauces. Suggest reliable cook books, comments on excessive seasoning, the relation of heating foods to "sins of the body.")

What more may we do to Enlist Mothers in our W. C. T. U. Work?

How to Keep the Children at Home?

Excellent leaflets for mothers' meetings can be secured from the W. T. P. A., The Temple, Chicago.

---

are running low and soon there will be no more for our consideration unless you, dear co-workers, send in a fresh supply!

QUESTION.—What would you use as a substitute for alcohol in case of poisoning with aconite?

ANSWER.—We are indebted to a Chicago physician for the reply: "I would never think of using alcohol in such a case, but apply warmth and friction, giving pure fruit vinegar, followed by the indicated homeopathic remedy."

Q.—What is the "age of consent" in Illinois, and when was the law passed?

A.—Fourteen years; July 1, 1887.

Q.—What is the "age of consent" for boys?

A.—In Illinois, sixteen years.

Q.—Is there a law in every state to the effect that children must not be brought up in houses of ill-fame?

A.—We know of no such, save as the law for "neglected children" may cover the point.

Q.—How are the funds appropriated by the National W. C. T. U. for the use of organizers who do missionary work in needy localities to be secured?

A.—An order must come through the state executive to the National.

Q.—Can the president of a union join herself to the parties taxing or licensing the liquor traffic without violating the spirit of a pledge?

A.—We would like to ask in return, how could she? If she did there's a sad inconsistency somewhere.

Q.—Is it constitutional to appoint as superintendent of a department one who is not a member of the union?

A.—No. All officers should be members.

Q.—How many round-the-world missionaries are there? Who was the first? How are their expenses paid?

A.—There are—or were—six round-the-world missionaries. The first one was Mrs. Mary Clement Leavitt, of Massachusetts. The others in order of appointment and exodus are: Miss Jessie A. Ackermann, whose latest residence before leaving this country was California; Mrs. E. W. Andrew and Dr. Kate C. Bushnell, of Illinois; Miss Alice M. Palmer, of Indiana, and Miss Mary Allen West, of Illinois. The latter died in the midst of her active labors, in Japan, December 1, 1892.

Their expenses are met chiefly by themselves and by collections. A fund of voluntary offerings was raised for Mrs. Leavitt in this country, and she met her further expenses by collections. Miss Ackermann's expenses were raised by her popular lectures. Mrs. Andrew and Dr. Bushnell have depended upon voluntary remuneration for their services in their foreign work. Miss Palmer has received a small stated salary, and Miss West, aside from a modest appropriation from the World's union, paid her own expenses. The work of all these noble women has been one of rare devotion, and should go down in the annals of W. C. T. U. history as a remarkable illustration of self-abnegation, physical endurance and love of mankind. More particulars about the lives and work of each will be found in "Thumb Nail Sketches," just issued from our presses, prices, $.50 and $1.

Before the relaxing days of July and August settle down upon us, would it not be well to refill Mother Experience's pigeon-holes by suggestive letters and pertinent queries?

Yours in our sacred bonds,

Mother Experience.

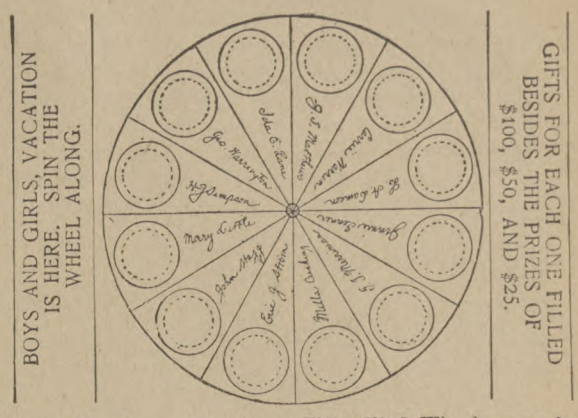
BY MATILDA B. CARSE.

By faith Abel offered unto God a more excellent sacrifice than Cain, by which he obtained witness that he was righteous, God testifying of his gifts: and by it he being dead yet speaketh.—Heb. 11:4.



The Wheels are spinning. Fifty filled Wheels came by express last week from the W. C. T. U. of Fremont, Neb. They have still fifty out to fill. Forty-three filled Wheels have been received by express from Mrs. T. I. J. Talbot, from the Malden, Mass., W. C. T. U., making fifty-four in all that they have filled. This is one of the brave and noble unions that stands by the Temple through good and evil report. Their name has long ago found a place on the Massachusetts tablet in the Willard corridor. We hope before the year is out they will complete filling their hundred Wheels.

The following persons have generously donated the July coupons on their Temple Trust Bonds towards the $300,000 we are striving to raise this year: Mrs. E. B. Dickinson, Romeo, Mich.; Mrs. M. S. Andrews, Norristown, Pa.; Mrs. S. K. Burbank, Pittsford, Vt.; Miss Mary I. Bradley, Lee, Mass.; Miss A. F. Bassett, Lee, Mass. Names of other donors will be given next week, also names of some who have subscribed large sums conditionally, I have again started on the campaign for large amounts; other pressing duties have kept me from the work in this direction for the last three or four months. Let all friends send me names of wealthy persons who are interested in temperance. We thank the friends who have already sent us in such names. Remember, over one million dollars has to be raised, and we must get at the pockets of the rich. Let women of faith be much in prayer. The timid and fearful ones should remember the gold and the silver is the Lord's. "All power," said Jesus, "is given unto me in heaven and earth." "If ye ask anything in my name, BELIEVING, I will do it unto you." We should also remember to show our faith by our works. If we cannot give large amounts, let us give the littles. If we have nothing to give, then send for a Wheel and get others to give.

"I am profoundly impressed," writes Mrs. Mary G. Tongier, Lomis, Cal., "with the magnitude of the task you have assumed in paying the Temple debt. I am only one of the many busy women who make up the rank and file of our great white ribbon army, but ever since reading your appeal in THE UNION SIGNAL the question which has come to me over and over is, 'How can we help her?' It is true many of the unions have done nobly, but of how many of our white-ribboners can it be said concerning our House Beautiful, 'She hath done what she could.' I am a great believer in individual effort. How would it do to send an appeal to the unions asking each member to collect one dollar during this year toward paying the $300,000 due at the beginning of 1896? Surely there are a hundred thousand women in our ranks who will respond to such a call, and think of a hundred thousand dollars! I shall be glad to enroll myself among the number. Courage, my sister. Keep your eyes lifted unto the hills from whence cometh our help."

Mrs. J. E. Sutton, Washington, D. C., is one of our faithful white-ribboners that is always at work for the Temple. She has gladdened our eyes by sending a full Baby Band containing one hundred and two names, accompanied by $10.20, beside two filled Wheels. She asks for a Temple souvenir spoon, which we now present to all persons who raise a Baby Band. As we have often said, no better work can be done for temperance than raising Baby Bands. It is pledging a hundred children to be brought up in temperance principles. We will be glad to send a Baby Band list and cards to all who will engage in the work. Address me as below. Mrs. Julia F. Hyland sends $45, from the Christian county, New Hampshire, W. C. T. U., for the New Hampshire state tablet. Mrs. Frances Carroll sends $48.80 on the pledge of the W. C. T. U. of Philmont, N. Y. The Plainfield Union Veteran Band have sent through the state treasurer of New Jersey, Mrs. N. L. Caminade, $25.51, which completes their $100 pledge. The names of these noble veterans are: Mrs. C. R. Ball, Mr. Abram Storms, Mr. Charles K. Howlett, Mr. and Mrs. J. G. Lugar, Mrs. I. A. Coyle, Mrs. S. Honeyman, Mrs. A. Dickinson and Mrs. J. C. Ayers. We would like a few more such Veteran Bands.

All orders for Temple Wheels, mite-boxes, and Baby Band lists, and everything pertaining to the Temple should be addressed to Mrs. Matilda B. Carse, The Temple, Chicago. Send two-cent stamp for either the Temple Wheel or mite-box. Money orders and checks should be made out in the name of Mr. G. B. Shaw, treasurer, and sent to our financial secretary, Miss Sara G. Johnson, Room 1111, The Temple, Chicago.

WE ARE UNFAITHFUL.

BY MARY RILEY SMITH.

If man could rule, his love of change would mar
The purple dignity that wraps the hills;
Pluck out from the blue sky some perfect star,
And set it elsewhere as his fancy wills.

Train the gnarled apple tree more straightly up;
Lift violet's head, so long and meekly bowed;
With some new odor fill her purple cup,
And gild the rosy fringes of a cloud.

For, mark! last year I loved the violet best,
And tied her tender colors in my hair;
To-day I wear on my inconstant breast
A crimson rose and count her just as fair.

We are unfaithful—only God is true
To hold secure the landmarks of the past,
To paint year after year the harebell blue,
And in the same sweet mould its shape to cast.

Oh, steadfast nature, let us learn of thee!
Thou canst create a new flower at thy will.
And yet through all the years canst faithful be
To the sweet pattern of a daffodil.

A BOY'S PLEDGE.

BY GRETTA.

The early supper was over, and after a merry frolic with his little son, the young father, Dr. Nelson, lifting the delighted boy to his shoulders said, "Now Royal, kiss mamma and little sister good-night, then I will carry you to bed, while mamma puts baby in her crib." The tall man stooped so that the rosy lips of the boy could touch the upturned face of his pretty mamma and the baby's, nestling close beside hers; then the two disappeared behind the portiere.

By the time Dr. Nelson again appeared in the sitting-room, his wife had the baby asleep, and was seated on a low rocking chair before the fire preparing to take up her sewing. As she looked up, with a happy smile to express her pleasure for her husband's help, the words were arrested by his tossing a letter into her lap, saying, "I am sorry, dear, that I forgot to give it you before."

She cut the envelope and took therefrom a bulky letter containing all the home news for the past week. It was, in fact, a family journal, each member contributing a part, and as Winnie read aloud, her husband listened with sympathetic interest to the detailed accounts in the different versions and individual coloring of each writer.

"And here is a card from mother," continued Winnie, "with a verse in her own handwriting, and a bow of white ribbon in one corner. She says, 'I have copied for you A Boy's Pledge from Miss Willard's annual address. Please hang it in Royal's room. He is yet too young to understand it, but let it be a constant monitor to you to stamp upon the impressionable young heart the beauty of a clean life and a pure body, which has been such a source of strength and success in his father's career, and of happiness, comfort and protection in your home."

"That is just like dear mother," Winnie continued, "treasuring up everything she comes across in her reading or in the experiences of others which she thinks will be a help to me with the children."

She held the card out to her husband, saying, "You read the card aloud, dear, while I go on with my sewing."

Her husband took it and read:

"A BOY'S PLEDGE.

"I pledge my brain God's thoughts to think.
My lips no fire nor foam to drink
From alcoholic cup, or link
With my pure breath tobacco's taint;
For have I not a right to be
As wholesome and as pure as she
Who, through the years so glad and free,
Moves gently onward to meet me?
A Knight of the New Chivalry
Of Christ and Temperance I would be,
In nineteen hundred, come and see."

"Is not that a little too—sentimental, for a boy?" Winnie asked as she placed a very unsentimental patch on the knee of a tiny pair of pants.

Her husband made no reply, but lay with the card in his hand gazing absently into the fire. Presently she raised her head as if to repeat her question and met his gaze falling upon her with a tenderness that showed his heart was stirred, and he softly repeated as if to himself,

"'As pure as she
Who, through the years so glad and free
Moves gently onward to meet me.'"

"Well, Paul, I think mother's card is making you sentimental," she laughingly exclaimed, "but you do not answer my question. Do you think that boys usually would be influenced by such a thought?"

"Well," said Paul, "there are boys and boys, but I think it mostly depends on the mothers. I confess that the reading of this card has stirred me more than I would have thought possible. Its words have clearly revealed to me how much I owe to my mother and my wife."

Again he relapsed into silence, and the sewing went on uninterruptedly for some time. It was a new mood for the usually jovial man.

At length he turned to her and said, "I have often told you of the sorrowful circumstances which threw me, as a mere child, upon my own resources, and obliged me to seek a home with strangers. I was exposed to such temptations that now I am filled with wonder that, child as I was, I could pass through unscathed. But I had a task before me, and my dear mother's faithful instructions and prayers had laid the foundation principles which were to give the 'level head and white life' which alone would enable me to win.

"I inherited a love for the profession in which I am sure my father would have been eminent had he lived. I would be a physician. I never for a moment thought I could be anything else, and in order to attain my object I was ready to do any honest work that would help me to obtain an education. And so I worked and studied until I met you, dear," and he drew the brown head, with its silky curls, toward him until it rested upon his shoulder.

"Do you remember that summer afternoon I came upon you in the haystack, where you were searching for hen's nests with your little sister? You looked up startled to see a strange boy approaching on horseback. I was surprised, too, nay, frightened. I did not then know why, nor do I now, unless I was like those to whom angels appeared, and was 'sore afraid.' You were to me, at least at that moment, as unexpected a vision as an angel would have been.

"It was the first time I had seen you, but the vision of the fair young girl, with her curls tossing in the summer breeze, her soft brown eyes timidly raised to mine, and the color deepening on her cheeks as she spoke, was indelibly photographed on my heart. I knew that another ideal had come into my life; another prize was to be striven for. I would one day have a home, and this fair young girl would be its queen; my life would be kept pure and clean and sweet, that I might be worthy of her. All through the long, intervening years, during which you were so 'gently,' though unconsciously, 'moving onward to meet me,' you were the inspiration that nerved my arm and quickened my brain; self-denial became a pleasure and labor a joy, in the thought that all these things were bringing me nearer my goal and the possession of the long-coveted prize."

"I am glad, dear," said Winnie, softly, "that I have helped you longer than I knew. I now realize what I owe to your mother, and how the early years of childhood are the mother's golden, and, perhaps, only, opportunity to give direction to the future trend of her boy's life. And now, dear, while I finish my patching, will you place the card as mother directs in Royal's room, and shall we not together enlist our boy in this new crusade of how to maintain a boy's rights?"

OUR LITTLE GIRLS.

BY MRS. MARY C. GLASS

When my little girl was about three and one-half years old, she informed me that she was "bid enough to wop dises." I handed her the towel, and the first thing she did was to place it very carefully across her left arm. I was startled, for I then realized that I had a habit of placing it just as she had done. The thought flashed through my brain: "If she has watched me so closely in this, what else has she noted?"

We grow so accustomed to having our little girls around us, that we forget they are studying and copying us constantly, and that we are really forming their characters. According to Professor Drummond, "We become like those whom we habitually reflect." I once had a little neighbor, about four years old, who always insisted that I should whip my little one when anything went wrong in their play. I finally told her I did not believe in whipping little girls. She answered: "My mamma does; she whips me for everything." And it was this reflected spirit of that mother in her child that wanted to see the little friend whipped, although she really loved her. I once heard a lady say to her only child: "If you don't stop crying I shall whip you until the blood runs." It was not of such mothers that Browning thought when he wrote: "For the angels are less tenderwise, than God and mothers."

Some mothers actually whip their little girls for tearing a dress. You make for your little girl a dress which, although a simple thing, represents to her childish fancy all that is radiant and beautiful. Do you think she would tear or soil it on purpose to vex you? Before you say a word to her stop a moment and look at the sorry, pitiful, amazed expression on the little face, and instead of whipping or scolding her, take her in your arms and tell her it can be mended. A dress destroyed is nothing in comparison to a wound in a child's heart. I sometimes wonder how I should feel if I should have a pretty, new dress and in hurriedly passing an old trunk should make a great three-cornered tear in it, and my husband should take a horsewhip and give me a "good whipping to teach me to be careful of my clothes." Would he not have as good a right in the sight of God to do that as I have to whip my child for the same thing?

Cruel injustices are done in forbidding children to explain. I have just read of a child who ran a mile to carry an umbrella to her mother who had gone to a neighbor's. Her mother had gone home and they missed each other on the way. Great gusts of wind arose and the rain drenched the child before she arrived at her destination, wet, breathless and unable to explain why she had come. The next day she was shut up for many hours as a punishment for being unable to explain her conduct.

Treat the growing daughter at your side as your trusted, confidential friend, and she will develop a broader, deeper womanhood than one left wholly under the influence of half a dozen different nurse girls. If mothers knew of the ghost stories and death stories, stories of "hobgoblins" and fiends, told to their little darlings by wicked and superstitious nurses to "keep them quiet" they would not wonder at the almost insane terror of the children at being left alone in the dark.

If I could have one blessing for the little girls of our day, I would ask for a higher type of motherhood, for broad-minded, kind-hearted, white-souled mothers, who would hold their daughters close to themselves by the magnetism of their pure mother-love. Cultivate your child's self-respect by treating her with respect; her truthfulness, by trusting her; her gentleness and purity, by your own examples. She will also, probably, treat you in your old age as she sees you treat your mother. Teach your little girl self-reliance by insisting that she do everything possible for herself. When she gets old enough, set apart some tasks for her to do, and make her responsible for them.

Dress her in perfect comfort. Although her clothes be plain and coarse, they can be carefully cut, fitted and made. Dress her so simply and neatly that she will be unconscious of her clothes. Give her plain, simple, wholesome food, and insist that she spend much of her time out of doors. Allow her ample time for sleep.

When a girl has been carefully and lovingly trained, she is old enough at six years of age to be told by her mother the wonderful secret of babyhood. If done wisely, you will notice in her manner towards you an added respect and reverence for you as her mother. Teach her, also, the sacredness of her own body. We hear much of the child widows of India and the child wives of other heathen lands, but do you know that in the state of Massachusetts a little girl of twelve years can be legally married, and in three of the states a girl of ten years can legally consent to her own ruin? Do you blame white-ribbon mothers for saying that they must and will have the ballot for the protection of their little children?

Tell your little girl sometimes that you are glad God gave her to you, and she will probably never forget it. Remember that the tenderness which you show her will be handed down to her children as a blessed heritage from you. If you wish to be a real mother to her, you must give and keep her loving confidence, and to gain it you must be worthy of it. Keep the little secrets she tells you sacredly, and remember that a child is extremely sensitive to ridicule.

In the coming years, as your little girl, grown to womanhood, sits in her own home with her baby girl in her arms and dreams of her own childhood, the old home, the father, "gone over the river," the little brothers and sisters scattered, to meet no more on earth, what will she see as the central figure of that home? Will it be one who stood as an avenging spirit, ready to punish her children for all mistakes and accidents; who put the worst possible construction upon the deeds of her children; who overlooked nothing and forgave nothing; who saw no difference between a broken saucer and a broken word; none between a torn apron and an act of cruelty towards a little playmate? Or will it be one who was a peacemaker, a just judge, a wise counselor, a trusted friend, a comforter, a tender, soft-voiced mother, whose heart was filled with the spirit of Christ?

IN CHURCH.

Just in front of my pew sits a maiden—
A little brown wing on her hat,
With its touches of tropical azure
And sheen of the sun upon that.

Through the bloom-covered pane shines a glory
By which the vast shadows are stirred;
But I pine for the spirit and splendor
That painted the wing of the bird!

The organ rolls down its great anthem,
With the soul of a song it is blent;
But for me, I am sick for the singing
Of one little song that is spent.

The voice of the curate is gentle—
"No sparrow shall fall to the ground"—
But the poor broken wing on the bonnet
Is mocking the merciful sound.

Close and sweet is the breath of the lilies
Asleep on the altar of prayer;
But my soul is athirst with the fragrance
Far out in the bountiful air.

And I wonder if ever or never,
With white wings o'er weary and furled,
I shall find the sweet spirit of pity
Abroad in the heart of the world.

RULES FOR THE CARE OF ANIMALS.

BY THE ROYAL SOCIETY FOR THE PREVENTION OF CRUELTY.

1. No one has a right to keep animals, either for use or pleasure, unless he is able and willing to provide them with whatever is necessary for their health and happiness. No animal can be healthy or happy unless it is kindly treated, comfortably lodged, regularly fed, supplied with water and afforded opportunities of recreation.

2. Kind and gentle treatment is due to all animals and need not interfere with firmness in governing them. Animals are often thought to be ill-tempered or obstinate when they are really suffering from some pain or irritation, the cause of which is not seen, but which may be soothed by patience and quietness. If you try to find out what is the matter with an animal before you punish him you will probably find that there is no reason to punish him. Be careful to remove anything that causes fear. Animals are often terrified by things that men hardly observe. If they are punished their terror is only increased. Nothing will quiet them so soon as gentle talk and caressing. Kindness will win the confidence of any animal, and an animal which confides in its keeper is easily managed. If you want your horse to work well take good care that his harness does not chafe him.

3. All animals require sunshine, and their dwellings should have a southerly or westerly aspect, if possible; but they should always have access to shade when they desire it. Stables, sheds, coops and cages should be well drained, well lighted and ventilated, but never draughty. Different animals require different temperatures. A humane owner will prevent much suffering by learning the degree of heat and cold which the animal is enabled by nature or habit to endure. Every stable yard, cage, kennel and bed should be kept thoroughly clean.

4. Every animal should have as much solid food daily as it will eat up clean, but no more than it will consume. Stale food is unwholesome. It should be removed early in the morning and replaced by a fresh supply. Nocturnal animals should be fed at sunset. Be careful to give all animals as much variety of food as possible, and let it be as nearly as possible the food which the animal would use in a state of nature. Animals which are regularly fed on grain ought to have frequent supplies of green food.

5. Every animal should have an abundant supply of pure water for drinking. Vessels used for food or water should be washed daily, and should be wiped dry before refilling. Iron troughs or plates lined with porcelain are the best, being clean, cheap and durable.

6. Bathing is necessary to the health and comfort of many animals. Cage birds ought to be allowed to bathe daily, and a separate vessel, adapted to their size, should be supplied for that purpose. Some birds delight in dust baths. A working horse should be allowed every day to roll on the grass, or better, perhaps, on sawdust.

7. Animals, as well as men, are happier and better for reasonable recreation. Whenever it is possible they should have it. The horse should be allowed an opportunity to run at large. Dogs, especially in cities, should be taken out to run freely. Even cage birds are immensely pleased if they are allowed to leave the cage for an hour or so every day.

8. When an animal is sick see that it is kept quiet and unmolested, and that its treatment is unusually gentle.

9. When it is certain that an animal will die always secure the services of a humane and experienced person to destroy it in the quickest and least painful way, and when it dies never fail to bury it at once.

10. Try to make the world as happy a world as possible for any creature in your charge.

THE WOODPECKER.

Among all our bird friends there are few more interesting than the different woodpeckers who live with us all the year round. They can be recognized at once by their stiff tails and the way they cling to tree trunks and lie lengthwise on the boughs.

To our forest and fruit trees they are one of nature's greatest safeguards, and it is only in ignorance that the agriculturists kill them. Sordid man finds a market for their beautiful plumage on the hats and bonnets of women. These birds have a wonderfully sharp beak, with which to hammer a hole through bark and timber until the tunnel of some tree borer is struck, and then their long tongues, with an end like a fishhook, search around and capture the destroying grub.

Their nests are made, as a rule, in decaying trees, where the bird digs out an entrance and then a basement. There is no need of any building for the nest. The small chips of wood form a warm bed for the eggs and the clamoring youngsters. Year after year the birds generally delve out another nest, for the reason that the bluebird and that far worse robber, the English sparrow, usurp the old homestead, and I am sorry to say the wren is also a robber.

The flicker, or golden-winged woodpecker, also known as the highhole, clape, and certainly a score of other names, is one of our best known woodpeckers. It makes its nest everywhere; in tall trees, in the wooden towers of churches, and I have found its nest on the top of an ice-house, and trying to learn something more by nesting in the cupola of a well-known university.

I saw one of these birds, evidently a crazy bachelor, trying to flirt with a goldfinch. He bowed and scraped and flirted with his tail, and the small bird on a neighboring tree looked on in a most amused way, and was undoubtedly flattered, but she flew away, and the flicker went to work and unwooded a grub.

After July, when their breeding season is over, there are no more frolicsome birds than these. I have seen them playing as good a game of "tag" among themselves as I ever saw among the irrepressible boys just out of school. The young of these birds never cease in their clamors for food, and even when they have left their hole-nest they are fed by the parent birds.

The feeding process is a strange one. The old one half loses its long bill down the throat of the youngster, and from its crop gives up a sufficient supply of half-digested food just for a very short time.

The courtship of these birds is exquisitely quaint. They begin with a waltz, quite of their own creation, and, facing each other, touch beaks; then, after going through various figures, cross beaks and the dance is over, all done with lowered and spreading tail.

The downy woodpecker is particularly fond of apple trees, and though popularly supposed to be an enemy of the orchard, is in reality one of its greatest friends. They tunnel for the worms, and it has been conclusively proved that trees drilled with their holes have long outlived in usefulness the trees unvisited by these birds.—Olive Thorne Miller.

FLAG SALUTES.

The Balch Salute, originated by Col. George T. Balch, of New York city, is as follows:

"We give our heads and our hearts to God and our country; one country, one language, one flag."

The Frank Bellamy Salute, recommended by the Youth's Companion, and used in nearly every school in the United States on Columbus day is:

"I pledge allegiance to my flag and to the Republic for which it stands—one Nation indivisible, with liberty and justice for all."

The Acme Haversack publishes still another, which is set to music. It is:

"I love and will defend our flag, and our country of equal rights; one nation, one flag forever."

—Selected.

I COULD almost wish that the shooters of the birds, the taxidermist who prepares them, and the fashionable woman who wears their plumage, might share the penalty of the ancient mariner who shot the albatross.—Whittier.

SUMMER PRIZE ESSAY CONTEST.

To the boy or girl who writes the best and most helpful account of WHAT I HAVE DONE FOR TEMPERANCE THIS SUMMER, will be given the new game published by the Woman's Temperance Publishing Association, entitled, "Illustrated Authors." The essays must be written on one side of the paper; are not limited in length; and must be received not later than September 1. Be sure to give your age.

WHAT I HAVE LEARNED ABOUT THE WORLD'S PETITION.

BY HELEN SEAVER.

[ESSAY NO. 5.]

The plan of the World's Petition was thought out by Miss Frances E. Willard. The idea of it is to get as many signers as possible and present it to the different governments of the world to induce them to abolish the liquor traffic and the opium trade. Mrs. Mary Clement Leavitt, our first round-the-world missionary, was also the first one to circulate the Petition.

She started from her home in 1883, and was absent nine years. In that time she traveled to nearly every government of the world. Mrs. R. C. Shuman was the one who made the Petition and she started it in 1890. It took about eight hours of her time every day for two years. It was made of white cloth and bound with red ribbon on one side and blue on the other, making the three colors of our national flag. The cloth is 2,000 yards long and the ribbon is over 4,000 yards long, without counting what it took to make three rolls from England. The ribbon Mrs. Shuman sewed on all by hand. The names are pasted to the cloth three columns across. There are 1,000,121 actual signatures, 6,000,000 attestations and 1,000,000 men have indorsed it. There are 150,000,000 in all who have indorsed it. The Salvation Army is recorded 50,000 strong and the United Society of Christian Endeavor have increased the list by 2,000,000. Over a thousand churches signed and there are eighty thousand in rising votes.

The names of dignitaries, men in authority and such like are in one roll. Neal Dow's name heads the list, and just below it is the name of Joseph Cook.

In one of the letters Mrs. Shuman received was a sentiment from a Texas woman, which I will quote: "What is done in this line mus' be done by woman—man is a failour—commence at the cradel." Mrs. Shuman says that when she was making the Petition she felt as though she was weaving together the groans of the dying and the tears of the saints. Miss Willard had an interview with President Cleveland one day, and Mrs. Hoffman and some other ladies, including the president of the Washington W. C. T. U., went with her. Miss Willard told the President about the Petition, after which Mrs. Hoffman read the document. Cleveland made a speech and did not say anything to discourage the women. This petitioning is only a part of the work. The temperance work is going right on fast and I think we will soon have Prohibition.

The L. T. L. children are growing up and the liquor men will get fewer and fewer "as the days are going by."

Milton, Wis.

A VIEW OF THE CENSUS REPORT.

A few facts from the recently published census report will be of interest to our readers, especially as it is generally conceded to be—taking for granted that newspapers are true reflectors of public opinion—"an important and interesting contribution to the statistics of the new woman movement." This latest bulletin of the census bureau deals with the occupations of the people and discloses a sociological condition which some people—not only conservatives but many also of the more progressive men and women—are inclined to "view with alarm."

According to the report 48 per cent of all persons in the United States over ten years of age are engaged in "gainful occupations." In other words, the total working force of the nation is, in round numbers, nearly twenty-three million, of which nearly four million are women and girls. The significant feature, however, of the statistics given is not in this proportion as such—for the number of males engaged in money-making occupations is to females as almost five to one—but in the fact of the rapid increase of women in the various fields of labor.

During the decade, 1880–90, the increase in the number of males in occupation was 27 per cent, of females, 49 per cent. The proportion in cities is of course much greater, Chicago showing the enormous increase in the ranks of working women of 263 per cent. The total number of occupations given in the report is 221, women being represented in 219 of them. The only two which are exempt from the invasion of the weaker sex—to use the language of the alarmists—are the army and navy. A remarkable showing, indeed, when we consider the scarcity of gainful occupations open to women half a century ago!

In the educational field women outnumber the men by three to one. Teaching has come to be regarded as perfectly proper an avocation for woman as dressmaking, laundering, domestic service or keeping boarders, and that this country has nearly 300,000 woman teachers is not surprising. With the higher education for women came the woman college professor, and there are now 735 of them in our colleges and universities.

The 4,555 women doctors are without doubt doing much toward supplying a "long felt want;" so are the 1,235 women preachers, the 337 dentists, 208 lawyers and 22 architects, to say nothing of the numerous other avocations which were once popularly regarded as belonging exclusively to the other sex.

We can hardly say the same, however, of the 147 bartenders, the 2,275 saloon-keepers, 72 brewers and 9 distillers to be found among the "better half" of the people! We think it speaks well for womankind, that in the general craze for money-getting which is so marked a feature of the present age, and woman is by common consent accorded an equal "right" with man in the struggle of the industrial arena, such a small proportion of the sex is found in the liquor business—that most gainful of all occupations, a business in which money-getting is so easy and rapid.

In looking over the report one cannot but wonder what peculiar combination of circumstances impelled 353 women to become miners, 30 to become quarrymen and 32 to take up woodchopping as a means of livelihood. That the work of locomotive engineers and of firemen should have a certain attraction for women is more easy to understand. Twenty-nine women have succumbed to the fascination of a sailor's life, and one woman pilot is reported. "In fact," says the "grumbler," "women are in everything," and some of these disapproving ones go so far as to find in the facts disclosed by the census report the main cause of the vast army of idle men and of industrial disturbances generally. Here is a point the anti-silver men will do well to make the most of! The public in its innocence was beginning to believe that the "gold bugs" were to blame for all the troubles of the nation; now they can lay it to "the woman"!

There is one thing, however, to be said in favor of women as money makers. They do not, as a rule, spend their earnings for drink and tobacco; they are not profitable patrons of the liquor dive and gambling den.

It is true, we admit, that competition between the sexes on the industrial plane—or on any other plane of life—is, to say the least, undesirable. But it is equally to be deplored between man and man. Competition is an abnormal condition. Combination, coöperation is the law of nature—that is to say, of unperverted nature. And it must be remembered that there is such a thing—and natural science recognizes it—as a competition which tends to combination, a struggle for survival, which is the direct cause of coöperation. And coöperation is, on whatever plane it may occur, a distinct step in evolution.

WORLD'S CONVENTION.
Extracts from the President's Address.

CHANGING PHASES OF OUR WORK.

Perhaps no line of agitation for purposes of reform has ever presented more changing phases than the one with which we have to deal. At first it was a pure, bright ray like the light of a picture by Rembrandt, where the surrounding shadows only serve to heighten its concentrated brilliancy. These were the days when personal abstinence from alcoholic liquors constituted the sum and substance of a movement to which but few even of the [illegible] minds and hearts became adherents, but gradually the light has spread. The relations of the temperance movement to every other form of beneficent associated efforts have been diligently studied and to-day the modern temperance movement includes, largely in its methods and altogether in its spirit, much that is best in those circles of expert reform and philanthropic work that are the outshining of Christ's gospel in the world. To say that in these days the temperance reform is narrow is simply to confess one's ignorance of the stages through which it has passed. Nothing so well describes it as illustrated in the work of the white ribbon as those words of George Eliot, "The blessing of a good diffused."

THREE NEW PUBLICATIONS.

Three new hand-books have been brought out for the convenience of this Convention and to be circulated universally, we hope, among our co workers.

"Thumb Nail Sketches of White-Ribboners," include the chief names of those who lead the host in the different nations of the globe. It has been prepared by Mrs. C. C. Chapin (who, by the way, is an English woman) editor of publications for the Woman's Temperance Publishing Association. Mrs. Chapin regrets that she had not more time, but has done, we think, admirably well under the circumstances.

Mrs. Elizabeth Wheeler Andrew has prepared a history of the World's Woman's Christian Temperance Union, under the name of "The World's White Ribbon." In company with Dr. Kate Bushnell, Mrs. Andrew has invested three years in work for our society, making a specialty of the purity and anti-opium departments. She was for years one of the editors of THE UNION SIGNAL and brings to her task a practiced pen and a phenomenal memory of persons and places, dates and doings.

My hand-book of white ribbon work with special reference to the widest evolution that we call the "World's" is entitled, "Do Everything," and is a defense of our policy and recapitulation of our methods with many personal suggestions to be taken or left according to the good judgment of my comrades.

TEMPERANCE AND LABOR.

To the labor reformers we have to say, you have united for home protection, so have we; you will bring it about by standing together at the ballot-box, so shall we; you will succeed by keeping level heads and hands that do not tremble, so shall we. We used to say intemperance was the cause of poverty; now we have completed the circle of truth by saying poverty causes intemperance, and that the underpaid, underfed, undersheltered wage-earning teetotaler deserves a thousand times more credit than the teetotaler who is well paid, well fed and well sheltered. In the slums they drink to forget; we would make life something they would gladly remember—so would you. Our objects are the same; let us clasp hands in the unity of the spirit and the bond of peace.

UNDER THE HEAD OF PURITY.

What we should wonder at is not that some women have become degraded, but that more have not been thus ground under the hoofs of social tyranny.

The virginal heart of women asserts itself in every friendless girl who, against the awful odds, arms herself with an honorable bread winning weapon and spends her life in hopeless toil, often at five shillings a week, when, if she would listen to the whispered temptation that assails her at every opportunity, she might live in idleness and amid the surroundings of comfort if not of luxury. Think of the needle-women who sit over their work eighteen hours in every twenty-four, of the shop girl who stands behind the counter, being forbidden by her employers to sit down, and who works from eight in the morning till six or eight at night, when in a single day she could earn more than she now does in a month. Think of the girls behind the bar where they average eighteen to twenty hours a day, and where the brutal words and ways of the patrons enfold them in an atmosphere of degradation, and yet the great majority even of these keep themselves on the firm level of self-respect and decency.

If under the grinding conditions of competition such women can hold themselves to a wholesome and cleanly life, what should we not witness of purity and exaltation in these lives if they had a fair chance to earn their bread and time left for recuperation, recreation and repose? What we must seek to gain for them is the living wage, which has been aptly called "that sum necessary to maintain an average man (or woman) with an average family in an average state of civilized comfort."

The martyrdom of women under existing laws is their actual canonization. The saints of these days are the saints of the shop, who fight with greater heroism than the soldiers of Balaclava, that they may not become the sinners of the street.

DRESS.

Just as the medicine man has become the physician, the conjuror changed to the inventor, the astrologer to the scientist, so the fetish worship of fashion is bound to change to the control of hygiene and æsthetics in the dress of men and women. No haphazard way of doing anything can survive in these days when according to law is found to be the method of the universe from matter in the sun to matter in the molecule. There are certain fabrics, the wearing of which conserves the highest physical well being of the human animal; there are certain ways of putting that material together which adapt it to the health, comfort, convenience and embellishment of the wearer; these laws are being studied and will prevail. If a commission of men and women, made up in large part of physicians and artists, were empowered by the united societies of women to investigate the origin of fashions, the causes of their frequent change, and to devise more reasonable methods of dress, much good would come of it.

The reasoning faculty in women has but recently reached a point where they begin to wonder why it is that they must submit like so many lay figures to be decked in garments of such material, cut and color as somebody chooses who has not yet been authorized to choose, and why that somebody should choose, as he, she or it, is pleased to do, is one of the questions which while the average woman has by no means presumed to ask it, has nevertheless invaded the outer court of many a woman's mind and manifests itself in a nebulous way especially when the dressmaker's bill comes to hand. One thing is certain, when women come to themselves out of the dream and inanition of ages, it is safe to say there will be such another revolt from the prevailing methods of feminine attire as will prove in right down earnest that women have developed a future race worthy to live in that better world that we are now engaged in manufacturing here below.

Before the departure of Worth, the Parisian dressmaker, he had the frankness to make some statements about his business. As is well known, he was an Englishman of commonplace origin and opportunity, who went to Paris and was employed by a silk mercer for many years. At last it occurred to him that if he could found an establishment where the material was not only sold but made up afterward double gains would accrue to the proprietor. He began by employing fifty hands, and he ended with twelve hundred employés, turning out between six and seven thousand dresses and between two and four thousand cloaks in a year. Being interviewed as to the origin of fashions, Mr. Worth naïvely said: "Without going into all the details which influence the change of style, I may say briefly that when a manufacturer invents any special fabric or design he sends me a pattern, asking if I can make use of it. That fabric may require a severe style of dress, or if it is light and soft it is adapted for draperies, puffings, etc. If the material pleases me, I order a large quantity to be specially made for my establishment, and design my dresses accordingly. The purchase by such a firm as mine of a great quantity of the same material influences other firms, and that material and the style it is suited to become the fashion."

In short, the great Parisian dressmaker in collusion with he manufacturers of cloth, and without doubt receiving a heavy commission from them, determines that the sheep-like millions of women who wear the European costume shall put aside the garments for which they have already paid and which are in large part serviceable and shall expend their money for a new material and cut in order that these bright business men may put money into their purses. The woman of small means tags on at the end of the procession, imitating the general appearance of those at its head so far as her limited and hard earned wages will allow. The whole scheme is one of the most deadly tyrannies the world has ever seen, and one of the most senseless; it is founded on the shrewdness of the manufacturer and the ignorance of the patron. And scientific knowledge will be the death of it—and scientific knowledge is moving on apace. Women are beginning to think, and a most respectable contingent of them have already struck against the idiotic enswathment of their forms by a set of men who care nothing for their health, their duties as mothers, or their compliance with the immutable laws of beauty; but who has really exploited them in the character of lay figures as if they stood in a show window to be turned round and round that they might catch the gaping eyes of the passing populace upon the street.

LOVE.

It is not more money that we need, but more love; not energy, but radiant energy; not heat, but white heat; not boiling water, but steam. We fall just short of ardor, and to do this is fatal. No matter how near the water comes to being steam it will not move the locomotive one inch until it is steam;—that elastic, invisible, impenetrable and irresistible power. Love is like that; it cannot be withstood; its godlike flame burns away the dross of policy in the pure, white light of principle. Nothing less will ever fuse the hearts of men in those reforms by which the hearts of Christians become regnant in the world. We have all things but love, when love is all we want.

Men go about smiling whose hearts are like lumps of ice in their breasts. If we had love the slums of London would not be left another day; we could not endure to have them, for love is the most practical force in the universe. It can no more help radiating than the sun can help shining.

There is nothing impracticable in this; all that is lacking is the inward pulsation of love to somebody besides ourselves; disinterested, helpful, outreaching—and unless the religion of Christ puts that into a person all psalms and prayers are windy mockery; the heart is filled with ashes instead of flame; the life is a Sahara desert instead of a fragrant garden. We know these things, happy should we be if we did them, but we quietly content ourselves to do them not.

THE OPIUM COMMISSION.

We cannot too highly honor Mr. H. J. Wilson, M. P., who presented the minority report of the opium commission.

The majority report is so evidently written in the interest of the government in India, and so subservient to its purpose and wishes that the British people will never believe it to be a genuine statement of the situation.

In Mr. Wilson we have the utmost confidence; his life and record cannot fail to inspire our highest respect and regard, and he has added to the obligation under which he long ago placed the friends of purity and temperance by the attitude he has taken in opposition to a majority of the commission. Mr. Wilson charges that a letter was sent to the chairman of the commission of a character that Mr. Wilson considers "a departure from that judicial attitude which might have been expected from Her Majesty's representative." He complains that the supreme government in India insisted on seeing abstracts of the evidence and proposed witnesses, and that after the perusal of these abstracts by the official censors, certain witnesses were not called. He also declares that the movements of himself and his friends were even tracked by the police.

He states that the Bombay government sought to prevent information on opium being furnished to Mr. Hart, of the British Medical Association, "because such information might prove embarrassing" and above all he complains that undue interference was used in the preparation of evidence from the native states.

For these reasons Mr. Wilson states that while the authorities had declared their intention of enabling the commission to fully ascertain the actual facts, in reality they did nothing of the kind, and he plainly declares that their action was "inconsistent with any real desire on their part that the whole of the facts should come in a perfectly unbiased manner before the world." The one light on this foggy picture is that the entire commission agreed in the opinion that the facilities for opium smoking should be diminished and the practice made more difficult. They said that native public opinion generally condemns the practice as disreputable.

THUMB NAIL SKETCHES.

A little volume which is destined to be of much help to W. C. T. U. women is "Thumb Nail Sketches of White Ribbon Women," just issued by the W. T. P. A. A former book under this title was, many of our readers will remember, brought out just previous to the first World's Convention held in Boston, 1891, and was among the last efforts of the brilliant and beloved Julia Ames, whose death in the full bloom and mental vigor of consecrated young womanhood was so widely mourned.

Since this first edition was exhausted there has been impressed upon those who are in a position to take a broad outlook of the field the necessity for the perpetuation of such a valuable aid to that esprit de corps, which is so marked a feature of our work and which contributes so much to the success of the W. C. T. U. as an organization. Hence the decision of the Woman's Temperance Publishing Association to bring out a new and enlarged edition of "Sketches," giving to the book the more comprehensive character demanded by the increasing forces and widening influence of our organization.

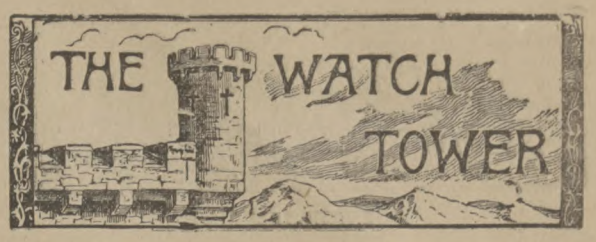
"Its purpose," says its editor, Mrs. Clara C. Chapin, in the introduction, "is not so much to emblazon the name and the fame of the persons herein sketched—though incidentally it cannot fail to do that—but rather to serve our workers everywhere by making them better acquainted with the personality of their leaders while those leaders still remain with us. We hope it may assist local unions in advertising speakers, and perhaps induce press superintendents to print from time to time some of these brief sketches of representative white-ribboners."

The book gives brief biographical sketches of two hundred and seventy women, fifteen different countries being represented. First come the World's general officers, superintendents and round-the-world missionaries. Then follow National and Colonial auxiliaries, the editor regretting that the limited time given for the compilation of this book (it being designed as one of the specialties for the World's Convention in London) made it impossible to procure sketches of the presidents of all auxiliaries of the World's W. C. T. U.

Of our own National union are given the general officers, state presidents, superintendents, organizers, evangelists and women officially connected with its affiliated interests, the W. T. P. A., Hospital and Temple. Several pages are devoted to sketches of "pioneers" (Crusaders, and early promoters of the white-ribbon movement), "promoted" comrades, and the closing pages to sketches of "other leaders." The forty half-tone portraits add immensely to the interest and value of a book which will be welcomed and we trust widely used by white-ribboners everywhere.

A reader of these sketches must become impressed with at least three marked characteristics of the W. C. T. U. woman. They reveal, first, that the membership of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union came at the beginning and still continues to come from the churches—and from churches of all denominations, that the W. C. T. U. woman is essentially a Christian woman and her methods Christian methods. Second, that the organization has drawn and still continues to draw its leaders largely from the ranks of teachers—cultured, progressive, thinking women, whose previous training has been such as to give them a broad outlook upon humanity and its needs. Third, that the white-ribboner is preëminently a womanly woman. The claim—often brought forward as an intended extinguisher for the advanced woman—that "home is woman's proper sphere" the W. C. T. U. woman evidently has no quarrel with, for she goes into the home-keeping business much more extensively and more systematically than her unawakened sister. Most of them with happy homes of their own, all of them with the mother spirit strong within them—that spirit which prompts the struggle for the life of others which is coming to be recognized in these later days as an important factor in the higher evolution—our white ribbon women look upon W. C. T. U. work as a very necessary part of home-keeping. And because their work is in the highest sense "Christian," they may be regarded as the truly "advanced."

We would suggest to local workers the world over that it would contribute in no small degree to the power and prestige of our organization if we could give to the general public a better knowledge of its leaders—who are in truth its representative women—if we could tell outsiders who these women are, what they are and the forces that have impelled their enlistment for "God, and Home and Native Land." This with the aid of the new book of sketches it is now possible to do, for not only temperance papers but newspapers generally will, if tactfully approached, often cheerfully find space in their columns for an occasional brief biographical sketch of a woman whose name is already well known, or one who is likely to become well known to the public. In working up conventions, especially National, state or district, it will be readily seen how "Thumb Nails" can be used to excellent advantage.



We may well be thankful that while we cannot understand God, He perfectly understands us.

Whatever ought to be will be. The poet dreams of the annihilation of time and space; the inventor sets himself at work on the material plane and makes that dream come true. The poet predicts the time when

"Our flags shall all be furled
In the parliament of man, the federation of the world," and the Christian philanthropist sets himself the task of making that prophecy a fact. No single solvent of the sectional spirit can be found like fighting side by side against a common foe. But there cannot be a foe so deadly as the poison that would steal away the brain, and in going forth to war against the two-headed dragon of stimulants and narcotics, humanity shall be fused and moulded into a universal brotherhood. The second temperance century shall see this consummation. Happy are we whose friendly tapers, lifted aloft in the gloom, predict the glow of that summer sun, which shall send warmth to every heart and shine upon our graves. Happy are those brave and patient pioneers who, on their lonely pilgrimages, have unwound the pure white ribbon that is to belt the globe. Women are born idealists and respond to nothing so warmly as to an appeal for one who adventures on a noble mission into territory not yet explored.

No method of advertising is so successful as to enlist the children by a pictorial circular descriptive of our lectures, entertainments, conventions, etc., and distributed to the children at the school-house gate. They will do more than any other single effort to make the meetings a success. This is not a theory, but bubbles up from the experiences of those who have borne the burden and heat of the day in pioneer efforts to introduce the W. C. T. U.

Mrs. Milward Adams, of Chicago, who is among the leading exponents of vocal and platform culture for women, makes some very pointed suggestions regarding the use of the voice which she says should be as mobile as the features in expressing emotions. She said, "The American voice owes its monotonous quality to the fact that it seems limited to the use of the lower tones of the scale." She also states that the school room experience of children has much to do in making their voices harsh. Much has been written and spoken upon woman's duty in cultivating a cheerful expression by daily inward calm and outward repression of frowns and wrinkles. We have paid too little attention to that wonderful set of organs through which we make ourselves heard. Might there not be fewer frowns and wrinkles if there were gentler and more carefully modulated tones? "Come home early to-night, my boy!" is a sentence capable of arousing resentment, repentance, respect, resolve to do better or worse. How shall it be spoken? Would it not be well to "think on these things"?

Dr. Bird writes: "Yes, that is a cute way of On Duty's of finding out how fast the train goes—standing on the back platform and counting the rail-joints with the naked eye; but did you ever try it? It is my personal opinion that the human eye with its 'persistence of vision' cannot do it. And then, who wants to stand out in a howling rain, car swaying like a camel and brakeman pointing to the sign on the door? And how about dark nights? Let me tell you a better way. Ever notice the click-a-lack-tack which the wheels make? Yes? Well, each repetition means a rail-joint, and you can count with your ears and so have both eyes for your watch. In a sleeping car you can hear the monotonous ticking, and after a little experience you can make quite accurate estimates of speed without using your watch at all,—like a doctor counting a pulse. Now, a rail being thirty feet gives one hundred and seventy-six rails per mile, eighty-eight for a half mile and forty-four to a quarter. So if you count forty-four rails in fifteen seconds you are going sixty miles an hour, etc., ad lib. This gives almost exactly the same figures that your rule does—the number of rails in twenty-one seconds being the number of miles per hour—but it is perhaps easier understood. The rail sounds will vary, somewhat, on different roads and with different cars, but a full repetition of whatever sounds are made will indicate a rail's length."

MICHIGAN.

TWENTY-FIRST ANNUAL CONVENTION.

[At my request, Mrs. Sarah J. La Tour, of Detroit, who was our state superintendent of press the past three years, and is now associate superintendent, has prepared the report of our annual gathering for THE UNION SIGNAL.—MRS. C. H. JOHNSON, State Reporter.]

The Michigan W. C. T. U. met in twenty-first annual session in the audience room of the First M. E. church, Battle Creek, on Tuesday, June 4, 1895, at three in the afternoon. The church was made a beautiful home for the convention for the week. The platform was decorated with the portraits of Frances Willard and Mary T. Lathrap. Palms, potted plants and cut flowers in rare profusion, made the air redolent with their sweet perfume. The organ loft was decorated with yellow and white bunting entwined, and these colors decorated the church everywhere.

Upon the walls hung the banners from districts, counties and local unions, entwined among which were thousands of L. T. L. cards. Mottoes adorned the walls, among which were: "We greet you. All hail to our White-Ribbon Host." "Let us be the Women to Make Things Come to Pass," the latter the inspiration of many faithful ones during the convention.

At the first service, a consecration meeting, a spirit of holiness seemed to pervade the entire audience. Many prayers of great pathos and power ascended heavenward, asking God's assistance for those left behind.

At the close of the consecration service, Mrs. A. S. Benjamin, state president, stepped to the front of the platform, and with an especially tender voice, trembling with emotion, she called the convention to order. Realizing full well that she stood in the place of the royal woman who for thirteen years had led the white ribbon women of Michigan, her position was one that could not but bring to her mind loving remembrances of the dear one "gone to the fore." Mrs. Benjamin throughout the entire convention presided in a beautiful manner, and loyally was every request obeyed. Dr. C. C. Lathrap, of Jackson, was presented to the convention by the president, and the entire audience as with one accord sang, "Blest be the tie that binds."

Roll-call showed all the officers, members of the executive board, and several superintendents present. Reports from the twelve district superintendents gave the financial and numerical work of the districts. These reports showed more money raised than in any previous year, and a large amount of work accomplished in the cause of temperance reform, new unions being organized and old ones strengthened.

Tuesday evening, greetings from citizens and pastors of Battle Creek, were received and responses made. The evening had been set apart for memorial services for the "promoted ones," prominent among which were our beloved leader, Mary T. Lathrap. Mrs. P. J. Howard, president of the eleventh district, presided, and made a very tender and touching address, closing with Mrs. Lathrap's own words,

"Thank God for the solemn evening skies,
In which the stars appear;
Thank God for the tender grace of death,
After the toil and tears.

"Thank God, that looking across a grave,
The world's dim vision clears,
'Till Calvary lies in the golden glow
Of God's eternal years."

Letters were read from many former state officers who had served under Mrs. Lathrap. Many were the beautiful and noble sentiments spoken of the womanly life and high purpose of the deceased, whose memory will long linger with the women of "Michigan, my Michigan."

Wednesday morning Mrs. Jennie Voorheis, state treasurer, presented her annual report: Twenty-seven new unions had been organized; total membership, 7,217; receipts for year, $3,313.

Mrs. Julia R. Parish, state corresponding secretary, made an extended report of work done in the state: There are 419 local unions, with a membership of 7,217; Y's, 314; L. T. Legions, 76, with a membership of 3,493. There have been 62 pledges presented at public meetings, and 1,864 pledges secured. Seventeen women, so far reported, are holding public positions, 50 medal contests have been held and six National lecturers secured. There are 3,000 places in the state where intoxicating liquors are sold; receipts from all sources have been $15,824.79. She had sent out 1,198 communications, 600 letters, 388 postals and 210 circulars, at an expense of $74.29, and had made 10 public addresses. She is also editor of the Michigan Union, which comes to us bright and newsy every month. Thus the position of state corresponding secretary is found to be no enviable one. But Mrs. Parish, inspired by her love for the Master, has listened to the call that bade her go forth and work in the temperance cause. The president then read her annual address. She began as follows:

"It is related of Cromwell that as his army was going into battle, the doxology was read, brigade after brigade took up the words, and the columns marched on amid shot and shell and won the victory. The W. C. T. U. marches on in like manner, victorious sometimes, but defeat lurks on either side, and if grasped by all womanhood it would be a potent factor. It was a happy thought of the organization that causes the flag to float over so many schoolhouses, and each year the standard should be raised higher." She made several recommendations, which together with the address were enthusiastically received.

Wednesday evening, one of the most interesting parts of the program was given over to the district presidents. Each in turn was witty, forceful and full of suggestions. Mrs. Lucy F. Morehouse read a statement of the work done at Hackley Park. It had been very thorough and is already bearing good fruit. A very unique map on "plan of organization" was shown, drawn by Mrs. Morehouse's son. That lady also conducted a "model union," to the great delight of all present. The report of the credentials committee, previous to the election of officers, showed one hundred and eighty-six delegates present.

Upon balloting, Mrs. Benjamin received 133 out of 184 ballots cast for president. The announcement was most enthusiastically received, and all arose to greet the newly elected, beloved leader, for the ensuing year. "Praise God, from whom all blessings flow" was heartily sung. Mrs. Benjamin was very visibly affected, and, in a trembling voice, with eyes suffused with tears, pledged loyal allegiance to the work and workers, and thanked the women for the confidence reposed in her, and the honor thus shown her. Michigan women have made no uncertain choice. Mrs. Benjamin stands pledged to all that we are working ultimately to obtain, and we feel certain that with sure and steady hand she will wield the power with which she has been entrusted. Mrs. Julia R. Parish was elected corresponding secretary; Mrs. C. H. Johnson, recording secretary, and Mrs. Jennie Voorheis, treasurer, almost unanimously.

Thursday evening was devoted to the Y's, who sang the Y song, "Ring out, ye temperance bells." This was an evening which will be remembered by the delegates, showing that the youth of our country are being thoroughly trained in purity of thought and action.

Mrs. J. H. Kellogg read a very carefully prepared paper on "Mothers' Meetings." She advocated that instead of studying and talking impurity, to talk and study purity. This paper was received with loud applause.

Mrs. C. H. Johnson, the able reporter for THE UNION SIGNAL, gave the history of the origin and growth of that paper. This report was received with hearty applause. The superintendents of the several departments made their reports of work done during the year. These showed advance all along the line, and the words of one, "that we strengthen our stakes, lengthen our borders and stretch forth the curtains of our habitations," will need no extra effort on the part of officers and members.

The session of the last evening was held at the opera house which was literally packed. Mrs. Benjamin presided in her usual happy manner and introduced Mrs. Katharine Lente Stevenson, National corresponding secretary, who held the audience for nearly two hours, taking as her subject "Things Old and New." Mrs. Stevenson made a very happy address and advocated concerted action in all lines of work. It is woman's divine right to go out and make the whole world homelike, broad, full and true, that through us heaven may be on earth. Mrs. Stevenson's address was received with loud applause.

CONVENTION NOTES.

A telegram of greeting was received from the West Virginia state W. C. T. U. convention in session at Fairmount. "Let us not be weary in well doing, for all in good time we shall reap as we sow." A reply was ordered sent.

The local Battle Creek union was presented with a beautiful satin banner, the gift of the ex-mayors and business men.

The delegates, upon invitation of the fire department, visited the engine house. After inspecting the model building the ladies were treated to a "hitchup" by the fire laddies. The horses were decorated with badges and white ribbons.

Greetings were received from fraternal delegates from several local societies.

The delegates attended a most delightful reception at the sanitarium, the guests of Dr. and Mrs. Kellogg; also one at the rooms of the Woman's League, as guests of that body.

The common council presented the delegates with a souvenir of the city. It was declared to be a very "un"-common council.

A cablegram was sent the World's W. C. T. U., also messages to the absent loved ones.

Battle Creek right royally entertained her guests. The church was filled at every session, many being obliged to leave for want of standing room. Many of the business places were decorated in yellow and white, the temperance and suffrage colors. Many courtesies were shown the delegates, and hearts and homes were opened wide to receive them. Battle Creek well deserves her title, "The Queen City of the West."

TEXAS.

STATE CONVENTION.

The thirteenth annual convention of the W. C. T. U. was held in Hillsboro, May 15–20, and was a success in every sense of the word.

The two largest daily papers in the state had reporters present, who gave full accounts of the proceedings, as did also the local papers. This is something new in our history, but since our encounter with the legislature at its last session the press of the state has become a warm friend of the W. C. T. U.

The convention was held in the M. E. church South, the largest and most beautiful church in the town. The decorations were beautiful. Suspended above the altar a green globe encircled by a white ribbon suggested the lines,

"All round the world
The ribbon white is twined."

The first evening was given to welcomes. A real live mayor, who was neither out of town on urgent business, nor ill, welcomed the women even into politics if thereby we "could purify them." There were welcomes also from the press, the churches, the local union, the I. O. G. T., the Little Messengers, the Y. P. S. C. E., the Salvation Army, the medical profession, the Y. M. C. A. and Sesame Club. A severe storm brought the exercises to a sudden close and some of the addresses were deferred. The response to so many welcomes was delivered by Mrs. Fanny Reese Pugh, in her usual happy style.

A large delegation was present and the hearts and homes of Hillsboro were thrown wide open with true hospitality, many regretting that no delegates had been sent to them.

Telegrams were received from the Cumberland Presbyterian Assembly in session at Meridian, Miss., the Press Association at Waco, the Sunday-school Convention at Corsicana and the Presbyterian Assembly at Dallas, the latter saying they "rarely acknowledged greetings from any but an ecclesiastical body, but that the W. C. T. U. was almost an ecclesiastical body, and is doing a grand work."

Seventy-nine unions were reported in the state, and reports from all the departments were made, showing a vast amount of work accomplished all along the line.

A new office, that of state organizer, was created, and Mrs. Belle G. Bigelow, late of Nebraska, elected to fill it. Mrs. Bigelow is a powerful speaker, and the convention felt that its size had almost doubled, so much did she seem to add to its strength.

The president in her annual address gave a full account of her ten weeks' work in the legislature for the twin bills of the mothers of Texas. The names of the noble men who so ably championed the age of consent bills and were willing to vote for eighteen were inscribed in gold letters on a banner, Lieutenant-Governor Jester's name heading the list underscored with two gold lines typical of the two votes that saved both bills. These names were long and loudly applauded.

The names of those voting for fifteen, but were not willing for eighteen, were on a separate banner, and were received in dead silence. They deserved no credit and received none. The names of those voting against the bill from the first, and who took such active part in the disgraceful filibustering were in black letters on a banner trimmed with black fringe and crape.

The self-sacrificing labors of our state president were feelingly told by some of the delegates, who spoke from personal knowledge. For ten weeks she labored for the age of consent and cigarette bills, walking three-quarters of a mile four times a day, in bitter cold and rain, often dining on fruit and crackers, so anxious was she to keep down expenses that the unions might have more to expend in local work. Her entire expense to the state treasury was the enormous sum of fifty-five dollars. A man under the same circumstances would have expended nearer a thousand dollars.

A grand gold medal contest was held on Saturday night before a crowded house. Miss Lou Paul, of Hillsboro, won the medal, reciting "A Vision of Prohibition." Miss Fanny Chambers, state superintendent of medal contests, was prevented by sickness from being present.

Invitations were sent in for speakers from three adjacent towns on Sunday, and also for two meetings at the railroad shops. Requests afterward from these three towns were sent in for unions to be organized. Sixty honoraries and pledges were secured at one railroad meeting alone.

Seven invitations for the convention of 1896 were received. The mayor of Dallas wrote a cordial, pressing and earnest invitation, promising the auditorium and committee rooms free. This being the first invitation ever received from a mayor the reading of the letter gave great pleasure. Being such emotional creatures they did not throw their bonnets and hats in the air nor slap each other on the back and shout, "What's the matter with Holland, of Dallas?" nor did they yell back, "he's all right" as do our unemotional brothers. No, indeed, they merely arose, gave the Chautauqua salute and sang with full hearts, "Praise God, from whom all blessings flow," and later, after the executive committee had discussed it pro and con, accepted with thanks.

A severe rainstorm began Wednesday and continued steadily until Friday, when prayer was offered that the rain then falling might cease and the sun appear. Before noon the sun was shining brightly. This fact appeared in headlines in the daily papers. Lunch was provided in the church these two rainy days.

That the equal suffrage movement is gaining strength was evidenced not only by the reports of the unions, but by the applause given at every mention of the subject during the entire convention by the visitors present.

All the old officers were reëlected with the exception of the recording secretary, who declined serving longer, giving good reasons for so doing and regretfully her request was granted. Mrs. Harriet U. Canfield, who served us so efficiently in the past, was elected to fill the vacancy.

Mrs. Katharine Lente Stevenson honored the convention with her presence and captured all hearts. She was a tower of strength on many questions that came before the convention, giving needed information as to the methods of the National which was eagerly seized and stored for future reference in the local unions.

Mrs. Stevenson's sermon Sunday morning was simply grand, and a feast to her hearers, and her address at night on "Women Speaking in Public from a Bible Standpoint," was convincing and unanswerable. The house was crowded at both services. Would that her congregation had been composed of ministers opposed to this part of woman's work!

Many of the delegates tried to secure her for one night at least for their own towns, and were sorely disappointed to learn that every night was engaged. Nothing would assuage their disappointment but a promise to return to the Lone Star state in the near future. For this visit we shall look longingly and pray fervently.

The convention is a thing of the past; the delegates have returned to their homes and their manifold duties, each realizing that there is a work which she alone can do in the place where God has placed her, each taking as her motto, "This one thing I do." Strong in His strength we go forward to another year of work in the Master's name.

"For the cause that lacks assistance,
For the wrong that needs resistance,
For the future in the distance,
And the good that we can do."

Your reporter is greatly indebted to Mrs. J. L. Vredenburg, of Austin, for the above full account of the convention.

MAINE.

COUNTY CONVENTIONS.

"The members of the W. C. T. U. are better workers than reporters," says one of our brightest county presidents in urging her co-workers to bring full reports of their convention. No one can say "amen" to this in a louder or more mournful tone than a state reporter who feels that the air is fairly vibrating with things that would make a good UNION SIGNAL letter, if those who know of them would only spend a little time in writing them up for her.

County conventions have been the order of the day with us for some time. If any Maine white-ribboner had a secret fear that we were to be at all the losers by the new honor and responsibility conferred at the last National upon our beloved but hard-worked state president, that fear must have vanished long ere this. Mrs. Stevens, as in former years, has attended all the county conventions held up to date, and is planning to go to the rest. It is usually thought advisable to hold the county convention with one of the smallest or newest unions to give its members an impetus. This frequently involves long carriage drives, as the session is often many miles from a railroad, but this does not intimidate our plucky president though she sometimes has to take long drives after speaking in the evening in order to be where she can catch the morning train to get to the next convention.

The Androscoggin unions gathered in the Friends' meeting house, at South Durham. Nearly all the hostesses were Friends, so of course everything was very harmonious. Meals were served in a building near the church which had been moved there only three days before the meeting, but which the enterprise of the Durham ladies had cleaned and turned into a pleasant dining hall. The Durham union also provided barges to convey the delegates to and from the railway station, a distance of four miles.

The county president, Mrs. Odlin, had planned to take her four months' old daughter along as an assistant presiding officer, but a sore eye kept the young lady and her mother both at home. Such things will happen, even in the families of county presidents. Mrs. Odlin's place was ably filled by Mrs. Hayes, president of the oldest union, and her annual address was read by the secretary, Mrs. Benner. Seven local unions were reported by their presidents. A beautiful silk banner with "Androscoggin W. C. T. U.," in gilt lettering was presented the county by the Auburn union, through its president. Rev. Mr. Bickford, a returned missionary and the son of a white-ribboner, gave a graphic account of the results of the liquor traffic introduced by representatives of nominally Christian countries into heathen lands, with an account of the work being done by our comrades in the World's W. C. T. U. on the other side of the globe. He was especially conversant with Miss Ackermann's work.

Eleven departments were reported through their superintendents. A special committee was chosen, composed of one from each union, to formulate plans for bringing the suffrage question more prominently before the public; also a committee to arrange for more aggressive work in the department of narcotics. On the evening of the first day, Mrs. Stevens spoke on the "Woman's Crusade." As a whole the county conventions have been more extensively reported through the press of the state than in any previous year.

TEMPERANCE ORATORY.

Several widely known temperance workers have been in Maine this season. Mr. Woolley gave addresses in March and early April. Miss Farwell, our state recording secretary, speaks highly of his address at Rockland, and your reporter had the pleasure of hearing him in Auburn, where the central thought was the power of testimony, the power which every Christian man and woman possesses. "Ye shall receive power after that the Holy Ghost is come upon you, and shall testify of me," was the text. Many vexed questions and many doubts as to the expediency of this or that course of action would be set at rest if we always remembered that we are not responsible for making the world go right, but only that our own testimony should be right.

The Lewiston union secured the services of Thomas E. Murphy, (son of Francis Murphy) for a series of meetings. The interest of the churches was enlisted and delegates from each served on the committee of arrangements with Professor Anthony, of Cobb Divinity School, as chairman. Great crowds attended the meetings and out of the many hundreds who signed the pledge it is surely to be hoped that some were permanently benefited. A reception was tendered Mr. and Mrs. Murphy by the union in the Congregational church vestry at the close of the series.

We have also just had one of our own most famous workers, Mrs. Mary Clement Leavitt. Mrs. Leavitt came to Maine on a Friday and went back to Boston one week from that day. During that week she gave nine addresses, seven in Portland and vicinity, one at the Cumberland county convention and one at Auburn. At the last mentioned place she was entertained by Mrs. Stackpole, the wife of the Methodist pastor, who was also Mrs. Leavitt's hostess when they were both in Italy. The Sunday Mrs. Leavitt spent in Maine happened to be very warm, but while every one else was uncomfortable, the weather just suited her and she spoke three times with apparent ease. Her subject at Auburn was the "Ravages of Drink in all Lands."

WOMAN'S CAUSE.

Of course the readers of THE UNION SIGNAL all know that we Maine women are still classed with idiots, paupers and criminals. Every year the legislature assembles, however, the vote rises a little higher in our favor. Indeed, we failed to secure the municipal ballot this year by so narrow a margin that it is almost an exasperation. We had a large majority in the house, which is of course more representative of the people, and a powerful support in the senate. A neat pamphlet has been issued, containing the speeches on our side made in the legislature. There were many good ones, but the one which handled the question from the broadest outlook and in the noblest spirit is, I think, that made by the son of Hannibal Hamlin, of Ellsworth. The time cannot be far distant when Maine women will be accorded what by right belongs to them. Old prejudices are fast melting away, even among the most conservative. Immediately on returning from Augusta last winter, your correspondent, as state press superintendent, sent full accounts of that great suffrage demonstration to two leading church papers, Zion's Advocate (Baptist) and The Christian Mirror (Congregationalist). Both articles (each considerably more than a column in length) were given a place on the editorial pages. This is of course only a straw, but "straws show which way the wind blows." It would hardly have happened fifteen years ago!

NOTES BY THE WAY.

The executive committee of Aroostook county some time since made arrangements to hold summer meetings on a much frequented camp ground.

Our local unions are full of work as ever.

Belfast has come of age, celebrating the event by a social tea for members and their friends, followed by appropriate exercises in the evening. This union conducts a very successful evening school.

As a rule, our work in a town or city is first taken up by the women, who later interest the young people and the children. A short time ago, however, Mrs. Stevens was asked to go to Groveville to form a union, where she was assisted by the Y and the L. T. L., already on the field. Perhaps this pleasant state of things may be due to the fact that Groveville is the home of our efficient state superintendent of Y work, Miss Lubelle Patrick.

ILLINOIS.

"STILL PURSUING."

The president of the Illinois W. C. T. U. and a few other leaders in its work have crossed the Atlantic to take part in the World's W. C. T. U. Convention and enjoy the meetings in prospect on the other side the ocean. This does not mean abandonment of the home field, but rather a well-earned rest and preparation for more aggressive work, for "still pursuing" is the record in the Illinois white ribbon ranks. Occasionally some loiterer falls out by the way, but probably she had never entered the service heartily enough to quicken her temperance blood, and send it tingling through her whole being. Sometimes such "cannot see that anything worth while is being done." They do not subscribe for W. C. T. U. papers, or read W. T. P. A. publications. Prohibition newspapers are not in their homes, and altogether they know but little of the work or the workers, the methods, needs or outlook. How can they have much "zeal according to knowledge"? And is it any wonder that their little spurt of enthusiasm soon vanishes? We confess to having had some such in W. C. T. U. ranks. They have never given enough money, or service, or thought to this "cause that needs assistance," to have any actual, real investment in it.

The typical Illinois W. C. T. U. worker floats not with the current, but bends to the oars against it. Of these I sing to-day.

A few items here and there will illustrate the situation. The call for public speakers and helpers is a good index of the activity in the ranks. Our public speakers and workers have been kept busy. Mrs. Rounds, state president, responded to calls up to date of her departure. Mrs. Grout, vice-president, has given most acceptable service as a public speaker. Miss Downey, state evangelist, has been constantly in the field. Her plan for two conferences a week, with occasionally a longer time than three days, has been fruitful in good results, stimulating to much personal work and house to house canvass. Her dates were all filled early in the year.

Miss Mary Mahon, superintendent of young woman's work, has had it constantly on her heart and in her hands, while the Y girls carry her in their hearts. Many cheering messages from district presidents and superintendents show that each has magnified her office and mission field, until it seems to her to be the all important one. Mrs. Marion Baxter, Miss Clara Parrish and others, have been preaching the W. C. T. U. gospel on Illinois soil.

Representative W. C. T. U. workers have had a place on the programs of state and district prohibition conferences. The Christian citizenship movement of the Y. P. S. C. E. finds friends in our ranks. The McLean county Christian Endeavor convention at LeRoy, June 13 and 14, had some radical temperance workers' names among its speakers. Christian citizenship was one of the topics prominent.

Special interest has been given to scientific temperance instruction in the public schools. Mrs. Hunt's presence in the state, early in the year, was an inspiration. The state superintendent has had several valuable helpers, who are ready to respond to any calls for work. Many unions have shown their interest by giving receptions to the teachers and boards of education. A notably pleasant occasion was one of these, given by the Central W. C. T. U., of Bloomington, in one of the elegant homes of the city. Written invitations were sent to all the teachers and public school officials, the pastors and their wives, and representatives of the press, besides a general invitation extended to friends of the public schools and of W. C. T. U. work. There was a most hearty response, although the evening was very warm. At least two hundred and fifty were present. The teachers were designated by a long-stemmed pink carnation, pinned upon each by two young misses appointed for that service. Music, a recitation, and short address by Rev. Dr. Richard Edwards, formerly president Illinois Normal University, made a nice program, which was supplemented by the distribution of the special scientific temperance instruction number of the Watch-Tower to each teacher. Ice-cream, fruit and cake were freely served. Dr. Edwards is an honorary member of the Central union, and gladly "lends a hand" occasionally.

Similar receptions have been given to teachers by other unions. The anti-cigarette movement has met a hearty response. Bloomington has a list of several hundred names of boys that say by their pledge, "The cigarette must go."

The Joliet union issues The White Ribboner, quarterly, devoted to the interests of the local W. C. T. U. It is edited by Mrs. Ferriss, the president. The Lockport Y has the White Ribbon Journal, edited by one of its honoraries, with able assistants. This Y is said to be the social life of that little town. It holds meetings regularly in their own hall, and monthly union gospel meetings. Two of their members have been elected school trustees; and this leads me to record the fact that Illinois W. C. T. U. women are having a part in school affairs generally. A member of the Central W. C. T. U. of Bloomington was elected member of the board of education last spring, and fills an important place on several committees of the board. The women's vote in Bloomington last spring numbered 1,352.

Mrs. Lucie B. Tyng, the beloved, has been appointed inspector of the Peoria schools. She is the only woman on the board. Many others in different parts of the state have been honored by election as members of school boards. There is increasing interest in the suffrage question. It is not unusual in this commencement month to hear radical views set forth on this topic in graduation essays and orations.

Hudson union held a woman suffrage contest recently which was both novel and interesting. Seven ladies of the W. C. T. U. who contested for the prize were able to set forth some strong arguments. The prize was awarded to Miss Marie Starkey, by the vote of the audience that acted as judges.

Many unions have local habitations. The Geneseo Y has headquarters now on a prominent street. Galva Y has increased from forty last year to seventy-five now. The Allamont Y of Effingham county, has grown from twenty-five to seventy-five members. It joined with the W. C. T. U. in calling Miss Downey there for a three days' evangelistic conference. They gave a reception in her honor; also gave a reception to the teachers at the close of the public schools. The Nebraska sufferers were helped by them. Much good work is reported of these unions. ship has increased the number of the saloons has decreased from six to four, and there is hope of further falling off.

The Band of Hope work has been a specialty in Effingham county. The annual Band of Hope county rallies with contests and prizes, have become an established order of things which are looked forward to with interest. The best Junior oration wins a fine Bagster Bible this year. The best by the Seniors (ages sixteen to twenty) takes a scholarship in Austin College. The topic assigned is along the line of prohibition. The Band of Hope children in this county have been zealous in securing total abstinence pledges.

Ridgeway union, organized not long ago, adopted a novel plan to help the National Temperance Hospital. It held an "egg social." The price of admission was a dozen eggs or ten cents. The results were twenty-nine dozen eggs and $2.70 in cash, besides an enjoyable social time.

This is especially flower mission month, and the fragrant little messengers have been speeding on their way to hospitals and almshouses, to the sick, weary, and sometimes sinful ones, overcome in life's battles and fallen by the way. Aurora Y reports its flower mission work as sometimes spelled "f-l-o-w-e-r" mission. Ofttimes the spelling is more unique than that, but sad and lonely hearts can decipher and interpret any kind of orthography.

The Normal Y and Epworth League have been holding services the past year at the county farm, where there are one hundred and ten inmates. They were remembered on flower mission day.

I have made more mention of young women's work in this letter than of the older unions, but the old lines are not being abandoned. Cottage and mothers' meetings have a special hold on the hearts of the workers, as fruitful in results. The hopeful outlook is in the direction of the young. Old gnarled specimens of humanity that prejudice has warped and twisted and kept in ignorance, as a rule, will be unsightly till they fall with age, and give place to better things. An "enthusiasm for humanity" is ushering in a better day.

For this we work, for this we pray.

News in a Nutshell.

LICKING, Mo., is happy in the recent organization there by Miss Carrie Lee Carter, National Y organizer, of a Y of eight active and two honorary members.

MRS. O. P. LIGHT, treasurer of Oklahoma Territory W. C. T. U., having resigned on account of failing health, Mrs. S. J. Mitchell, of Enid, has been appointed to the position.

Y WORK in Virginia has received a fresh impetus through the recent visit of Miss Frances H. Ensign, who spent two weeks in May organizing new and strengthening old unions. The week in Loudoun county resulted in promising Y unions at Lovettsville and Waterford. New Y. W. C. T. Unions are also reported by her, at Herndon and Trevilian.

THAT was a blessed inspiration which led the Rhode Island W. C. T. U. to send from the headquarters a call to all its co-workers as follows: "In consideration of the great meetings to be held in London, England, June 18 to 21, the need of special grace and guidance for our leaders, and a fresh baptism of the Holy Spirit on our great membership, we shall hold an hour's service, from twelve to one, p. m., on these dates, to which all will be cordially welcomed." The power of prayer is perhaps rarely estimated truly, but God honors "mustard seed faith," doing exceeding abundantly above what is asked or thought.

THE following officers were elected at the twenty-first annual convention of the Wisconsin W. C. T. U.: President, Mrs. Vie H. Campbell, Evansville; corresponding secretary, Mrs. Fannie K. Earle, Lake Mills; recording secretary, Mrs. Augusta E. Strong, Baraboo; treasurer, Mrs. Ida M. Cooke, Green Bay. Mrs. Maud F. Hanchett, former corresponding secretary, resigned that work but is still editor of The Motor, the state organ.

Cor. Secy's Notes.

It is sometimes a question with us as to whether or not the absurd newspaper stories, which seem to become current concerning every reform and reformer, are worth answering. Nevertheless, when one so manifestly prompted by malice, and so calculated to do injury to our cause as the statement that Miss Willard received a gift of twenty thousand dollars from the W. C. T. U. on her last birthday arises, it becomes, in a sense, our duty to contradict it. Surely no member of the W. C. T. U. need be told that this is false. We are not so abundantly blessed with wealth as to make gifts of that magnitude possible, however much we might desire to shower them upon our great leader, but, even if such a thing had been possible, Miss Willard herself would not have accepted it. Her own record through the long years she has occupied this position proves how much she has given both of money and personal force, compared with what she has received. I trust the readers of this column will take pains to contradict this report.

Alas, that at this late date I should be obliged to chronicle another error in the Annual Leaflet, but such is the case, and I fear I shall never again pride myself upon accuracy in proofreading. In some inexplicable way the address of the National superintendent of purity, Dr. Mary Wood Allen, got into that same leaflet in two different ways. Great as is Dr. Allen in her department, and her work has proven her greatness, she does not fill two cities, but her residence is 37 South Thayer street, Ann Arbor, Mich., as given on page 28 of the leaflet, and not 37 South Thayer street, Kalamazoo, Mich., as given on page 39. Please bear this in mind, and do not occasion Dr. Allen unnecessary inconvenience, because of such a blunder. By the way, in speaking of Dr. Allen as a superintendent, those of you who do not see her little paper, The Mother's Friend, are missing a great deal. It is invaluable to mothers everywhere, and I wish it might be placed in the hands of each young wife and mother the country over. Its treatment of the subjects which form so large a part of a woman's life, in making the home, and the training of children, is both strong and delicate. In fact, it is just such a paper as you would expect the author of "Teaching Truth" to send out. Write to Dr. Allen, at Ann Arbor, Mich., and ask for a sample copy.

Several letters have come to me quite recently without signatures. They contain most excellent suggestions, but from the very fact of their being unsigned, they bar themselves out from answer or attention. Please let it be understood that any one wishing to reach the ear of the National corresponding secretary, either with suggestion, encouragement, or complaint, must sign his or her name. An anonymous letter cannot be other than cowardly, and deserves absolutely no attention. Therefore, I wish to state, once for all, that any such document received here finds its way to the wastebasket, and is never again thought of.

If we had no other proof of the wonderful way in which our cause is advancing, and the hold it is taking upon popular thought, the fact of the voluminous space accorded by our daily papers to reports of the great London convention would be sufficient. Two columns of Associated Press matter have been filled in nearly all the Chicago leading dailies for several days past. Editorials have appeared in the Times-Herald, Inter Ocean and Tribune, and I doubt not that what is true of Chicago is equally true of other cities. Surely this is a very encouraging sign, and we should interpret the willingness with which the press receives our matter as an indication of better days coming. Let it also serve as a lesson to us concerning the importance of sending out press dispatches. If the papers are so willing to publish everything new and fresh, it is surely our fault if they are not furnished with sufficient matter to keep our cause constantly before the public.

The programs of the summer meetings, which are directly under National control, are nearing completion and will very soon appear in these columns. The meeting at Mountain Lake Park in particular, will be of an unusually interesting character. Miss Palmer will give talks on temperance work in South Africa, and we have just secured the services of Mr. S. C. K. Rutnam, who has been so earnestly and efficiently aiding Dr. Bushnell and Mrs. Andrew in their work in India. It has long been my thought that the National union ought to adopt the department of missionary work. In no other way can we realize our relation to the work of the World's union, as a whole, and I hope the putting forward of two great fields of our foreign work will help the establishment of this department. We realize that in going to Mountain Lake Park we are not entering new territory, since the Interstate School of Methods, under the leadership of the former corresponding secretary, Mrs. Buell, has done such excellent work there for years. The fact that our work is so well known there ought to insure its further putting forward and a cordial welcome. We are assured that both await us at Mountain Lake Park and we hope the white-ribboners of that entire region will rally to this summer gathering. Mrs. Stevens is to be present, and jointly with myself have charge of the meeting. I am hoping also that the bright little woman, Mrs. Frances E. Beauchamp, whom Mr. Woolley calls the Phil Sheridan of the W. C. T. U., will be with us. Mrs. Benjamin, Alice Palmer, Mr. Woolley and Mr. Rutnam are to be the workers from abroad, while many of the Washington white-ribboners, and others near by, including the presidents of Maryland and West Virginia, are to have prominent places upon the program.

Bay View will also present a most attractive program, and I am hoping the Michigan white-ribboners will make a special effort to be there, if they can do so without interfering with other duties. The program of this meeting will probably appear in next week's UNION SIGNAL; therefore, I need not speak of it further now. It is more and more a hopeful feature to see how these summer meetings are making room upon their programs for our W. C. T. U. schools of methods. Let us enter every such open door, and enter it with most practical methods of work, and we shall surely see a large increase of membership and a great building up of true sentiment, by means of our summer meetings.

PARLOR MEETINGS.

DEAR SUPERINTENDENTS:—Having partially recovered from my long and serious illness, I desire to send you a greeting, and wish you Godspeed in your work. I have sent blanks to each one of the state superintendents, to send out to district, county and local unions, which will be filled out by the locals and forwarded to the county or district superintendent, and they are expected to send to the state superintendent. Perhaps it would be wise for the state and county superintendent to insert her name in place of mine on the blank, as the state superintendent should receive them and make her report to me. As the National Convention will meet earlier than usual this year, please be prompt in reporting. I have just completed the Monthly Reading for August, and while you may not learn anything new, the mind may be refreshed by reading the leaflet, which can be procured from the W. T. P. A., The Temple, Chicago.

Yours for a successful year,

OBITUARY.

[Obituary notices of five lines or less are published free. Longer notices will be inserted at the rate of ten cents per line.]

SARAH W. CONGDON, a charter member of La Grange, Dutchess county, N. Y., union, died at her home in Arthursburgh, May 7th, aged seventy-four years. She was a faithful, conscientious worker and felt deeply her responsibility in temperance and all other Christian work.

MRS. MARY H. DUNN, of Bay City, formerly of Williamsville, N. Y., while visiting her daughter, Mrs. F. N. Ely, of Olivet, Mich., passed away suddenly, May 22, 1895, aged seventy-four years. Her remains were taken to Buffalo, N. Y., for interment.

MRS. P. S. HOOPER, of Lykens, Pa., an enthusiastic and capable worker in the ranks of the W. C. T. U. for nearly twenty years, was called up higher May 31. The white-ribboners of Phœnixville, where she labored so successfully for ten years, lined her grave with white muslin and bordered it with flowers.

Sanderson, Provincial president of Quebec, is senior member) are represented.

Upon the list of tourists are some familiar names. Rev. Dr. Newton Hillis of Chicago, the brilliant successor of Prof. David Swing in the Central church pastorate is, with others, taking Dr. Lunn's tour for needed recuperation. Illness on shipboard has unfortunately prevented his taking part in the many literary and social affairs that have been planned. Rev. Fields, of Kentucky, is going to join his wife, Mrs. Addie Northam Fields, who has been in England six months assisting in the organization of Loyal Temperance Legions. There are Mrs. Elizabeth Boynton Harbert, from Evanston, of Woman's Club fame and a white-ribboner, accompanied by husband and family; Dr. Parks, of Colorado, who made a forcible speech for woman suffrage, and various press representatives. Besides our National officers, Mrs. Hoffman and Mrs. Barker, who have been in great demand on all sides, are Mrs. E. B. Ingalls, of St. Louis, National superintendent of narcotics; our W. T. P. A. business manager, Mrs. Grow; Mrs. S. M. Perkins, of Cleveland, who never fails to put in a word for suffrage, and fraternal delegates from the Friends, Miss Willetts, of New York, Mrs. Wright, of New Jersey, and Mrs. Minard, of Canada. Miss Helen Potter, the noted elocutionist, who is a delegate from Massachusetts, has greatly contributed to the two evenings' entertainments by her wonderful talent.

All good things must come to an end, and this delightful ocean trip introduction to the pilgrimage is nearly ended. It is expected that the able and courteous Dr. Lunn, projector of the expedition, will meet the company in person at Southampton. Then the white-ribbon pilgrims from America will "discover England," and go up and possess the greatest city on the globe.

ANCHORAGE IN NEED OF FUNDS.

DEAR UNION SIGNAL:—A good anchorage, where the flukes of the anchor take deep and strong hold, is hailed with joy by every mariner. Such is the Florence Crittenton Anchorage located at 1408 Wabash avenue, Chicago, formerly at 125 Plymouth place. This mission is under the auspices of the Chicago Central W. C. T. U., but depends upon the public for its support. For eight years the doors of the mission have been open day and night to any girl or woman in trouble, and thousands have found a safe home there and have been enabled to start out again with fresh courage. From a little reading-room on Custom House place, where girls were invited in for an hour's rest and for counsel and advice, but were compelled to go back to their old life again because there was no home provided for them, it has grown to be one of the recognized institutions of the city. Its work is to visit the slums, station-houses and hospitals, rescuing women and girls, taking them off the streets and caring for them until situations or homes can be provided for them. Hundreds have gone out from this mission who are now earning an honorable living, while many others have been sent to their own homes and have been restored to their friends and parents. There is no place in the city so low or vile but what the workers of the mission will go if there is a call for help.

The money paid into the mission goes directly to the work. There are no hired workers and no salaries except to the matron and cook. The girls are expected to assist in the housework, and as a usual thing they do so most cheerfully. The daily average of the family is from fifteen to twenty-five. The cost of operating the mission is $200 per month, the rent being $65. There is no endowment, and all this must be met by a few women who go about the city soliciting, without receiving pay for their services. For eight years it has rescued women, helped innocent and friendless girls and cared for young mothers and their babies. Last year 242 different young women and girls found help and situations, and 2,000 lodgings were given.

Who will pay the rent of this mission for one year, while it is so hard to raise money? Much has been said lately concerning the reports of the visitors to the slums and dives of our city, but what practical work has been done? The mission is the place that will care for all such who seem to arouse the sympathy of the visitors. The mission is in need of many things to make it an attractive home: carpets, bedding, furniture and especially money. Ten cents from each white ribbon reader of these lines would support the mission for one year.

Please send money to:

Mrs. M. E. Kline, treasurer, at the Woman's Temple, Chicago, or,

Miss Alice Bond, chairman, 404 Lee street, South Evanston, Ill.

A PROHIBITION APPEAL.

EDITOR UNION SIGNAL:—As you are doubtless aware, the constitutional convention rejected the proposition to submit the prohibition question to the legal voters of Utah. The reasons for this action need not be discussed here. The friends of constitutional prohibition are temporarily cast down, but not discouraged. The proposed constitution provides for full suffrage for women; we believe that this is the last nail in the coffin of the liquor traffic. An enthusiastic Prohibition convention has just been held in this city, and an organization effected, under the name of "The Prohibition League of Utah." We will undertake to do the work and pay our own expenses, if the friends of prohibition outside of Utah will furnish us the literature or the means to secure the proper literature for the education of the people. Will not the friends of prohibition throughout the country, who can afford to do so, help to raise a fund of two hundred dollars for this purpose?

The prohibition workers of Utah do not wish to be classed as mendicants, but in our great financial need we make this earnest appeal in the interests of the cause we represent, and assure all contributors that every dollar will be faithfully applied to the accomplishment of constitutional prohibition in Utah.

CRUSADE CHURCH SOUVENIRS.

DEAR UNION SIGHAL:—We take this method of calling your attention to the fact that the Crusade church, at Hillsboro, Ohio, is a thing of the past. It is being replaced with a new church building. Knowing that a great many calls will be made for souvenirs of this historic church, this committee is prepared to furnish the same to those who may desire them.

The committee have four designs of souvenirs, as follows:

A cabinet souvenir, made in the shape of a book, the covers being made from the wood of the old church; inside will be found a condensed history of the Crusade, with photographs of Mrs. E. J. Thompson, leader, and Mrs. Gen. J. J. McDowell, vice-president of the Crusade, and Rev. W. J. McSurely, pastor of the church; also a photograph of the old church building. Price, $1.

Gavels made from two kinds of wood from the old church, with sterling silver plate inscription, "Crusade Church, Hillsboro, Ohio, December 23, 1873." Price, $1.

Canes made of cherry or walnut (limited number) from the old church, with sterling silver plate, the same as on the gavel. Price $2.50.

Cabinet photographs of the old church building. Price 50 cts.

Any of the above souvenirs will be sent prepaid upon receipt of an order accompanied by the money.

Yours respectfully,
W. A. HARMAN, Sec.

Mrs. Paull's admirable stories have had frequent favorable mention in these columns, and the present one shows no lack in sweetness and power. SOCIAL GROWTH AND STABILITY. By D. Ostrander, author of "The Law of Fire Insurance."

This is a book of fine philosophies, though not too fine for daily application. In a series of brief, pithy paragraphs—for the divisions of his subject are too short to be termed chapters—the author studies the underlying causes which have led up to present paradoxical conditions of poverty and wealth, following up these chapters with others on such themes as "The Duty of the Hour," "The Building of a State," "Character as a Social Factor," "Christianity as a Social Factor," "The Philosophy of Intuition," etc.

GOD AND THE ANT. That endowed writer, Mr. Coulson Kernahan, author of "A Book of Strange Sins," "A Dead Man's Diary," and other remarkably well-woven pieces of literary work, has just brought out under this novel title a justification of "the ways of God to men." Mr. Coulson Kernahan's nature is deeply religious, but he has felt the touch of the world's spirit modifying the dogmas in which he was born and bred. Yet he holds to the divine revelation in that large and helpful sense, which, if it could become general—as we believe it will—would win the world back in love and loyalty to Him Who said, "If I be lifted up I will draw all men unto me." The motif of the book is found in a single one of its sentences:

"Can the ant creep up into the brain of man to see man's world as man sees it? Yet has man, whose whole world is in the eyes of God but as one ant in a universe, thought to creep into God's brain, to see as He sees, to think as He thinks, and to judge the Omnipotent One by man's little laws?"

We wish that in these days, when the decadent has flourished and the pessimist has been a burden, this noble study of the deepest problems might pass from the bookstalls into the hands of those tender and thoughtful men and women whose daily steps keep time to the rhythm of a wistful, and yet a halting faith.

Here and There.

An exchange says that when a man is worried about the money market, his wife is apt to be worried about the market money.

After her mother had examined Frankie's tongue and said, "There is a little coat on it," Flora wanted her to "look and see if there wasn't a little jacket on her tongue."

The silent watches of the night—those that are run down.

We invite the attention of our readers to the publishing house of S. C. Griggs & Co., who are now advertising regularly in The Union Signal. This is one of the oldest publishing houses in Chicago, and the class of books they publish has given it a high character among the publishing houses of America.

The best puns are unintentional. Thus Mr. Perry was walking about his garden in company with his brother from the city.

"You raise an enormous lot of tomatoes, John!" said the city dweller. "What in the world do you do with them?"

"Why," said Mr. Perry, "we eat as many as we can, and what we can't eat we can."

The wearer of a disreputable-looking pair of patent-leather shoes remarked that they were all right originally, but the patent had expired on them.

Gov. Wm. McKinley will deliver the annual address before the members of the Grand Army of the Republic at Chautauqua, August 24th, and on August 10th Gen. J. B. Gordon will give his famous lecture on "The Last Days of the Confederacy."

A considerable measure of fatalism is a great help to a soldier. If what is to be will be, why be afraid of anything?

A southern soldier describes a man in his company, "a little Dutch Jew," as the "very incarnation of cool, impudent bravado in a fight." A consistent fatalist, he summed up his faith in one sentence—"You'll never die till your time comes."

"One day he saw me dodging a spent minie that came whistling uncomfortably near.

"'Hey, Dock!" he sang out in his piping voice, 'vat's te use to todge tem pullets? Tey'll hit you shust as vell vere you is as vere you aint.'"

THE NEW ENGLAND CONSERVATORY.

Few educational institutions are so widely and favorably known as the New England Conservatory of Music in Boston. In the midst of such times as these its strength and prestige are shown by a patronage which fills the home and educational departments to overflowing. It is manifestly evident that the American people have found that the best is none too good for them, and also that the best is the cheapest in the end. To those desiring the highest and most complete musical training this institution offers inducements second to none in the world. It has departments of Elocution and Art as well as Music, each being complete in itself, and placed under the personal supervision of a principal and corps of instructors.

Here is a gem of literary composition from a recent historical novel: "The gaslamps, not having been invented at that time, rendered the streets of the city still darker!"

Think twice before you speak, my son: and it will do no harm if you keep on thinking while you speak.

With tyrotoxicon in cream,
Trichinæ in the meat,
And microbes in the atmosphere,
What shall we breathe or eat?

If you are Tired

Use Horsford's Acid Phosphate.

Dr. W. B. Carpenter, Columbus, O., says: "It is excellent as a tonic and invigorator."

He talks 'bout "sparrow-grass," mamma,

Home Hints.

HOT WEATHER DISHES.

Hot weather dishes are most eagerly sought for by the thrifty housekeeper during July and August, so we will endeavor to give every week in this column at least one recipe from a reliable cook. No recipe in this department will ever be copied from a cook book unless it has been tried and indorsed by a practical cook. The Union Signal readers who have recipes which are particularly good and for which they are willing to stake their reputation in the culinary line, are requested to send them, with very plain directions. for publication in this column.

LEMON JELLY.

One-half box Cox's gelatine, soaked one hour in cold water, 1 coffee cup sugar, and 1 quart water, heated (not boiled) together sufficiently to dissolve the gelatine. When partly cooled add the juice of three lemons and pour into a mould.

This may be eaten with cream, but many prefer a delicate

CUSTARD.

One pint milk, 4 eggs, yolk, 3 tablespoons sugar; cooked in double kettle until it thickens to consistency of cream.

Domestic pets should be excluded from rooms where there are infectious or contagious diseases, as they have been known to spread disease when allowed to roam through the rooms and neighborhood.

A little frame has been devised on which to stretch and dry fine lace or linen handkerchiefs, or the pretty bits of drawn work and art pieces used on the table. It is eighteen or twenty inches square, consisting of four strips of light wood about three-fourths of an inch wide and a quarter inch thick. These bars have numerous holes in which to put the pegs which hold the frame together when adjusted to the size of the article. In fact, it is the old-fashioned quilting frame reduced to smaller uses. Either wind the frame with strips of muslin or fasten tape along the edge; to this carefully pin the piece to be dried.

Do not be continually annoyed by the drying out and falling to pieces of the wooden tubs and pails, but get in their places the light and serviceable paper ones. A dish tub is also a durable piece in the paper fiber.

The hollow glass rolling pin, which can be filled with cracked ice, is an indispensable article for the housewife who prides herself on her fine puff paste.

Replace, as rapidly as possible, the heavy iron kettles, pots and frying pans with the smooth surface granite, agate or porcelain-lined ware, which is so serviceable and so easily washed.

To make the white of eggs beat quickly to a stiff froth, add the least little pinch of salt and set in a cool place for some time before beating.

Sweet cream poured over chopped ham makes very nice sandwiches when they are to be eaten soon after they are made.

In these days when so many busy workers prefer light housekeeping to boarding, many a woman hates the washing of even the few pretty bits of silver, glass and china, because of the effect on the hands. Five cents will buy a soft string mop, which does away with the necessity of soaking the hands in the hot suds. A heavier twine mop is also made for the tins and other kitchen things.

Surely the Quaker landlady of New York city who refuses to keep a boarder for a term of more than two years, has struck the keynote of wisdom as well as success in her line. Her method may be the means of founding many a happy home. This lady maintains that "the Lord made men and women for homes" and that boarding is an unnatural mode of life, in which, under even the most favorable surroundings, no one can for a great length of time be content. She places the limit at two years, and all who enter her homelike place understand that at the end of that time they must seek some other place. After a year's absence they can return, but on the same terms as before. She says, "I aim to send my flock out before they reach the point of incurable nausea, and keep them out till they learn that to change the place is but to keep the pain, when I take them back and do the best I can to help them bear the miseries of the lot they voluntarily choose, or compulsorily accept, for themselves."

Makes hard water soft—Pearline. Every woman knows just what that means to her. Washing in hard water is so difficult, and the results so poor! Pearline reduces the labor, whether you use soft water or hard. But use Pearline, and it's just as easy to wash with hard water as with soft water—and the results are just as good. Pearline saves more things than your labor, though. We'll tell you of these savings from time to time. Keep your eye on Pearline "ads."

Send it Back Peddlers and some unscrupulous grocers will tell you "this is as good as" or "the same as Pearline." IT'S FALSE—Pearline is never peddled, and if your grocer sends you something in place of Pearline, be honest—send it back. 444 JAMES PYLE, New York.

Publisher's Notes

CONCERNING "HELPS."

A "Special Offer" will be found on page 1 of this issue, to which we desire to refer our readers, an offer which is intended to be mutually helpful to unions and to the great temperance publishing enterprise. We shall expect to have orders coming in fast during the month of July.

We hope no white-ribbon Sunday-school worker has neglected to arrange for the use of the June Crusader Supplement in her Sabbath-school, or at least in her class. The Quarterly Temperance Lesson, which we publish in this form, is intended to be used on "Review Sunday"—June 30. But in case any of our temperance Sunday-school teachers for any reason find it impracticable to present it at that time we desire to say that the lesson can be very profitably studied in connection with the regular Sunday-school lesson of July 21, which treats of Nadab and Abihu.

"Fifty cents! How can you afford to sell it so cheaply?"

This from persons who look over "Thumb Nail Sketches" is a frequent question. And indeed, they may well ask it! The forty splendid cuts are themselves worth the price of the book, and we feel sure there isn't a white-ribboner in this or any other country who wouldn't want a copy if she once saw it. The dollar edition in the popular buckram binding, is a dainty and attractive ornament for any parlor table. What a fitting and graceful gift this little volume would be from a local union to its president or its press superintendent!

In view of the fact that July and August are the vacation months of young women and often a season of abated activity on the part of Y unions, and as it is chiefly to the Y's we must look for the exploiting of their National organ, it has been thought wise to defer the Responsive Reading on "the young woman's paper" until later. In its place we publish an important and timely reading on "Penal and Reformatory Work," by Mrs. Jane M. Kinney, National superintendent. This is a department concerning which unions are seeking information, and they will doubtless be alert to utilize the help furnished by Mrs. Kinney's able presentation of a work which, wherever undertaken, is so strikingly prolific of good results.

We would call the special attention of UNION SIGNAL readers to the standing notice concerning this paper on the fourth column of this page. Will they please read and thoroughly digest the items of information therein contained? And, further, we would again remind our women that if they would prevent delay in the mailing of supplies they should send all orders for publications—whether books, leaflets or papers—to the W. T. P. A., not to the editors.

Three valuable additions have lately been made to the literature of the franchise department. 1. National Leaflet, "Is the W. C. T. U. Worthy of Citizenship?" is Mrs. Margaret Platt's splendid address before the great Petition meeting in Washington. 2. Department Leaflet, "Suffrage for Women," extracts from a powerful speech by Rev. H. M. Dean, before the woman suffrage committee of the Massachusetts legislature. 3. Department Leaflet, "Woman Suffrage and the W. C. T. U.," by Mrs. Isabella Webb Parks, a reply to the criticisms of many of our friends, especially our southern friends, upon the attitude of the W. C. T. U. toward the vexed question of woman's ballot.

WEALTH AND WASTE: The Principles of Political Economy in Their Application to the Present Problems of Labor, Law and the Liquor Traffic. By Alphonso A. Hopkins, Ph. D.

In the above volume the author seeks to apply the accepted principles of Political Economy, as to Production and Wealth, Consumption and Waste, without violence to the logic of accepted economists or to the politics of confessed partisans, while insisting that both economists and partisans shall admit the logic which they can not refute. The ablest economists are quoted from, as to definition and statement with regard to economic principles, and their own propositions are projected, along their own logical lines, against the Liquor Traffic as a foe to Labor, a parasite upon legitimate industries, and an element in the state which all the teachings of Political Economy demand shall be eliminated.

Published by Funk & Wagnalls Co., 30 Lafayette Place, New York. Price $1.00.

THE CHRISTIAN STATE: A POLITICAL VISION OF CHRIST. By George D. Herron. Here is a compact little volume containing a course of six lectures delivered in churches in various American cities, by a man who is bearing "for righteousness' sake" the brunt of stinging criticisms and harsh rebukes,—the common pay of him who is brave enough to proclaim God's larger truths though their proclamation crush man's puny fabrications. The author, anticipating somewhat the reception of the message he is about to deliver, says in his opening discourse on "The Political Appearing of Christ,"—"Where there is no faith in Christ as immanent in the life of the world and guiding in the social movement, no faith in Him as the living and reigning ruler of the nations, my words will be foolishness or an offense. There will also be sincere Christian minds, devoted and aspiring Christian hearts, who will not believe my report because unaccustomed to think of Christ in the terms which I shall use, or to conceive of Him in the relations in which I shall set Him forth. Although my words may have no more than an inspirational value, while I shall often speak with sorrow and reluctance, only after long waiting and under the profound sense of a divine compulsion, it is yet with great joy and large hope that I thus confess my political faith in Christ, believing that I appeal to a like faith in many who are looking for the redemption of our nation and a juster civilization." The thought that accepts Christ only as a Saviour of individuals is as petty as that which in ancient days would have crowned Him "King of the Jews" with a perishable crown of gold. What says the prophet? "Many nations shall be joined to the Lord in that day, and shall be my people." A nation "joined to the Lord" means a nation pardoned and cleansed and crowning Christ as King in all its national life. Sacrifice, a brother's weal and a brother's woe and love, the fulfilling of the law, are corner-stones in the compact building of Dr. Herron's reasoning, and he has not become so bewildered in the mazes of "advanced thought" as to forget certain crises in an old Gospel history nor failed to link them mightily with the issues of to-day. As witness to this, the following trenchant paragraph: "The associating and organizing power of the law of sacrifice was revealed through the reception of the Spirit by the first Christian community. After their Lord had been taken from them, and they were of one accord in the purpose to do whatever his Holy Spirit might reveal, there came upon a little company of those who believed in Christ,—one hundred and twenty men and women,—a profound immersion in His Holy Spirit, so that their unholy spirit, with its unsocial, selfish and individualistic desires, was driven out of them, and no man called anything his own, but offered himself and his all upon the altar of an entire devotion to human need. This was the beginning of the ultimate civilization—the society that is becoming . . ."

The notice of this book is timely because of the recent stir caused by Dr. Herron's fearless words spoken in San Francisco Bay, Cal. But arrayed against all words of criticism is the testimony of a band of leading California pastors, men and women of public fame, the wisest and best voices of the press, and the unflinching, self-sustaining truths uttered by the man himself.

Signal Notes.

Nebraska has fourteen women superintendents of public instruction.

Great Britain built thirty-one warships last year, while only twenty-seven were launched in all the countries of the world.

The employment of women as letter carriers at Temeswar, Hungary, has given such satisfaction that other Hungarian towns will adopt the system.

The Anti-Cigarette League has been established in all of the ninety-five grammar schools of New York city. The league now numbers forty thousand public school boys.

The Hampton Normal Institute has just entered on the twenty-eighth year of its history with one thousand Indian and negro boys and girls in attendance under the care and instruction of fifty teachers.

The Working Girls' Vacation Society, of New York city, now owns nine homes. The latest is a gift from George E. Dodge, of that city, a commodious house at Santa Clara, in the Adirondacks, which is now ready for the accommodation of fourteen guests.

Mr. E. A. Whitwam, a professor in the Temperance University at Harriman, Tenn., is the authorized field agent in the states of Michigan and Illinois, for the Mary T. Lathrap chapel of that university. Mr. Whitwam's address during the summer will be Benton Harbor, Mich.

The young men's column writer of the London Christian Commonwealth, after experience in a criminal court, testifies that "drink is far and away the chief of the many causes of crime." He recommends any one in search of arguments for total abstinence to visit the Old Bailey.

The chief of Chicago police reports that 2,277 men have been employed to guard the 186 square miles of city territory during the past year; crime has decreased, 88,323 arrests having been made in 1894, compared with 96,976 in 1893. The great strike of last summer caused an increased expenditure in the department of $124,000. Fines aggregating $452,340 have been imposed.

Hon. George S. Hale, of the Boston Bar, in his address before the American Peace Society, shows in a forceful way what might be saved to the constructive forces of society were less expended for the destructive and defensive. The total cost of three of our war vessels is $9,210,000, while the Boston public library has cost to May 21, 1895, $2,491,820.86.

The lectures, addresses and writings of John G. Woolley are to be issued in convenient form for general distribution by a committee of Christian men. This will place them within the reach of all who are unable to attend the conventions and assemblies where he speaks. Address "Christian Citizenship Literature," 294 Washington St., Boston, Mass.

Judge Kimball, of the Washington (D. C.) police court, in a recent temperance address made this statement: For the year 1894 the government issued 228,000 liquor licenses, which is a saloon for each 298 people. The estimated annual consumption of intoxicating liquor in the United States is per capita four gallons of whisky, one gallon of wine and forty-six gallons of beer.

The Independent Order of Good Templars will hold a meeting of the international supreme lodge in Boston, June 26 to July 3. About eight hundred thousand members now stand firm for the principles of unqualified total abstinence. Two hundred thousand children and young people are also growing up in this society without a knowledge of the taste of alcohol.

That the sentiment of opposition to the use of intoxicants by employés is a growing one with large corporations, is again evidenced by the order lately reissued by the Chicago and Alton railroad company. In brief it is this: "Any conductor, trainman, engineer, fireman, switchman or other employé, who is known to use intoxicating liquors or frequent gambling or other places of low resort, either while on or off duty, will be promptly and permanently discharged from the service of this company."

SINCE OUR LAST ISSUE.

San Francisco suffered from a million dollar fire, June 27.

Admiral da Gama, the Brazilian rebel, has committed suicide.

The fifth meeting of the international railway congress convened in London the first week in July.

Governor Altgeld of Illinois has signed the bill closing the barber shops of the state on Sunday.

The Marquis of Salisbury, England's new Premier, has completed the work of forming a new cabinet.

The college students' conference opened at Northfield, Mass., June 28, Rev. Dwight L. Moody presiding.

The United States government is defeated in its suit for $15,000,000 from the estate of the late Leland Stanford.

The Epworth League met in annual convention in Chattanooga, Tenn., last week with 12,000 delegates in attendance.

The World's Fair diplomas for the foreign commissioners, fifty-eight in number, were distributed last week from the state department at Washington.

Dr. D. K. Pearsons, of Chicago, gave last week fifty thousand dollars to Berea College, Kentucky, on condition that one hundred and fifty thousand additional be raised

A CABLEGRAM from Grindelwald, dated June 28, announces our party all in the best of health and in the enjoyment of a charming time. July 4th will be spent by one contingent in Rome, by the second, in Paris, and by the third and the largest in the neighborhood of Mont Blanc. We wonder if any stray American fire-crackers will be heard in those mountain fastnesses!

TEMPLE gifts are no longer like angels' visits, "few and far between," for in addition to the three large donations mentioned last week, we have the pleasure of recording an additional thousand dollars by Mr. Charles T. Hutchinson, president of the corn exchange bank of Chicago, and five thousand dollars by Miss Helen Culver, a large real estate owner and a large-minded, great-hearted "woman's woman" of the electric city. Let the good work go on!

FROM a private letter written by Mrs. Helen M. Barker, from London, June 18, we excerpt this amusing account of the landing of our party, and their custom-house experience: "Such a time with baggage! There is no checking system here. Each one plants herself either on or by her trunk, and waits until the custom house officers have opened each trunk, looked it over and convinced themselves that it contains no liquor nor cigars, which are the only dutiable articles from America. An officer asked me as my trunk was lifted to the platform, 'Is this your trunk?' 'Yes.' 'Have you any other baggage?' 'No.' 'Have you anything subject to duty; liquor or cigars?' I showed him my white ribbon, and said, 'Do I look like that?' Then I added, 'I am a temperance delegate. No, sir; I have no liquor nor cigars.' He smiled and stuck a yellow ticket on my shawl-strap, and I marched out in as dignified a manner as I could."

THROUGH an inadvertence which we greatly regret, the sudden demise, June 14, of Dr. A. A. Miner, of Boston, has not been noticed in these columns. Dr. Miner stood so staunchly and eloquently by the W. C. T. U. that the expression of our loss in the sudden taking away of such a friend and advocate is truly beyond the power of words. How many white-ribboners will remember his majestic presence and powerful plea for prohibition at the Boston banquet given at the close of the World's and National Convention in 1891. Although Dr. Miner was eighty-one years of age, his active career had been in no wise interrupted, and the day before his death he made two masterful addresses. He was distinguished for his helpfulness; as some one said, "his 'neighbor' was the man or woman who needed his help, and he never failed to be 'neighborly.'" Boston and Massachusetts have been greatly stirred by his death, and the cause of temperance has lost one of its most valiant defenders.

So many Christian Endeavorers are in the families of our white-ribboners that we gladly give space to the outline of one of the novel excursions planned to follow the convention in Boston, July 11–15. It is a bicycle trip to Lexington and Concord, over the same route followed by Paul Revere on that historic night of April 19, 1775. To quote from the announcement: "The Christian Endeavorers, those who bring their bicycles with them and those who hire them in Boston, are to meet in Copley Square at an early hour on Wednesday morning, July 17. There they will be formed into detachments, with proper officers and a general leader or captain. As the traffic on the streets will be light at this time the riders will proceed at once to Charleston, and make their formal start where Paul Revere began his famous ride. After Lexington has been enjoyed to the full, the tourists will proceed to Concord, which will be reached at ten o'clock, or thereabouts, in the morning. The present arrangement is to have one corps of the bicycle contingent composed entirely of ladies, under the lieutenancy of a young woman Endeavorer of Boston. Another corps will contain nothing but pastors, and these, with the ladies, will lead the van of the procession. So far as possible the delegates will ride by states, and carry their state flags, and the landmarks along the route will be decorated with Christian Endeavor emblems. Already great interest has been aroused in this trip, and it bids fair to be one of the most successful excursions connected with the convention." In these days of Sabbath desecration by the wheel it is delightful to anticipate the pleasure of these young Christians on a week day excursion of this character. We wish every young man and woman in the country might be in this novel procession.

CHICAGO'S down-town business streets are clean. Perhaps this fact should not be made a virtue of, but it is so novel to the "oldest resident" that it is a matter of conversation on all sides. This city of black soil, soft coal and a "boodle" council can now compare in cleanliness to the leading cities of Europe. But it is not the city government that has done it nor city employés. The Civic Federation decided a month ago to have the streets in the heart of the mercantile district relieved of their filth, and it has done so. It has uniformed a sober, industrious force of working men and set them to work with brooms, shovels and hand-carts. The work is thoroughly done, enough so to surmise that the directions were given by a woman! The men do not drag their shovels and brooms over the dirt, but they turn the edge of their brooms into the cracks of the cobblestones and scrape the bottom of the gutters with their shovels until even the dust of the street and the slime of the sluiceway is removed into tidy mounds near the curbstone. Then there quickly follows the man with the hand-cart who actually gathers it all up into his tin receptacle with a cover and hastens with it to the dumping ground. One daily paper sagely remarks that few pipes and no "rushers" (beer cans) are seen with these street cleaners. Everybody of sense admires these faithful workmen, and if any society and set of laborers ever deserved a city's gratitude and respect it is the Civic Federation and its honest employés.

IT is well for the Fourth of July orator to recount the great deeds by which the institutions of our civil liberty were established, but it should be with the purpose of reminding the present generation that the virtues which won our liberties are necessary to their preservation; that liberty, like character, is not a gift but an achievement, that it can never be bestowed upon a people but must be acquired by them, for it is not a garment to be put on but a life to be lived. He, therefore, is the true patriot who, rejoicing in what has already been so well accomplished, impresses upon the people the fact that if we preserve the blessings already ours we must forget the things that are behind and press to the prize of a still higher calling; who faces the evils of the present and calls them by their right names; who sounds the note of warning and proclaims that because "the wages of sin is death" our national sins threaten the life of the nation; who, like Paul Revere, summons the people "to be up and to arm" not against any foreign foe, but against the infinitely more dangerous enemies created by our own vices; who calls upon them to stand ready to sacrifice their lives, their fortunes and their sacred honor in contest with the forces which would grind down the poor and make this an oligarchy of wealth, with the political corruption which is certain death to republican institutions, with the social vices which have sapped the life of the proudest nations of antiquity, with the insolent and satanic power—the liquor traffic, which even now aspires to make all departments of government mere puppets of its will. As truly now as at any time in our history, a "crisis presses on us." Now, as a hundred years ago, patriotism must reveal itself not by words of empty boasting but by heroic deeds.

WHO SIT NEXT THE KING?

BY LLEWELLYN A. MORRISON.

Then came to him the mother of Zebedee's children with her two sons, saying, Grant that these, my two sons, may sit, the one on Thy left hand and the other on Thy right, in Thy kingdom. Jesus said: It shall be given unto them for whom it is prepared.

When the judgment session ended
Shall its full decrees award,
When the righteous have ascended
Into Heaven with the Lord,
When the kings of all the nations
Do their tribute bring—
With their sanctified oblations—
Unto Christ, the glorious donor
Of all human weal and honor,
Then the chronicles shall guide Him;
Who may fill the throne beside Him,
Who sit next the King.

Is it Israel's Prophet-Leader?
Where hath he, or flaw or fleck?
He, who, as his nation's pleader,
Held the wrath of God in check.
Who, of all earth's seers or sages,
Can such record bring?
Will the Shepherd-King, anointed
By the Lord, who knew his heart,
Once again be God-appointed
To this Israel-Throne and part?
Psalmist! Statesman! Reign beside Him,
And sit next the King?

Glance we over history's pages,
Scan the names whom men call great,
Count each one whose worth engages
National thought in church or state;
Lo! From each Fame-laurel'd human Time's accretions spring.

. . . . . .

May not some pure, saintly woman,
Truer than Earth's noblest true man (Patient, prudent, helpful, holy,
Lifting up for Christ the lowly,
Strong in faith and firm in action,
God and life her soul's attraction,
Broad in purpose—Love's preëmption
For the Race, complete redemption,
Compromising no conviction,
Holding no convenient fiction
In her Truth's supreme addiction!)
Which the centuries may provide Him,
Queen of Heaven, be throned beside Him
And sit next the King?

"THE TIE THAT BINDS."

BY ANNA M. VAIL.

The major part of the population of Thorndale and its surrounding country was assembled in the early morning, awaiting the excursion train bound for River Park. Two things made this a great occasion; it was Independence day, and this was the first train over the new railroad connecting the isolated little village with a less unsophisticated world.

"I've the best mind to take her right back with me!" Miranda Beals was saying with a disturbed face.

"I've as good a mind to lend her one as ever I had to eat!" said the village milliner, adding more slowly—"If I thought Miss Ri would like it." But she and the other women of the group knew that Miss Ri wouldn't tolerate anything of the kind.

The object of their solicitude, a little figure in white, stood regarding with mild curiosity the other members of her class who whispered by themselves a little apart. Each wore a lace straw hat twisted in fantastic form, decorated aggressively in exact imitation of the "pattern hat," designed as plainly as a hat could testify "for the country trade."

"I've been so busy night and day I didn't get time to send word," continued the woman of bonnets. "I expected Miss Ri would come herself; I calculated she'd want the pale blue."

"Well, we can't do no different," Miranda said with a lump in her throat. She shared the general admiration, and her pet lamb must wear "nothin' but a sunbonnit, an' odd lookin' thing at that!"

It was just as well; there was that in Miss Ri which would not have succumbed to the pale blue concoction, unless the little maid had mourned for it—and she was as calm as the summer morning.

"I don't believe she's real bright," one woman said. "Oh, yes, she's a scholar and an awful good speaker, but she don't seem to know she'd ought to have one of them hats!"

The cry went up—"She's coming!" and there was great excitement. Many of the company saw for the first time the horse with neck clothed with thunder and rushed back screaming, dismayed to find its near approach so tremendous. Lillis stood her ground, holding the faithful Miranda's hand.

"Oh, Lillis, weren't you scared?" quavered the five hats, temporarily startled out of their superiority.

"Yes," she said. "I knew better, but I was."

It was a new thing for Lillis Mayo, star pupil of Sunday-school and Loyal Temperance Legion, to be slighted.

She sat, all unsuspicious, by her teacher, sedately enjoying everything.

"As odd a child as ever I see!" was the frequent Thorndale comment. Younger than her classmates, she was far in advance of them in most knowledge, yet not so precocious as they. What Thorndale was minded to pronounce "something lacking" was better interpreted a calm waiting for very full and fine development in its due season.

Instead of gathering as usual closely around her, the five in bright array chose seats halfway down the aisle.

"I haven't seen a single sunbonnet get on," remarked Josephine.

"What I'm thinking of," said Leona, "is what in the world will we do when we get there? I feel ashamed to be seen with such a fright!"

"It's awful," breathed Maud; "everybody will make fun of us!"

"Let's slip away from her!" said Angeline; "I don't think she ought to spoil all our fun." "Say we do," they whispered.

At length the train moved slowly across a long bridge spanning a placid river and halted at the entrance to the park.

Miss Willett gathered her flock and passed out in the wake of the superintendent who called the children around him, gave explicit directions about the time to assemble for the return, handed out the checks for lunch baskets and told them not to lose sight of their teachers.

Aunt Ri would never have entrusted her treasure with "that hen-headed Dell Willett" if she had had any conception of the extent to which the celebration would exceed the limits of a union picnic at Burr's grove or Summerhill. She could not bear her weight on her sprained ankle, Miranda was really needed and papa was engaged to address the celebration in Garfield township.

The scene grew constantly more animated as the long excursion trains from north, south, east and west brought in their thousands of pleasure seekers. After a tour of the grounds the Thorndale company found a shady place on the river bank to rest. Bob Walker found them there. Bob was always a pioneer; he had been over to see the town. Some one suggested that it was better to go before dinner as there would be so much going on in the afternoon.

Miss Dell had been invited by young Mr. Bonney from the Parkins' district to go on the river, so the girls were formed two by two behind Miss Putnam's class. They knew that Lillis always had a liberal allowance of spending money and resigned themselves to her unfashionable appearance.

Thorndale was scarcely aware of anything remarkable in Miss Ri excepting that she was odd. That inborn quality in some of the ancient peoples which gave graceful form to the commonest utensils lived in her and manifested itself in the gowns she made for Lillis. Even the little white bonnet, with its high crown and smart bow on top, while not just like anything in the fashion plates, was in no danger of being pronounced "countrified." The little maid might have just stepped out of a picture, and since civilization seeks to be picturesque, she was less remarkable than her companions. The five in their preposterous headgear caused many a smile of amusement, but associated with that artistic little figure gave rise to more of wonderment. The itinerant photographer made one picture of Lillis by herself, which he said he could not show because it was not "developed," but the girls knew he kept it for a curiosity. Each girl treasured a tintype group in a pink folder made at Lillis' expense. She treated them to ice cream, and they had a curious first experience with soda water, but on their way back to the grounds, these excitements having subsided, they had leisure to become deeply annoyed by the notice excited.

"I wonder if they take her to be our sister!" they whispered.

"I expect they think she is some crazy person's child." But when in the park a young lady took out her drawing block and began a rapid sketch with frequent glances in their direction, it was too much.

"Oh, my! she's making a picture of us!" whispered Alma.

"Likely as not they'll put it in some newspaper," shuddered Leona.

"There's Miss Willett," whispered Angeline. "Let's run! She'll take care of her."

"Stay here a minute, Lillis!" they cried, and whisked away. But Miss Willett and young Mr. Bonney turned another way, not seeing them at all.

Lillis sat awhile contentedly, much entertained by her surroundings. When she felt that she had waited long enough she walked about in calm enjoyment of many interesting things, leaving the fountain reluctantly for the wonderful flower beds.

"Are your friends near by, dear?" asked the lady who invited her to take a turn with her little girl on the merry-go-round, and was satisfied with the answer, "Yes, right over here," where, indeed, Lillis supposed it would be easy to find them. She was so composed nobody suspected she was not under some watchful eye. Catching a glimpse of the river, she felt a little bewildered; she did not know that the pleasure ground was a beautiful "wooded island," and set out in search of the trysting place in exactly the wrong direction until it was becoming a weary ramble and perhaps not quite safe.

In a somewhat retired place a company of nice looking boys were making preparations for lunch; sons of white ribbon mothers, every one of them, but they had long-necked bottles disposed in a pail of ice near by, and a colored waiter was unpacking a set of beautiful little glasses. What "man of the world" airs they were assuming! How very blasé they were going to be for the first time in their lives! And what a pang would have rent those unsuspecting mother hearts could they have known of this folly! Whose fault is it that there should be a fine flavor of romantic interest in being "a little wild"?

Little Lillis had begun inquiring for five girls with all colored ribbons and roses on their hats.

"Say, isn't she a picture?" said Paul Morris in an undertone.

"I think you would better sit down and rest a little," Arthur Burnett suggested, and directly, in a nice, elder brotherly way, they had her chatting with them quite freely.

"What is that?" asked Harry Wilbur. He knew perfectly what the L. T. L. was, but it was pretty to hear Lillis tell about it.

"Please recite one of your pieces for us," they coaxed. Lillis looked fixedly at the bottles for a minute; her eyes grew intense—her face gathered earnestness as she commenced:

"Go feel what I have felt—
Go bear what I have borne—
Sink neath the blow a father dealt,
And the cold world's proud scorn."

The boys were electrified from their lounging positions.

"Go see what I have seen—"

It was wonderful dramatic power in such a child; Miss Ri had one apt pupil.

"Go to thy mother's side
And her crushed bosom cheer."

. . . . . .

"Mark her worn frame and withered brow,
The gray that threads her dark hair now—"

Didn't those boys think hard about their mothers?

"Then look upon the wine cup's glow,
See if its beauty can atone—
Think if its flavor you can try."

Was it by accident that the little hand indicated those slim necked, devilish black bottles?

"Tell me I HATE the bowl?
Hate is a feeble word!
I loathe—abhor—my very soul
With strong disgust is stirred
Whene'er I see, or hear, or tell
Of that dark beverage of Hell!"

The boys looked at each other, astonished.

"What do you mean by the bowl?" asked Harry to test her.

"Any alcoholic drink," replied Lillis promptly.

"Who taught you to hate the bowl?" asked Will Tyler.

"Auntie—and papa—they both hate it. Auntie wears a white ribbon, that means she hates it."

"Say, fellows," said Paul, springing up, "those people will be getting wild about this child. We'll go look for the girls with the gay ribbons," he said, taking her hand.

"Don't wait for me, boys, if I'm gone long." But they called after him that they should wait.

There was no one whom Lillis knew on the river bank.

"I'm awful hungry," she said presently.

"So am I," said Paul. "Let's go back and have dinner with the boys."

"I have a ticket for my basket," said Lillis.

"Oh, have you? then I'll get it," he said.

It was a big one, hospitable in its intent; its biscuits, jellied chicken, cream nut cake and red raspberry jam combined ravishingly with the boys' lobster salad and other indigestibles. They sent Jim for lemonade.

"Turn that outfit in the river," said Will Tyler, the oldest of the boys, indicating the bottles; "we can't be bothered with them."

"Mighty glad I didn't have to put dem bottles to der lips." Jim was a Sunday-school scholar, too.

A good part of Thorndale Sunday-school was searching for a child in a queer sunbonnet, but nobody recognized the description. The teachers decided they must stop the search long enough for the children to stay the pangs of hunger; Miss Willett's class was crying miserably for that and other reasons. All were immensely relieved to find that Lillis' basket was gone. Of course she must be with some one from home, but they grew anxious again and went early to the meeting place.

Lillis had a lovely time all the afternoon. From Will Tyler's shoulder she saw all the funny games and races. The six boys escorted her to the train.

"Lillis!" screamed the class in glad relief.

"Tell your auntie," said Paul, "that you ate dinner with six boys whose mothers all wear ribbons like hers." Did Lillis understand? She told the story so that Aunt Ri did and her heart glowed with triumph to see this little wave from her center of influence reaching out so far and touching other lives.

Her L. T. L. was a leaven of life—a liberal education to that inland community but the significance of her work was but dimly revealed to her; she had wondered sometimes about results. "He knows how to use us," thought she. "It is all in the hands of the Lord."

Those city women were seeing results all the time and did not need a revelation. They were pleased that their boys had done service for one of their guild but they did not feel the cords tighten as she did, and they went on in their labors of love for the sons of other mothers, all unconscious that the Lord had blessed to themselves their faithful efforts.

THE VOICES OF THE CENTURY.

BY JOHN G. WOOLLEY.

[A speech delivered in New York city before the National Conference of Reforms, July 4, 1895.]

I have been listening to the voices of the century, from the daybreak, when all the morning birds of liberty were singing, to the eventide when the vampire bat of the world's worst slavery scents the night in its hiding and flaps its skinny wings into the open, glancing like a foul suspicion hither and thither across the weary quiet of the gloaming from darkness to darkness.

Scents the night, I say, for civilization has diurnal and orbital motions like the earth itself, and days and nights, tides, zones and seasons. That phase of society in which demoniac competition dwells in catacombs and tears itself, incapable of being bound by either human love or human law; where men fly at each other's throats like mad dogs, learn to feed on poisons, marry for lust or pride or spite or gold or power, steal for the mere excitement of it, incorporate to murder opportunity and hope in simple, honest, independent industry, rape the body politic to beget Monopoly and her idiot brother Anarchy; where laws are private schemes, offices wellnigh impossible except for trimmers and demagogues, and public franchises are racks to stretch the people on till they forswear their natal liberties; the world which has for its motto, "business is business," and which turns upon the caprice of the all powerful rich and the madness of the all-impotent poor for its oblique and oscillating axis; where the incorrigible expansion of the human soul contends with the persistent gravitation back to brute types and the fires of their friction coke the faggots of to-day's martyrdoms into carbons for the illuminations of to-morrow's victories; that, I say, belongs to and the domain of politics.

To him whose poor cosmogony affords no God all progress is but a curious paralysis, and every sound—from childbed cry to deathbed hallelujah—part of one universal discord, shot with chance harmonies. But it is a dull eye and ear that cannot catch in the storm and stress of these tremendous days enough of luminiferous melody to prove that all these whimsical and terrific changes are of the overture to orderly and matchless symphonies in preparation. It is a medley, to be sure, but Babel is impossible. Creation begins to understand itself. The tree of knowledge bears. Men begin to be as gods.

For the inexorable love of the Father abideth, and as yon mighty river bears on its quiet bosom bubbles breathed up from scaly reptiles burrowing in its underlying ooze, so Jehovah swings the world along its brightening orbit with all the swirl and suck of its financial maelstroms, whirling off from red tongued hells of social cruelty hot but ineffectual nebulæ that keep the mystery of double motion until they cool and symmetrize into the satellites we call reforms, and fly back self-won and finished into the wrong-wrung but winning staple, stable social order of the world.

This is

and the domain of religion. Politics is diurnal, Religion is eternal. Politics has "ups and downs," Religion has no downs. Politics is discouraging, Religion is everlasting sunrise, seeing which the regenerate soul cries, "God's in his Heaven, all's right with the world." But all is not right with the world, nor will be, until politics and religion shall be the same thing. Politics may not so much as touch religion with its finger, but religion must assimilate politics into itself, and to do that is the business of the church in the world.

This is the prophet century and this the climactic year of prophecy. At least a score of world-compelling voices cry aloud and refuse to yield the forum. Money, Labor, Taxation, Suffrage, Transportation, Civil Service, Tariff, the Initiative and Referendum, the Liquor Traffic, Socialism and the rest. And civil government is literally aground by the weight of its titanic purposes, and helpless by the paradox of patriotic mutiny.

I propose a union of reformers for sixty minutes, to listen for the raps of God's gavel on His throne, and to see which of our causes He gives the right of way. The people will save this nation if they can be got to listen. The voice of the people is the voice of God when they think.

I hold the glorious heresy that man is noble. I am not philosophizing or theologizing. I have no theory as to when or how sin came, or whence. The story of Genesis will do as well as any. "Such knowledge is too high for me." But symptoms that antedate history seem to me to concede to humankind unerring recognition of a true voice and an honest struggle to follow it. God's breath never ceases to press toward His bosom—that is the secret of evolution. But man's body is of the coldblood of every wriggling, mud-born thing, and a dead lift for the soul.

Abraham kept on sinning but struck out for God, who knighted him "my friend." Jacob fought like a tiger the internal fires of hereditary dishonesty and limped on upon his broken thigh in the direction of the Angel. David boxed the compass of vice and was a man after God's own heart because he kept tumbling toward the center. The harlot of Jericho, who hid the spies of Joshua beneath the flax stalks on her housetop, pointed right, and many a décolleté dame "letter perfect" in letter virtue will walk behind Saint Rahab in the judgment day.

Moses called the enslaved and sodden Jews from the mud pits and flesh pots of Egypt, and they came and zigzagged forty years through wildernesses of ignorance, betrayed hourly by sin signals which it was their inborn nature to obey because of the pestilential blood poison that was almost their only heritage. They worshiped idols, lied, forswore themselves, stole, and so on through the calendar of evil, but they came on the best they knew to Canaan, and there kept on falling, but and now, having been threshed like breadcorn beneath the feet of all nations, are winnowing back "to Zion with songs and everlasting joy upon their lips."

And God, who at sundry times and in divers manners, spake in times past unto the fathers by the prophets, hath in these last days spoken unto us by His son, and commanded us to greater works than He did, by placing the governments of earth upon our shoulders and entrusting us to control the environment of penitent men and women and children, birthmarked in their souls by evil tendency; and speaks loud to us to-day to have a care lest He should say to us, contemplating His losses, "I gave you the government and offered you the power of the Holy Ghost, and you sold the government for revenue to bloody men, and went a-whoring in your politics, with liquor lords and greed Goliaths; 'the voice of your brother's blood cries from the ground.'"

What proves the preponderance of Good is that masses of people who have a chance to hear a true voice never fail to catch it and to declare for it. That is why our governmental charters, declarations and laws, our church resolutions and society mottoes, always so far exceed the virtue of our doing. It is easy to see the right but hard to follow. This is the diurnal war of body and spirit—the saddest mystery of creation. The human mind mounts upon wings as an eagle, but the human body—evolving from savagery—must triangulate the wilderness and tack across the sea. Walking, at the best, is falling forward.

The Declaration of Independence reads like inspiration where it treats of human rights, but many of the signers of it and the great man who wrote it, owned other men at the time and called them their slaves and claimed the right to. No wonder that the old bell cracked rather than ring out that kind of liberty. Bell metal cannot lie. But the Continental Congress was epochal, and God smiled upon it; the people had set out into the wilderness of compromise and mercenary politics and greed and lies to find liberty, and they blundered on through eighty-six years of steady guilt, barely honest enough to keep theoretical liberty written in the fundamental law—in fact, denying it, until that incarnation of the world's gain, that cosmic, common man, the western Hercules, the man of the people, Abraham Lincoln, impaled the national lie upon a steel pen and the people pricked the straight truth into each other's hearts with bayonets and cooled the fever of sectionalism by the awful phlebotomy of civil war.

The usual ratio of law to enforcement is as a steel pen to assert the right to two million bayonets to stand by it, a drop of ink to blot out slavery to a sea of blood to fix the blot. A man or a state that after few or many years of trial of a righteous law—and much failure—says in any general, serious meaning: "Prohibition does not prohibit," has not a large brain or is a liar.

So the total abstinence movement swept the land like a tidal wave and the enthusiasm of it was only equaled by the disappointment of it, but in fifty years it has become the law of good society throughout the country.

So the Prohibition party, whose first large advertisement to the world was the voice of the poltroon crying, "It has set back the cause twenty years," has fought its way without a visible gain to speak of, and never a good word, thriven on contumely and led its handful to the very front of the whole world's politics. We have been criticised and have deserved it, but, looked at by the large, we have done exactly what the fathers did by the declaration of "seventy-six," what Congress did by the fifteenth amendment, what Crusaders have done ever since the Cross was lifted up, we have thrown the heart of Jesus far into the ranks of the enemy and then cut our way to it. And by the grace of God we are there this day.

"And so through plots and counterplots, through gain and loss, through glory and disgrace along the plains where passionate discord rears eternal Babel, still the holy stream of human happiness glides on."

AND THE LESSON

that I get out of it all is that while in my capacity of a citizen and my conception of duty as a Christian, of all the worthy suits that press upon the public mind I choose to champion Prohibition, yet I am not to show or even feel an atom of disrespect to any other of the great reforms.

Political progress is like an orange tree. It exhibits all stages of development at the same time—bud, flower, fruit, green and ripe; and woody growth and possibly decay. The glory of an orange, sweet, ripe and hanging like a globe of luscious gold ready for the lips, never yet shed contempt upon its acrid fellow on the same bough. Nor did a full formed orange ever intimate that a half blown flower beside it was a failure. The ripe fruit is gathered, the green waits not on the husbandman but on the sun. So it must be with our reforms. I think I hold them all at their full value, but I also recognize a providential order of their harvesting.

I think that if a man can compass a monopoly by giving better quality or terms or price or speed or taste, he has a right to it. But where a man hires or puts in fear the common carriers, who operate the people's franchise, fouls another's stream, floods his mine, or dissipates his power and so kills off honest rivalry, he ought to be hanged or imprisoned like any other thief. I think a railroad company that conspires with rich shippers to "freeze out" the lesser ones, ought to forfeit its franchise and escheat its holdings to the state, without equity of redemption.

I think the government ought to control the price of fuel, freight, flour and telegraphy and keep it as fair and relatively equable as postage. I think the government ought to issue all the money and make it impossible for the money power to fleece the people. I think bank directors and officers ought to be held personally liable for every dollar of deposits. I think the government ought, when it desires, to borrow money to issue its bonds in forms suitable for sale to humble citizens and invariably give the people the first chance to subscribe for them. I think every city should own its waterworks, light works and street railways and sell the use of them at cost. I think that women ought to vote upon the same terms as men. I think the government ought to carry on such a comprehensive system of internal improvements, irrigating its lands, improving its roads and rivers and the like as would enable it to abolish involuntary idleness.

I think, moreover, that every one of the parties has good in it, and do not feel myself commissioned to kill any of them if I could. The Republican party is contemptible only when one considers it as an anti-saloon party. The Democratic party is unworthy a good man's ballot only when he has in view the liquor traffic. But I submit that by the opinions of great men and women, the consensus of common opinion, the discoveries of science and the declaration of the Church the liquor traffic ought to die now. And I am going to offer you in hasty outline, tentatively, a scheme of voting union against this common enemy of everything.

White-Ribboners in London.

DEAR UNION SIGNAL:—London, the proverbial foggy, rainy metropolis, threw aside her "gray mantle" (if she has such a thing in these days of smoke consumers), and showed a face all gayety and sunshine to the temperance delegates.

The Berlin's passengers, after being heartily welcomed to their destination by Mr. Robert Pearsall Smith, Miss Jessie Ackermann and Dr. Lunn at the early morning breakfast, safely threaded the intricacies of English baggage and customs regulations, and were soon settled comfortably in the half-dozen fine hotels which were prepared to receive them. Here they found welcome envelopes, containing tickets for the various events of the week, with directions, all prepared by the British committees.

Many took advantage of the bright afternoon for sight-seeing, and I am sure that among the hosts of tourists already in evidence at all the noted points of interest, none were more impressed, more appreciative and intelligent than "our own."

The magnificence of this historic and unparalleled metropolis; its solidity, antiquity, its wealth of historic lore; its likeness and unlikeness to our own great cities, are intensely attractive to a new world resident. Heaven's first law, order, is duly observed here. There is "method in the madness" of the rush and deadened roar of the crowded streets. It is good to see so many fine "Temperance hotels." The public lavatories, the "street orderly bins" for the disposition of scraps, the obligingness of the public servants, are all parts of a well ordered municipality which proves the Metropolitan Board of Public Works to be good housekeepers. The weather, the hostesses and the comfortable arrangements have all combined to make the Pilgrims' introduction to London an unusually happy one.

The event of the first Sabbath was the Devotional Service, at Dr. Parkhurst's church, the City Temple, preliminary to the important gatherings of the week. Long before the doors were opened a mass of people besieged the entrance, despite the fact that only a short distance away a religious event of ceremony and pomp was taking place in St. Paul's Cathedral, in which the Lord Mayor, Bishops and other Church of England dignitaries participated.

The temperance meeting of women from all parts of the world was an exceptional occurrence, however, and at this central gathering as well as at the scores of others in which the white ribbon women participated on this day, the attendance was unusual.

Dr. Parker's church very much resembles in arrangement the old Tremont Temple of Boston, in which our first World's meeting was held. The three thousand faces which looked out from the seats in the large auditorium were "home faces." Up in the high pulpit platform was the British women's leader, Lady Henry Somerset, equally beloved on both sides of the Atlantic. Near by was our own Chieftain, so that we found it difficult to realize that we were in a city three thousand miles distant from the home land. When, after the devotions were over, our leader said, "It seems so much like home," the words voiced the thought in every American heart. "And the thought of home comes only to us through Him of whom we sang." She continued, "We see the cross and hear the voice, 'And I, if I be lifted up, will draw all men unto me,' and these are they who follow that way."

Owing to a throat difficulty, Miss Willard spoke only a few inspiring words of welcome, introducing our National Y organizer, Miss Belle Kearney, as the latest round-the-world missionary, and referring hopefully to the young women, "brave young recruits with unwritten faces full of prophecy." Miss Kearney's words were well-timed, touching upon the work of young women and pleading eloquently for their help in the great cause.

Madame Antoinette Sterling, the famous and popular English contralto, a rare personality with a voice deep and true, then sang expressive songs without any accompaniment but that of naturalness. Madame Sterling is American born, and a singer devoted to good deeds, who often preludes her songs by short temperance talks. Her singing was warmly received and encored.

"This is a memorable day for Englishwomen," said Lady Henry Somerset. "Never before have so many gathered together from different lands with one hope, one cause and one prayer. It seems as if the whole history of the union had come together." She then referred to the fact that the Crusade Psalm had just been read from the very page that Mother Thompson's eyes rested upon in that momentous hour more than twenty-one years ago when the Crusade fires were lit. "Every great cause springs from small beginnings." She spoke of the faithful ones gathered about her on the platform with tender words of appreciation for each, and concluded by presenting the cause of the Woman's Inebriate Home at Surrey for which a large collection was taken.

Mother Stewart, who had crossed the ocean in her eightieth year to attend these meetings, was received as she deserved to be with true English applause, hearty and strong, and the Chautauqua salute. Her remarks were in her own earnest, radical, unmistakable vein and she never spoke with greater vigor and spiciness. The walls resounded with "hear, hears." Mother Stewart may well be proud of the movement which she was the instrument in starting nineteen years ago. Of that work (the British Women's Temperance Association), I will tell you in another letter. I am told by the superintendent, Miss Gorham, that one hundred and sixty-six meetings were held in the various parts of London, mostly addressed by delegates from other lands in the afternoon and evening. In many cases only after services could be held, so great is the conservatism and prejudice against women speaking in public. At this writing, it is impossible to ascertain results.

Our House Beautiful.

TO MY WHITE-RIBBON COMRADES:—How goes the battle? Are the Wheels turning merrily? I am glad that forty thousand are out, and if the children who train with us as new recruits would work the Wheels for what there is in them we should come to the Baltimore Convention with the Temple burden lifted without interfering with anybody's income or comfort, and with such an achievement for the temperance reform as has never stood forth to encourage and inspire all who beheld it. What we want is not energy, but radiant energy; not warmth, but zeal; not vigor, but ardor; not boiling water, but steam; not love, but more love. If we were but shot through with Crusade sunshine one week would not pass until all the things spoken of the Temple were fulfilled.

What rejoices me is that by the present plan no one person is heavily encumbered; no one will be in any wise the worse, but all the better for giving a dime and inducing twelve others to do the same. We must not lose the donation of Marshall Field; we must rise to the level of his offer, viz., that he would give twenty-five thousand dollars if we would raise the remaining two hundred seventy-five thousand before January, 1896. The children and young people are now out of school; their time is largely on their hands; their mothers often wish they knew what to do that would interest them. But here is something to do that is no less noble than it is ingenious—something that will bring them in immediate returns, and at the same time will help in a substantial way a cause to which they should be early sworn in solemn and beautiful allegiance.

Advices from Chicago give every promise of a sweeping revival in business circles. There is reason to expect that every office in the Temple will be rented within eighteen months. If this expectation should be realized, and we do get together the three hundred thousand dollars to buy up the stock, we should then be in a position to profit substantially by the coming flood-tide of prosperity, but otherwise, of course, this could not be. Why should millionaires profit by good times and good causes go begging?

"The earth is the Lord's and the fullness thereof, . . the gold and the silver are His."

Shall we not by the output of an extra quantity of consecrated common sense lay hands upon the dimes that make the wheels of great and good enterprises go round? That is the question and upon its answer depends the future of our House Beautiful.

As always, I am yours in affectionate confidence and hope,

Frances E. Willard.

A UNIQUE MEMORIAL SERVICE.

DEAR UNION SIGNAL:—The Presbyterian church of Hillsboro,—the Crusade church—is, as your readers know, to be taken down to make way for a modern and more commodious edifice. Already the work of demolition has begun.

I am a visitor of but a few months in Hillsboro, and when it was announced that an all day memorial service would be held in the church from which the woman's crusade against saloons began, I determined to attend, glad of the opportunity to see and hear Mother Thompson, and those other brave women who had started this work for the cause of temperance.

The meeting was held, not in the body of the church, but in the lecture room—the room in which the women gathered on that memorable morning twenty-two years ago.

The president, Mrs. Thompson, stepped on to the platform with dignity and grace. I was strongly reminded of a comparison made in reference to her by a reporter of a southern paper some years ago. "On the right sat Mother Thompson, looking like a piece of fine old china." Indeed the figure is so expressive that I fain must use it;—so firm, yet so delicate and refined. In spite of her years, looking bright, and with ready wit, and tact equal to every emergency.

She requested Dr. McSurely, who had labored so zealously with the movement years ago, and had prayed with the devoted band, and encouraged and upheld them, to read the Crusade Psalm—Psalm 145. After the reading, Mrs. Jaynes, one of the Crusaders, led in prayer.

Mrs. Thompson then read the following telegram:

MILLERSBURG, O., June 21, 1895.

To Mrs. E. J. Thompson, sixth district convention sends greetings to Crusade Love Feast. Friday morning your readings used. "Her children rise up and call her blessed."

MRS. E. HESTER MILLS, Committee.

"'And her children shall rise up and call her blessed,' that is the most blessed thing that was ever said to me; when I die—and I shall soon," said Mother Thompson, her voice thrilling with emotion,—"I want those words to be preserved.

"I have called this meeting that we may for the last time meet together within these walls where we began a work that has encompassed the earth. As Aaron was commanded to bear the names of the children of Israel 'in the breastplate of judgment' upon his heart, when he went into the holy place for a memorial before the Lord, so we 'Crusaders' would come this morning with the names of the 'redeemed ones' since 1873 upon our hearts for a 'memorial' to this sacred old church, where the 'fiery, cloudy pillar' first appeared as our shield and guide.

"And as we sorrowfully commemorate the passing away of this blessed historic church we would join in the spirit of thanksgiving over the prospective Temple so soon to appear. When the prophet Isaiah would comfort the church with gracious promises he exclaimed: 'Enlarge the places of thy tent, and let them stretch forth the curtains of their habitations, spare not, lengthen thy cords and strengthen thy stakes.'

"This 'fiery, cloudy pillar' is not a fixture, but a movable benediction; it is guided by the command of the great 'I am,' and He looks through the clouds to lead and bless His trusting ones and to 'overthrow' and confound His enemies. It will 'hover over' the new Temple, that by the united zeal and liberality of pastor and people must soon occupy the sacred spot rendered very dear to many hearts who have enjoyed during all these Crusade years its uninterrupted hospitality and the spiritual unity of its faithful pastor. Now let us all join the choir in singing our Crusade hymn,

"'Give to the winds thy fears.'"

"No," said Mrs. McSurely, "let us not sing that hymn; let it be a song of victory for all that the Lord has done for our cause since that day."

After a hymn was sung Mrs. McSurely said: "We all remember that blessed morning twenty-two years ago when we gathered in this room. How we prayed as perhaps we never prayed before. Oh, how fervently we prayed that we might be blessed with wisdom, with zeal, with courage for our work, and how we seventy women marched out singing, with fear and trembling, but with God-given strength."

A murmur of approval ran round the room as Mrs. McSurely's address was finished.

The president then asked Mrs. Wm. O. Collins to speak; 'Please come to the platform, that all may hear," she said.

"I come," said Mrs. Collins, "at Mrs. Thompson's request, to speak of those who were in the first band of the Crusaders, but who have now entered into the courts above—of Mrs. Doggett, who led the singing as the band marched on the streets, that band whom my husband called 'the sweet singers of Israel'; of our first vice-president, Mrs. Sallie McDowell, whose life of kindness and gentleness and devotion to her home and church and to this great cause whose blessed memory is enshrined in our hearts; of Mrs. Trimble, Mrs. Mather and of Mrs. J. McD. Smith." She paid them each and others, a glowing and eloquent tribute, and ended with the beautiful prayer, "And we bless Thy holy name for all thy servants departed this life in Thy faith and fear; beseeching Thee to give us grace so to follow their good example that we may be partakers of Thy heavenly kingdom."

While Mrs. Collins spoke, many tears were shed as hearts were touched by her eloquent and touching words.

The president then recalled others of the band; to Mrs. Dr. Sams she paid a warm eulogy for devotion to the cause, and to Mrs. Cowden, to Mrs. Marshall Nelson, to Mrs. Stevenson and others. Ladies rose throughout the assembly and gave the names of loved and revered members of the band who had passed away; eloquent words were spoken and tears shed as tender memories were stirred.

The president said she would like to know how many remain, and asked: "Will all of those please rise who marched with us that first morning?" She counted twenty-two. "Now will those who afterwards joined, please rise?" she counted thirty-seven.

Mr. Clayton, the Methodist minister who had been with them in those days, came in and was warmly welcomed by the president, and introduced to the congregation. "I am late," he said, "the train was detained. It is good for me to be here; chains could not have kept me away. No, no. I cannot speak, I have come to listen."

The president spoke of the old church, of her sorrow when it was decided to take it down, this cradle of the W. C. T. U., she wished it could be built around and preserved; "Oh, I love it; if I could but take it in my arms like Samson of old, and bear it away to some quiet place where we could keep it as a Mecca for all who love the cause of temperance."

She then spoke of some who had been with them, but who now lived elsewhere, with regret that they could not be with them to-day. Besides others she mentioned Miss Virginia Wever, our secretary and devoted Crusader, of her zeal; that wherever she is she devotes herself to the cause of temperance; of Mrs. Mary B. Fenner, the first secretary, who kept the books so truly that no one could find a trace of bitterness or any inaccuracy of statement.

The presiding elder of the Methodist church, Rev. Mr. Pearne, made a few appropriate remarks and another hymn was sung.

Mrs. Foraker, the mother of the ex-governor of Ohio, rose, a fine looking old lady with sparkling black eyes. The president courteously invited her to come to the platform. "No," she said smiling, "I'll stand here; all can hear me." And she gave us some interesting reminiscences. Miss Maria Stewart read with a clear voice and fine intonation, a poem from a lady of Kansas.

Two evangelists who are doing good work among the poor in New York, were introduced. They said they had come a long distance that morning to be present on this interesting occasion.

The president then said, "I see my husband here, I wish he would address us. Judge, will you speak to us to-day?" The venerable lawyer arose and spoke eloquently, making strong points. He showed how the W. C. T. U. had grown out of the Crusade movement, and ended his speech by a pleasant conceit, representing Lady Henry Somerset at the international W. C. T. U. convention then in session at London, conversing with a distinguished member of Parliament and explaining to him the workings of the W. C. T. U. and how it encircles the world from New York to London, to Japan, to the Sandwich Islands, to San Francisco and to New York again, from Greenland to Cape Colony. "And she is telling her wondering companion that it is all the outcome of a band of women Crusaders in a country village, away off in Ohio, in the United States. Great applause followed.

Several ministers who were present made short addresses and the assembly adjourned after three hours of sad and pleasant memories.

There was an afternoon meeting and another at night and so ended this all day memorial service.

And the old Crusade church has gone. But the history of the work of that December morning, 1873, and the following days, will remain an enduring monument to woman's dauntless courage and prayerful devotion to a great and good cause. R. L. HUNT.

PROGRESS OF THE POLYGLOT PETITION.

DEAR UNION SIGNAL:—Your readers will be interested to know something in detail of the plans for the progress of the Polyglot Petition after the great series of meetings held in London. The delegates who left America in the steamship Berlin, are, first of all, to visit the Grindelwald conference.

Then there will be an interval in the campaign, but on Aug. 31, the Petition will once more be embarked on its wonderful mission on board the steamship St. Sunniva, the delightful steam yacht, chartered last year by Lord Rothschild for his Mediterranean cruise. The vessel with a party of one hundred on board, will leave Leith under my arrangements, accompanied by Mr. Woolrych Perowne, son of the bishop of Worcester, for the northern capitals of Europe, St. Petersburg, Stockholm, Copenhagen, and Christiania. Leaving Leith, the vessel will proceed through the newly opened Baltic canal, up the Gulf of Finland, to St. Petersburg, where something like ten days will be spent. Interesting gatherings will be held and an opportunity provided for those who desire to extend their journey to Moscow, the ancient capital of Russia. Mr. Perowne has recently visited St. Petersburg, and found that the Metropolitan of St. Petersburg was greatly interested in the reunion conferences at Grindelwald. On that occasion, the Metropolitan invited Mr. Perowne's party to a special service at the Arch-Episcopal monastery of St. Alexander Nevski, the other bishops of St. Petersburg postponing the hour of service in order that their choirs might attend.

Moscow, which is still the focus of Russian nationality, has more the appearance of an Asiatic than of a European town. The Kremlin is the outstanding point of interest. Within its walls which have a circumference of two miles, there is a crowded and dazzling wealth of palaces, churches, museums and arsenals. Its Tartar architecture, abounding in gilded domes and cupolas, presents a very gorgeous spectacle. In the Kremlin, the Czars are crowned and buried, and the crowns of Kazan, Astrakan, Georgia and Poland are kept.

Leaving St. Petersburg the party will proceed to Stockholm, which has been called "the Venice of the North," owing to its being built partly on the mainland and partly on nine islands. It is generally allowed to be one of the most picturesque towns in Europe.

Copenhagen will be the next place on the program. As Elsinore is approached the shores on each side present a pleasing and attractive picture. After passing Elsinore the "Castle of Hamlet" is observed. The city is situated on the shores of the Island of Zealand and has a population of 330,000, and in virtue of being the capital of Denmark is the great centre of scientific and commercial activity in the kingdom. Thorwaldsen's Museum, in which are contained most of the great sculptor's works, is a potent attraction to lovers of art.

The last of the capitals to be visited on this cruise is Christiania, which was rebuilt after its destruction by fire in 1624, and has since been the seat of government and the meeting place of the Störthing.

On their return from the Baltic it is intended to carry out a similar cruise to the southern capitals of Europe. Rome will be visited by one section of the party, while another division will proceed from Marseilles by sea to Naples where they will join the overland section and pass on to Athens. It is hoped that the King of Italy will receive the party at Rome and the King of Greece at Athens.

It is unnecessary to say anything to the readers of this paper of the intensely interesting antiquities in these great cities. The grandeur of the Coliseum and the beauties of Greek architecture will in turn delight the travelers. The vessel will then pursue its way to Constantinople, for many centuries the rival as a Christian centre of the imperial city of Rome, but now, unhappily, in the hands of the "unspeakable Turk." How far the Sultan will welcome the delegation history alone must record. The party will have an opportunity of visiting the world-renowned Mosque of St. Sophia, once a Christian temple but now the grandest of Mohammedan mosques.

After having beheld the glories of the Bosphorus, the party will turn southwards for Jaffa, and visit from thence the birthplace of Christianity. Jerusalem, Bethlehem and other sacred scenes will recall associations such as attach to no other places on the world's surface. From Jaffa a day's voyage will bring the vessel and its passengers to Alexandria, the port of Cairo, and the bearers of this most modern message from the West will have an opportunity of rambling under the shadow of the eternal pyramids and learning something of the wisdom of the Sphinx.

From Alexandria the vessel will turn homewards through the Straits of Messina, calling at Naples and landing the passengers at Marseilles.

It may not be out of place to say a word or two with reference to the traveling arrangements. Any American passenger will have the opportunity of joining the Baltic cruise for the very moderate sum of one hundred dollars, but this will not, of course, include the transatlantic journey.

The cost of the Mediterranean cruise, including the first-class transatlantic journey, by the American line both ways, with five days in London, will only be three hundred dollars. This is the cheapest first-class tour to the Holy Land that has ever been arranged.

Those who wish to join should write at once to the secretary, Review of Reviews, Astor Place, New York, as a number of English people are joining the Mediterranean cruise, and only about one hundred passengers will be taken in the party. HENRY S. LUNN.

London, England.

SUCCESSFUL MEETINGS.

DEAR UNION SIGNAL:—You ask me to write you something on "How to work up reform meetings and demonstrations," in the light of those with which I have been connected. That is rather a "large order."

A set of rules such as an experience of twenty years might suggest if set down on paper or put into cold type, would probably not prove effective for others' guidance. The whole question of successful organizing is really wrapped up in "knowing how," and that is very much more a matter of what the French call noas, than of precise knowledge. Ten thousand points are involved; they change in kaleidoscopic fashion with every fresh necessity; as two efforts of organizing on a big scale ever lend themselves to precisely the same treatment. A wide and firm grip of detail is always of first importance and a true organizer is ever on the alert both to see what needs to be done, and to do it—ever has a steady eye on all the component parts which are to be worked into the particular masses in hand, keeps a finger on the pulse of the constituencies whose interest is to be aroused, quickened, utilized; and another on an electric button which is to switch on or off as requirement dictates, the current of light, or of heat, or of both. He needs as well to know what not to do, and must calculate to a nicety how much publicity or whipping up is needed to compass a given end, and must be able to put on the brake when needed to avert too great success—since it sometimes happens that disappointment is caused by the calling together of crowds of people who cannot be accommodated. But all these things and many others vary with every changing case and after all, knowledge of movements, of places, of people—not only in the abstract but in detail, joined to the innate qualities of "grit" and "go," seem to me to include and cover all.

Yours very truly,

London, Eng. HENRY J. OSBORN.

BY MATILDA B. CARSE.

Have faith in God. For verily I say unto you, that whosoever shall say unto this mountain, be thou removed, and be thou cast into the sea; and shall not doubt in his heart, but shall believe that those things which he saith shall come to pass; he shall have whatsoever he saith.—Mark 11 :23.

We are constantly in receipt of letters from godly women, women of faith and prayer, who say, "We are praying for you that God may open the hearts of the people so that money may come to pay off the debt on the House Beautiful, and we fully believe every dollar of it will be raised." Such words stimulate faith amidst much of doubt and unbelief with which we have to cope. I felt the power of these prayers when I went forth on my campaign for large sums for the Temple last week, and God honored these prayers of faith. Mr. D. H. Burnham, Chicago, subscribed $5,000, Mrs. A. F. Chambers, Chicago, $5,000, Mrs. Dora M. Root, Chicago, $7,500. I am at work for other large sums. Our friends must not think the money is subscribed just the moment we ask for it; it often takes a great many calls and faith is sometimes taxed to the utmost. If money came easy we might get conceited and think the power was in us when it all comes from the ONE that has all power in heaven and earth. To go forth on such a mission feeling that you are walking with a host is a great secret of power; to go otherwise is to meet certain defeat.

In teaching a class in Sabbath-school I have formed the practice of presenting separately by name my unconverted scholars before the throne of grace. It has proved productive of almost certain conversion. I have now a list of names of rich people to whom I am going to apply for large sums for the Temple. I shall pray over each one by name—and I want my prayer to be supplemented by a host of women of faith. Dear hidden souls that understand the secret of God, I am going to form what will be known as the Temple prayer band. All women who have an unfaltering faith in God's promises are invited to join it. Their names and addresses will be entered in a little book which I will keep, and I will write them from time to time, giving the names of those I wish them to pray for. These names will not be published and will be kept secret between the hearer of prayer and myself. Let those who want to enter this compact write me at the Temple, and mark on the outside of their letters, "Personal."

A most generous response has come from the holders of Temple Trust Bonds, in sending their July coupons. They evidently do not want to be outdone by our noble Hollander, Mr. Von Scheltema. The kind letters which accompanied these were as much valued as what they enclosed. Coupons have been received from Mrs. Alice M. and Mrs. Martha Reynolds; Miss Louisa M. Rood, Miss G. A. Washburn, Mrs. Elisan Brown, Miss Lizzie and Miss Mattie Shumate, Sarah F. Jackson, Mrs. Mary H. Seymour, Mrs. Charlotte Call, Mrs. Richard Leach, Mr. Joshua L. Mills, Mrs. E. H. Billingsley, Miss Abbie R. Keach, Mrs. Albert Watson, Mrs. C. C. Spooner, E. M. Hawks, Mrs. C. N. Lyon and Mrs. C. W. Wallace. Many others have written and signified their intention of sending them, among whom are Mrs. Mary A. Livermore and Mrs. Cornelia E. Moorhead, of Philadelphia, both of whom are royal friends of the Temple.

One hundred Wheels have been ordered for Pretoria, South Africa, by Mrs. Mary W. Gray, and twenty for India by Miss H. P. Phillips, and yet it is safe to say there are hundreds of unions in our own land who have not as yet sent for a single Wheel. Such apathy seems unworthy of white-ribboners. When we come into our heritage and are reaping its rich fruits such unions will feel, to say the least, very uncomfortable. We are not asking any union to impoverish itself; we only ask a few hours' work from each person in it, for which the premium they secure pays them well. Below we give some testimonies from those who have tried it:

Harry Hardman, Idaho Falls, Idaho, writes: "Enclosed find filled Wheel. I secured this in one hour after it was given me by Mrs. R. Mitchell. I am ten years old, and belong to the L. T. L."

"I only spent four hours," writes Mrs. Z. M. Doolittle, South Bend, Ind., "in filling two Wheels. I shall try and fill four, so as to obtain the Temple souvenir spoon."

All orders for Temple Wheels, mite-boxes, and Baby Band lists, and everything pertaining to the Temple should be addressed to Mrs. Matilda B. Carse, The Temple, Chicago. Send two-cent stamp for either the Temple Wheel or mite-box. Money orders and checks should be made out in the name of Mr. G. B. Shaw, treasurer, and sent to our financial secretary, Miss Sara G. Johnson, Room 1111, The Temple, Chicago.

O FLAG OF MY COUNTRY!

BY H. VALLETTE WARREN.

[Mrs. Betsy Ross, of Philadelphia, cut the original paper pattern for the five-pointed star of "Old Glory," and made the first "star spangled banner," in 1777. For sixty years she made all the flags for the use of the government in her home, No. 239 Arch street, Philadelphia. This house is still standing.]

O flag of my country
With splendor aglow!
Thy roses' deep crimson,
Thy sparkle of snow!
Who sowed with bright starlight
Thy sky-tinted field?
What hand of what artist
Such beauty revealed?

By woman's deft fingers
Those clusters were sown;
She fashioned each star point
With instinct love's own;
And bound in one garland
Red rose and pure snow,
And gleam-lighted azure
Like midnight aglow.

O woman, brave hearted,
True, loyal and strong,
The soul of life's battle
With darkness and wrong,—
Old Glory remembers
Thy fashioning hand,
Exults in thy watchword—
"God—Home—Native Land."

O land of my fathers,
My childhood, my home,
Thy destiny brightens,
Thy glory must come!
The heart-love that fashioned
Thy banner so fair,
Is thine as of old-time
To do and to dare!

O God, we invoke thee
When perils arise;
The faith of brave woman
Hath power in the skies!
O give her Thy wisdom
To guide and ordain
The era that hastens
Messiah's glad reign.

"OLD GLORY'S" LAMENT.

BY MARIE J. HESSE.

One dreamy Indian summer day an invalid sat at her window looking out over the tops of the houses. Through the haze she saw the Stars and Stripes floating over the Anchor Street schoolhouse. Its folds waved gracefully in and out on the sweet pure air. It seemed so honored by its exalted position that it bowed majestically to all the children who passed through the doors, gratefully acknowledging the honor bestowed as they glanced respectfully at the emblem of their country. But as her eye swept over the horizon, another flag floated into sight. It was the one over Jim McKey's palatial saloon. The sight startled her for a moment; she nervously closed her eyes, for she dare not look upon them and draw comparisons; it was too wearing for her poor worn body, and she soon fell into a restless sleep. The flags drew nearer. Somehow she could hear the flutter of their folds, which soon merged into a conversation, to which she was a most interested listener.

A shout from below caused the schoolhouse flag to stop fluttering and listen smilingly to the young voices that sent up a rousing cheer for their beloved Stars and Stripes. It unfurled its beautiful folds and waved and waved, joyfully, gratefully, to the rollicking youngsters below.

"What was that?" asked the saloon flag.

"Oh!" answered the schoolhouse flag a little proudly, "that's the way the children act every time they see me. You know I'm the emblem of their country, and I stand for great principles, like freedom and liberty. I am reverenced by all true-hearted Americans, and honored by all other nations."

"Hold on, my friend, not so fast," said the saloon flag, a little irritated. "You can't claim the monopoly on that kind of thing. I was manufactured just where you were. I have just as good material in me as you have, have just as many stars and stripes and am the emblem of my country and stand for the same principles you do, but—but," continued the saloon flag, growing bewildered, "I don't understand it,—the children never salute me at all. Many times as I have seen them trooping this way I have floated out bravely and fluttered and waved my best, but they never seem to notice me. I intend to keep on trying, though, and you shall see that the dear children love me, too."

"Oh, well, never mind, dear neighbor," said the schoolhouse flag, wishing to be conciliatory and on friendly terms with the saloon flag, "I wouldn't feel badly about it; it's evidently not your fault."

The saloon flag was thoughtful for some time. At last it said confidentially:

"You are very kind, I am sure. I believe I have the clew to this mystery and I don't mind telling you how my heart has been burdened for so long. Let me whisper it to you. I have been uncomfortable for ever so long about this lack of respect. When they first strung me up on this gilded pole over this elegant building, I was very proud and looked scornfully down on those dingy fellows in the war museum, that folks rave over. I was so bright and new and they were so tattered and ragged. They looked like tramps and so do those flags that have stood like guards over the old fort,—veterans every one of them. I don't mind telling you, too, that I felt superior, even to you! I felt very fine when I looked down on this beautiful stone pile, those gilded doors and stained glass windows. I must have been a very ignorant sort of flag to think myself so fortunate, but I have learned better. I would gladly change places with the dirtiest tramp of a flag I ever saw, but—I—can't! I'm—a—slave!"

At this sad confession both flags hung limp and sorrowing, the one in its misery the other in sympathy.

Then the schoolhouse flag brightened up a little and said: "Cheer up, friend, it may not be so bad as that."

The saloon flag sighed, "My only hope of release is to grow so dingy that I will be no longer wanted. Oh, I will so gladly die, rather than live in disgrace."

"Tell me all about it," urged the school flag.

"You are a friend, indeed," answered the other, "and I will tell you all about it."

"I was well satisfied with myself till one day I began to notice this neglect. I know my mission is to arouse patriotism and turn the thoughts of my countrymen to their country, to love her more and to make better citizens of them. So I began to watch those who went in and out of those doors beneath and began to think I was not fulfilling my mission. Instead of these men growing purer in heart and nobler, they often came out reeling, speaking foul language; and, let me whisper it, crimes, awful crimes have been committed in there. I kept right on watching, for I had grown tired of my vanity and longed for the love of these people. Sometimes my heart would rise when I heard shouts coming from those doors and I would say, 'Oh, they have not forgotten me after all.' But when I listened closely I heard only ribald songs and wicked words and blasphemy. My heart nearly broke when I saw those men go home and cruelly beat their wives and children. Oh, my friend, I was so miserable that I wrapt myself about the pole and wept and wept and could do nothing else. But my owner saw me and rudely pulled me from my sorrow and commanded me to float again.

"Oh, I have suffered such shame ever since, and those young men who ought to have my watchful protection have been lured into this snare by the sight of me! I decided that I would point away from the door as much as I could, and now when a young man enters I plead in my mute way for him to turn before it is too late!"

Again the flags hung limp and refused to be comforted by the soothing breeze.

At last the wind whispered something into their ears which caused them to loosen their hold and fly out almost angrily. Soon the wind grew fiercer and fiercer. It whirled and twisted at the saloon flag's cord. It beat madly against the pole and then with all its fury it rushed upon the flag and joyously tore it from its slavery. When the poor sick woman awoke from her sleep, the two flags were lovingly entwined in each other's embrace over the Anchor Street schoolhouse.

FREDERICK DOUGLASS.

[Selections from address by President J. E. Rankin, Howard University.]

He sent a man before them, . . . who was sold for a servant: whose feet they hurt with fetters. He was laid in iron. Until the time that his word came: the word of the Lord tried him.—Ps. 105:17-19.

There is but one parallel to the life of Frederick Douglass and this is found in the Bible; the Bible, which surpasses all other literature. There is no narrative which in natural pathos and eloquence so reminds me of the history of the favorite son of Jacob as the story of Frederick Douglass. And I find God in one as much as the other. I think of all the men in his generation so momentous of great events, so influential upon future humanity, no man is more to be congratulated—could human congratulations reach him—than this man who now sleeps in death's marble before us. God made him great; yes, but God also gave him a great opportunity, and that opportunity began when he was born a slave.

If he had not been born of a slave mother, one potent factor in the great work put upon the men and women of his generation would have been wanting. God wanted a witness. After Dante wrote his "Inferno" the people of Florence said as he walked their streets, "There goes the man who has been in hell!" What the cause of freedom wanted was a man who had been in hell; in the hell of human slavery, an eyewitness of the dark possibilities and experiences of the system into which he was born; who had felt the iron enter his own soul; who knew what it was to be compelled to yearn in vain for mother-love; to fight his way, inch by inch, into the simplest rudiments of human speech, of human knowledge, into any of the prerogatives of manhood.

I think that Frederick Douglass is to be congratulated on the kind of tuition that came to him—no, that God had provided for him through these anti-slavery associates. They were regarded as the offscouring of the earth, and yet many of them received their culture in the choicest New England schools, and they sprang from the noblest New England stock. And when he went abroad it was his privilege to hear such men as Cobden and Bright and Disraeli and O'Connell and Lord John Russell and Lord Brougham. These men Mr. Douglass studied, admired, analyzed.

Then in the third place, Mr. Douglass is to be congratulated on the wonderful contrasts and antitheses of life. If we go on in the Psalm from which I have quoted we read: "The king sent and loosed him; even the ruler of the people and let him go free; he made him lord of his house and ruler of all his substance; to bind his princes at his pleasure and teach his senators wisdom." The king that loosed this man was the King of Kings and not Pharaoh, even as of old, till after the Angel of War had smitten the first born of the land. If we except this prime minister of Pharaoh, perhaps no man who ever lived ever had such extremes and vicissitudes of experience as Mr. Douglass. There is probably no civilized nation on earth that has not been made acquainted with his wonderful story.

Perhaps he never saw a prouder day than when, as United States marshal—an official once so offensive to the sensibilities of a free people, because of his participation in the arrest and return of fugitive slaves—he accompanied President-elect Garfield from the Senate chamber to the platform of the portico, where he took the oath of office and delivered the inaugural address.

And if we turn from his public to his private career, what more striking and unusual scene, save perhaps Joseph's forgiveness of his brethren, ever was introduced into the lot of man than his visit to his old and dying master so many years after his escape from bondage? Was there ever an experience more pathetic? Was there ever forgiveness more generous? We pray, "Forgive us our debts as we forgive our debtors." This our great Teacher has taught us. The spirit of forgiveness is the basis on which we stand before God, who has so much to forgive in us; is the spirit which fits us for the kingdom of heaven.

I come now to the last ground, on which I think Mr. Douglass should be congratulated, By many it would be thought of first. Mr. Douglass was fortunate in his endowments as an orator. Eloquence is virtue. This the Germans have taught us. That is, there must be virtuous character, genuine truth and manliness behind all eloquent speech. A crafty, deceitful, dishonest, dishonorable man cannot be an eloquent one. He can deceive only the groundlings. His eloquence is all a sham and mockery.

. . . . . .

Gentle with a womanly gentleness; wise with a wisdom beyond that of the universities; patient, long-suffering and kind; always ready to forgive; always ready with the word of cheer; this is the man we mourn! Lips from which have fallen such golden eloquence, eyes from which have flashed such radiance; heart with such great throbs of sympathy for all God's downtrodden ones; hands which were always open and outstretched toward the wretched; these were his; these belonged to that man whom we call Frederick Douglass. Through the change of the greatest and most eventful period in American history not once did he lose his footing; not once did he forfeit the companionship of our greatest; ay, not once did he lose his hold upon God.

THE FOURTH OF JULY.

BY MARIA SPEER BISHOP.

(Age nine.)

Hear the fire crackers,
  Oh, what a noise!
Up go the sky rockets
  With a shout from the boys.

Hurrah! hurrah!
  Hear them shout,
Up go the flags,
  See them moving about.

The noise, oh! how loud
  The cannons are roaring;
O'er the heads of the crowd
  The American eagle is soaring.

What a grand holiday
  Is the Fourth of July,
It's the birthday of our nation,—
  That's why the flags fly!

COBBLETON TAKES A "HOLT."

BY MABEL GIFFORD.

"What are them children a-hatchin' up now?" said lame Ben, as he limped into the post-office.

"I dunno," answered Josephens Josselyn, who had come in for his paper. "Some mischief, I'll be bound."

"Well, we'll just keep an eye on the kids an' mebbe we'll sight 'em at some of their tricks," said Josephens, "we're amazin' good friends, me 'n the kids."

So lame Ben and Josephens kept an eye on the "kids," and one day they were rewarded. Lame Ben came upon a little company down in "Clark's meadow" under the willows. Edmund Josselyn was leading off a grand march.

"Hi, hi, hi, what's this?" cried lame Ben.

"Would you tell?" "Yes, let's tell him." "We're rehearsing for the Fourth. It's a secret."

Then they all shouted again, and locking hands declared he should not go until he had promised not to tell.

"What's them children up to?"

"Oh, some of Maggie Josselyn's hatchin' up, most like. Showin' off a new game, mebbe. Her head's full of cranks," answered Ben.

The last meeting was held the night before the Fourth. Every girl tripped down to the willows with something hidden under her apron, and the boys galloped down with bulging jacket pockets. When all were assembled they donned paper hats of red, white and blue and carried tin horns of various sizes in their hands.

Just as the red sun dipped below the horizon the peaceful quiet of Cobbleton was turned to a bedlam of toots and shrieks and uproarious laughter, and to every one they met, or spied at a door or window, they shouted, "Show to-morrow in Jack Kenney's tent. Ten cents a ticket."

Cobbleton being a quiet place was very curious to see what the children had "hatched up." Accordingly a goodly company gathered at Jack Kennedy's tent next day. The rousing temperance and patriotic songs were more than worth the ten cents. Many of the children belonged to the Loyal Temperance Legion, and the others had learned the temperance songs and were eager to join, waiting only for their parents' consent.

"I didn't know we were coming to a temperance time," grumbled one of the men.

"Wouldn't you like to know certain sure that your boy would never be a drunkard?" asked an earnest faced little maid of the grumbler.

As he couldn't very well deny that he would, and rather feared the consequence of saying yes, he hesitated.

"This is the way to be sure," continued the little maid. "You begin temperance and you keep on being temperance; then you are temperance."

The man smiled a little at this logic.

"Now if you will just let Fred put his name on this card—he wants to like everything—"

"Well, go ahead, I dunno's I object," said the man.

"Don't you want your boy to be a smart man?" asked one of the boys of a shaggy-bearded farmer.

Now this man was very proud of his son, and every one knew that this son had never yet begun temperance, but that he had begun the other, intemperance.

"Of course you do," said the boy. "Every father does. But intemperance don't make smart men. There's no knowing what John will be if he is not temperance."

"He's over there, go and talk to him," said the father.

"Oh, but he won't unless you do. He thinks it's smart to do as you do. He just said, 'My father ain't a drunkard, and he never signed any pledge.'"

John looked across the tent in amaze to see his father signing his name with a good deal of flourish to one of the pledge cards.

In a twinkling he was beside him. "I say, father, what you doing?" asked John.

"I thought I would help 'em along a little," said John's father. "There's a good many don't need pledges, and then again there's others that do. And we have got to set 'em an example."

"That's so," said John. "I guess I'll put my name down," and down went John's name with a good deal of flourish on one of the pledge cards.

So it went on until the children nearly lost their heads for delight, so many names were signed to the cards. They could hardly collect their wits to finish the "show."

While the cards were being signed the "show" was arranging itself behind the curtain.

They came out one by one, and one of the boys explained what or who they represented. There was a gorgeous Columbus and a remarkable Indian, a fierce and stout Miles Standish, and a pert Priscilla. There was a Frances Willard, and a Mrs. Livermore and a Neal Dow. There was a Mother Goose and a "Jo" right out of the story book. There was a lively little man all covered with gold dollars whose name was Money, and he led by the hand a fair-faced maid named Love. Love and money, the boy explained, was what kept all the rest a-going. There was a jolly farmer, a carpenter and a Miss Fashion; such a motley company! When they had been named, and were placed, they sang, "Onward, Christian Soldiers." After that Frances Willard stepped out and said that the money they had taken was to be given to Thomas Blake to help him to go to the Temperance Hospital. Such cheering as there was!

You see Thomas Blake was a poor dissipated fellow who had tried to reform. Now he was sick and must be taken to a hospital, and because the children did not want him to be tempted, they wished to send him to the Temperance Hospital where no alcohol would be given him.

"Children are cur'us creeturs," said lame Ben, "mightily amoosin' too," and he laughed as he thought of the queer "show" he had attended. "I declare if I don't think there's more kingdom come in one of their little pates than is in a hull regiment of us folks. I've half a mind to take a holt and help 'em out a little!"

And he did. He went all about the town telling the story of Thomas Blake and the "Fourth of July show" until he had enough more dimes to put with the children's to send the sick boy to the hospital.

SUMMER PRIZE ESSAY CONTEST.

To the boy or girl who writes the best and most helpful account of What I Have Done for Temperance this Summer, will be given the new game published by the Woman's Temperance Publishing Association, entitled, "Illustrated Authors." The essays must be written on one side of the paper; are not limited in length; and must be received not later than September 1. Be sure to give your age.

WHAT I HAVE LEARNED ABOUT THE WORLD'S PETITION.

BY GEORGE DEVINNEY.

[Essay no. 6.]

The word polyglot means the same thing in many languages, hence, polyglot petition means a petition in many languages. Over a thousand yards of white muslin, bound on one side with blue and on the other side with red braid have been used in mounting the names of the signers.

The principal object of this Petition is to prevent governments from granting licenses for the sale of tobacco, alcohol and opium, because these articles injure both the body and the brain, besides bringing misery upon other people.

There are nearly fifty countries represented in this Petition and about as many languages.

The United States has the greatest number of signers, Great Britain comes next, with three hundred fifty thousand, Canada with sixty-seven thousand, then Burmah, and afterward come the rest of the foreign countries with more or less signers. There are one million one hundred and twenty-one thousand actual signers, beside five million signers by attestation. Although this is a woman's Petition there are both men and women signers, including people who are officers of societies.

That great Prohibition man, Neal Dow, heads the list, while a little farther down is found the name of Joseph Cook. Besides these two well-known names are the names of a great many other noted people.

The people who are circulating this Petition will not stop until they secure two million actual signers besides the signers by attestation. The Petition has already been presented to President Cleveland, who spoke kindly of it but did not sign it. After awhile it will be taken across the Atlantic Ocean and presented to the heads of various governments there.

Since this is such a worthy Petition, and has so many signers, it surely ought to accomplish some good, which if it does will gladden the hearts of many of the United States as well as those of people in other countries.

INDEPENDENCE DAY.

There's just one day in all the year
  When no one says, "Be quiet!"
And boys and girls are let alone
  To make no end of —.
Then cannon break in thunder gusts
  From forts and arsenals,
And flags outstream, like flowers in bloom,
  From windows, roofs and —.

Then you should hear the crackers go!
  A pack set off in a barrel
Makes such a jolly sound, you —,
  Like giants in a —!
And oh, the bells that swing and chime,
  And ring and rock the spires,
And the fairy lights, at evening —,
  That blaze in rainbow —!

The lovely rockets please me best,
  They shoot so grand and high,
Then drop again their golden stars
  In showers from the —.
Three cheers for Independence Day,
  When drums are beat in chorus,
And trumpets blow and bugles peal,
  And our flag is streaming — —!

PARTYISM vs. PATRIOTISM.

THE UNION SIGNAL readers are especially favored in being the first audience to "hear" Mr. Woolley's stirring address, "The Voices of the Century." They are the only persons who will read his great Fourth of July speech in advance or at the time of its delivery before the National Conference of Reforms in New York.

The plan therein outlined by Mr. Woolley for the campaign of 1896 is bold, striking and original. It has almost the ring of a challenge—a challenge not less to party Prohibitionists than to professed enemies of the drink traffic who vote with the liquor parties. It is a plan for union of prohibition reformers, which, if practicable, opens up possibilities that are dazzling, not only for the cause of prohibition, but for all other reforms in the order of their ripening.

Taking for granted that "a large per cent of each of the parties is ready for prohibition on grounds of principle—enough in the aggregate to win it and enforce it, too," there remains but one sensible thing for the declared enemies of the rum power to do, and that is what Mr. Woolley suggests—effect an interpartisan union on the question of prohibition, leaving the agitation of other questions to be carried on within party lines. In other words, harvest the prohibition sentiment, which, taking the people as a whole, is undoubtedly the ripest of all reform sentiment, and leave other reforms to mature under the effective discipline of partisan politics. That political parties are excellent mediums through which the questions of the day receive the light and air so necessary to the ripening process the cause of prohibition amply testifies.

Many people doubtless will feel inclined to dispute the statement that there are in the different parties enough anti-liquor men to win and enforce prohibition, and will see good reason to pronounce Mr. Woolley's scheme "visionary." Well, so was the scheme which led to the discovery of a new continent; so was the scheme of our forefathers, which resulted in the birth of a mighty republic; so was the scheme of the old Abolitionists. The beginnings of the "grand old Republican party" itself were visionary in the extreme. What great achievement can be shown in all history which was not in its conception regarded as "visionary"?

If the Christian voters in each of the four political parties are sincere in their denunciations of the drink traffic, and honestly desire to find some way out of the dilemma in which they find themselves—and we think they are and do—they will be ready to give earnest, prayerful thought to a plan which looks toward a combination of Prohibition forces "In His Name." Here is offered a simple platform of four planks upon which every foe of the liquor traffic can have no hesitancy in standing; here a plan which enables the Christian to vote as he prays and at the same time to "stay with his party," which however old and ragged and rotten, is still dear to him because it is his.

At any rate an attempt to carry out a campaign plan on the lines suggested by Mr. Woolley would result in revealing the relative strength of principle worship and party worship in the moral citizenship of our land. It would furnish an excellent opportunity for weighing in the balance partyism and patriotism.

The trouble with most well-meaning temperance people in the liquor parties is that they do not clearly distinguish between partyism and patriotism—and this is not to be wondered at. To see clearly a man must be on good terms with his conscience, and this the Christian Republican voter, the Christian Democratic voter and the Christian Populist voter is not. Therefore we naturally expect to find the Christian Prohibition voter, who is on good terms with his conscience, the most ready to "sacrifice" party on the altar of patriotism. One point of difference between the partisan Prohibitionist and other partyists is, we allow ourselves to think that the former is willing to let his party die when by dying it can best serve its country, while the latter allows the very life of the country to be imperilled in order to "save the party." To the Prohibitionist party is but the outward manifestation of an idea, its mere shell, an instrument in the hand of progress, ephemeral in its very nature, and when he sees that the time has come when some other form of embodiment is better adapted to the expression of that idea, he will lay his party aside with as little regret as the righteous man lays aside his material body—regarding it as having been a factor, and a very important factor in the development of that of which it was for a brief time the embodiment, but as of no further use.

Our new Declaration of Independence should be aimed at the tyranny of the partisan spirit which, by reason of its powerful hold upon good men, is continually betraying the Christ into the hands of His enemies.

Let us take the liquor question, not out of politics, but out of partyism, and make the Christian voter free!

THE REVIVAL OF BUSINESS.

That the terrible business paralysis is at an end is not a subject of controversy. On every hand are the evidences of reviving trade. A feeling of intense relief pervades all circles. The country seems like a man just recovering from a severe fit of sickness and exulting to feel the strong currents of health once more bounding through his veins.

There can be no doubt of it, the wheels of business are again in motion, another era of prosperity—of speculation, is before us to be closed, as surely as the world continues to revolve around the sun, by another crash, another period of depression and suffering. For the unfortunate, amazing but incontrovertible truth is that, though the nation and the world suffer periodically from attacks of the same disease, those to whom we should naturally look for a solution of our difficulties, whether statesmen or politicians, have no new diagnosis of the case to offer, no remedies to suggest other than those we have already tried again and again with such woeful lack of success. Nor have any thorough-going measures been inaugurated to investigate the cause of the trouble whose dangerous symptoms increase in severity with each return.

As usual, the political parties have their own solutions to offer and both are striving to make political capital out of both disease and recovery. The Republican papers claim that the panic was caused by the Democratic victories which preceded it, and that the revival of business is due to the election of a Republican congress which curtails the power of a Democratic administration, and to the assurance which the country feels that the Republicans will sweep everything in 1896. This, it is asserted, has restored confidence, the necessary basis of business prosperity. Democratic papers, on the other hand, claim that the depression was the result of the previous Republican rule, and that we are now beginning to feel the effects of Democratic tariff reform.

In the meantime, while the sweeping Republican victories without doubt indicate a feeling, not necessarily of the majority of voters, but of those who hold the balance of power, that a change of parties was a possible escape from our troubles, a very large part of the most intelligent people in the country put no confidence whatever in the claims of either party. Very largely the thinking people believe that another financial panic is sure to come in due time whatever party or parties may hold the reins of power. In spite of this conviction, we draw a long breath of relief as we enter upon the new era of prosperity and rush on to the assured outcome.

So it seems and so to a very sad extent it really is; yet we believe that quietly and unostentatiously forces are at work which will eventually solve our difficulties. Those who claim to be the natural guardians of our political interests are doing little, if anything, to save the nation from a repetition of the calamities through which we have just passed, but the people themselves are neither ignorant of nor indifferent to the perils of the situation.

Not long ago we read an editorial in a daily paper which argued in this wise: The generality of people, all, indeed, except those who make a special study of it, are incapable of forming a sane idea on the subject of national finance, and consequently the only safe policy for the "dear people" to pursue is to recognize their incapacity and leave the subject entirely to experts, as they leave the treatment of disease to physicians. The only imaginable reason for such an editorial being written is that an editorial had to be forthcoming and the editor was at his "wits' end" for something with which to fill the space. For, if there were no other consideration, any such suggestion is merely a waste of time and strength.

The time has come when "the people" will have their own opinions, wise or otherwise, on every question that presents itself. Moreover, in the utter and hopeless disagreement of the "doctors" the people are forced to decide between them at every election. To be sure, in the case of the physicians of the body politic as well as in those of the human body, each opposing set claims to be the one only "school," but this claim can hardly be said to make it easier for the people to decide to which physicians they shall entrust the care of the case, and, in face of the plain facts, they may well doubt whether or not finance has become an exact science and the experts have chased down the last fact in it.

The editorial is valuable simply because it suggests the only hopeful phase in the whole matter, namely, that the people generally are aroused concerning the situation; that, while to the superficial view, the country is thinking only of present relief, that while no congressional committee is making plans to avert a return of our calamities, and politicians have nothing new to say regarding either cause or cure, the people are more distrustful than ever of the "experts" and are determined to know for themselves the causes which periodically precipitate such terrible financial disasters. There was a time when "the people" were supposed to be utterly incapable of managing all affairs of government, but to the sorrow of despotic rulers they persisted in working out their own solution of the various problems involved with the result of giving us an enduring political system based upon the liberty of the individual.

If they have not succeeded in remedying all evils, at least they have immeasurably surpassed the "experts." We have faith to believe that they will succeed quite as well in the present case. Already they have probed deeper into the disease than all the experts. Some of them have become convinced that while the tariff and the silver question has each its important bearing on the subject, neither nor both lie at the root of the matter.

There is a strong, deep undercurrent of feeling that a disease deeper seated and more far-reaching than any errors concerning these two questions is necessary to account for the terrible and growing disorders of our social and financial system. The result is that the study of sociology is to the front. There is an ever increasing demand for it in our educational institutions; the Chautauquas yearly give it greater recognition, and private clubs are making it a profound study. It is one of, if not the leading question of the day, and the fact that it is so constitutes the only ground for hope that the disorders of our body politic will not result in the final destruction of our nation and our civilization.

TRUE PATRIOTISM.

In different ages of the world, the same qualities of character have been variously regarded; some generations even considering as vices what others counted virtues. But the sentiment of patriotism, in one form or another, has always held a high place in the esteem of men. Under varying circumstances, it has assumed very different forms. At some times it has been confined to loyalty to a person, a great leader, at others to a class or party because in the cruder, simpler forms of government, before the growth of institutions, one person or a small party embodied the vital ideas around which the life of a people crystallized. In modern times patriotism has developed into the far nobler sentiment of devotion to a nation, to the whole people who live under the same government and the same flag. Already prophecies begin to appear of the time when, "in the parliament of man, the federation of the world," the unity of the human race shall be recognized, not as a sentiment but as a reality, and patriotism shall measure up to the Christian ideal of unselfish devotion to all mankind.

But in this season when the whole nation goes wild, ostensibly with joy over the heroic deeds which more than a hundred years ago made us a nation, it is well to consider what true patriotism in its present form is, what is intelligent love for our country. Our great ancestors decreed that the people should year after year celebrate the event of the Declaration of Independence by the ringing of bells and the firing of cannon, and the people have religiously carried out those instructions to the present time. Yet the conviction is forced upon us that the demonstration is in the letter rather than the spirit, and that in the ordinary Fourth of July celebration there is very little intelligent patriotism. From the small boy who burns up cities with his firecrackers and blows out his own eyes with toy cannons, on through the list of those who consider the privilege of celebrating the Fourth one of their birthrights, albeit they know not whether it is the day on which St. Patrick drove the snakes out of Ireland or Columbus discovered America, the people who "load up a steamboat with youth and beauty, and pies and doughnuts," and go off on a picnic, to the merchants who join in a procession whose chief object is the advertising of their wares, there is manifest an infinitesimal appreciation of the value of our institutions and liberties, or of recognition of the heroism of the men who won them for us.

There is also a great deal of talk both on the Fourth of July and on other days which, while it passes for patriotism, has little of the genuine article in it. Praise of the deeds of those who went before us, pride in what our race has accomplished, are good things in their way. It has been truly said that it is a grand thing for a race to have traditions, and a very sad thing for a people to have none. More than once, a people in the midst of well-nigh insuperable difficulties have been inspired to courage and final victory by the memory of what their fathers have done before them. But, like other good things, the memory of the great achievements of our ancestors may be converted into a curse. Such memories are a blessing and an inspiration to the children who treasure them as reminders that they should and may be worthy of their fathers; but, when a people become satisfied to rest upon the deeds of the founders of the nation, when their only cause for boasting is that they are the sons of their fathers, then the very greatness of the fathers becomes the weakness and ultimate ruin of the children.

We have reason to be proud of the achievements of the Anglo-Saxon race—of some of them; we have equally good reason to be ashamed of some others. But we need to remember that the past deeds of the Anglo-Saxon race will not avail for the future. One might suppose to hear some people talk that it had been foreordained from the creation that the Anglo-Saxon was to rule the earth. The truth is that what the race has already nobly done simply makes possible a future of yet greater glory and usefulness. Whether or not it fulfills the promise of its past, depends not on what it has done but upon what it yet shall do. To us as to the Jews the commission has been given, "In thee shall all the nations of the earth be blessed." To us as to the Jews remains the possibility of utter failure, of ultimate ruin, if we are faithless to God and duty. Extravagant race pride is in itself a sign of weakness. In all the dead nations of the past race pride was strongest in the days of their decline. If we delude ourselves with the mischievous notion that God has created us inherently superior to all other races of mankind, we are in grave danger of trusting to that supposed superiority instead of to our own endeavors. As surely as we do we shall go down in ruin as other nations have gone before us. And the most despised of the nations of the earth may rise upon our ruins, for history constantly asserts that the "last shall be first and the first last."

True and wise patriotism is that which not only appreciates the achievements of our ancestors but also recognizes their mistakes, which not only rejoices in the greatness of our country but frankly acknowledges and faces its weakness and its sins.

"OUGHT" IN POLITICS.

Students of history have noted as a characteristic of Anglo-Saxon peoples that they never revolutionize for mere theories. A thing may be clearly wrong in the abstract, but until it presses hard on some one, it is let alone.

This method has obvious advantages, and experience has vindicated its wisdom as a general rule of conduct. It has saved our people from the chaos and anarchy into which other races have at times been thrown by tearing down their institutions and attempting to begin de novo from a basis of abstract principles. Because of the impossibility of calculating beforehand all of the effects of a proposed change, it is better, as a rule, to make reforms as experience shows they are needed. But there is no doubt that we have carried our hobby too far. We too often go to the opposite extreme of refusing altogether to take into account the truth that "right is right" and that whether we can see the way or not, right will as surely prove practicable as God is God. We will not take a step by faith, but demand to see all the way we are to walk. However wrong or injurious the established order of things may be, we will not consent to a change unless we can just see how the change can be successfully made.

The liquor traffic is admitted to be an unmitigated evil; it destroys home, ruins manhood, curses womanhood, blights childhood. It has absolutely no feature to commend it, but, so far as average human shortsightedness can discern, "prohibition will not prohibit," therefore we do, not what we ought to do, but we compromise and allow the evil thing to continue to curse the nation on condition of its submitting to certain regulations and paying part of its ill-gotten gains into the common treasury. If a worse example of "indulgence" money is to be found in the history of the world, we have yet to learn of it. And so through the list of evils, we try to modify them; we haven't enough faith in abstract right and its final triumph to take the only attitude we ought to take and be satisfied with nothing less than their complete annihilation.

"Stop talking about what we ought to do," said a gentleman recently, in an argument with a white-ribboner on Prohibition. And his words but express the too general sentiment of humanity. Not what we ought but what we can do is considered the only statesmanlike query. Only women and children, and possibly their political peers,—idiots, will concern themselves with the other question. And yet the one thing which the politics of this country needs above everything else is the introduction of the new and purifying element of "oughtness" into the froth and foam of its corruption. Let but the question, "What ought we to do?" become the all-important one with our legislators and the miracle of the resuscitation of the dry bones will become an event of our day and land.

President Robinson of Brown University has clearly set forth the truth that all departments of natural law are in harmony and that "among enlightened peoples the one aim of all civil legislation should be to bring positive enactments into perfect agreement with every species of natural law, mechanical, chemical, and moral," and that disaster comes surely to the individual or nation that loses faith in moral obligations.

A bill which provided for the draining of a city, based on the supposition that water ran up hill, would serve to make those who framed it the butt of ridicule and scorn as the veriest ignoramuses. Yet a statute which ignores physical law is not a whit more absurd than the one which ignores the moral law of the universe by legalizing crime, and is infinitely less harmful in its results. Statutes framed in defiance of physical law will simply become dead letters, but those which disregard moral law will, if persisted in, destroy the nation which enacts them and leave of its civilization not one stone upon another. Lyman Beecher truthfully and forcefully said, "There is nothing a free people ought to do that they cannot do." It should be added, the only things that a free people can do ultimately are the things they ought to do, and if they refuse to do them they will but compass their own sure destruction.

When July skies seem "brazen" and summer breezes are temporarily turned to furnace blasts that leave the most robust frame relaxed and palpitating, kind hearts are touched with a pitiful thought of the children of the poor, who in heated tenements and malodorous courts suffer and pine away as any frail flower of the field would, shut away from God's free air, parched by drought or burned under a pitiless sun. The "city by the lake," thriving, crowded, hurrying Chicago, has one charity that more than any other, perhaps, receives abounding commendation and grateful patronage,—the Chicago Daily News Fresh Air Fund. On the lake shore—or, more correctly, beside the lake shore, for it is built directly over the water—is the building fitly named, "the white house of mercy." Aside from the doctor's office, guests' reception room, matron's room, dormitory, kitchen, bath-rooms, etc., are the broad open verandas, where hundreds of babies' hammocks swing in the life-giving air blowing from broad Lake Michigan. Here are brought little ones in every stage of poverty, dirt and disease and here they are cared for absolutely free of charge. Blindness is cured, threatened death averted, starved bodies fed, prematurely aged features made to shine with baby laughter.

The Sanitarium is supported entirely by voluntary offerings, and only through the columns of the daily press—led by its patron and founder, the Chicago Daily News—are appeals made in the interests of needy babies.

In the last report of this work during sixteen summer weeks 10,560 sick babies, 14,179 mothers and 36,635 children were cared for. Eight hundred sick persons a day can be accommodated. During 1894 the Sanitarium—and that means the host of kind helpers who aid in its support and give their services directly to it—is credited with having been instrumental in saving the lives of 2,321 infants aside from the many spared from serious illness by fresh air, food and attention.

May He who loves every little life that comes into the world reward with His own gracious "Inasmuch" every one who has remembered the suffering children and helped them into a sweeter and brighter existence.

Money has been well defined as that which can procure admission everywhere except to heaven and buy all things except happiness; and character has been called "the stamp on our souls of the free choice of good or evil that we have made through life." Money cannot buy character. This is its supreme disability and the world's hope. The church has been called a society for making men like Christ and earth like heaven, and Jesus has been defined as the human side of the mind of God. From the reflections that such considerations cannot fail to suggest, mankind is slowly evolving that transformation of thought, purpose and affection whereby we prepare for a higher and holier life.

It has been well said that "diseases, doubts and vices are all globe-trotters." The W. C. T. U. is therefore wise to send out its round-the-world missionaries to apply a world-encircling remedy.

The bright young journalist, Alice Stone Blackwell, Lucy Stone's daughter, winds up a reply to some objections made against suffrage for women as follows: "There is the fable of a company of beavers who consoled themselves on parting because they would all meet again in the hatter's shop. And the unthinking women who ridicule the thought of voting, and still interest themselves in social reform, will be certain to find themselves, some fine morning, in the camp of woman suffrage, but with a wholeness which the beavers lacked."

It has been said by them of old time that women were afraid of mice, but their attack on Tammany (victory over Tammany) proves that at least they are not afraid of larger game, for they have throttled a hyena. For my part, I have no confidence in the cheap statement that women are not brave. Take a recent illustration—one of the hundreds that we read in the newspapers. In Fort Scott, Kansas, a daring robber entered the cashier's office of a wholesale business house and commanded the young lady cashier, who was alone, to open the safe. She refused; he drew a revolver and with a curse commanded her to comply with his demand. The door of the safe was closed but not locked, and the young woman stepped toward it and grasped the combination. The robber thought she was in the act of opening the safe when in fact she was locking it before his face. She turned the combination knob and standing erect, exclaimed, "Now shoot!" The fellow uttered an oath, pocketed his revolver and fled.

It has been well said that the only honest and high minded way of getting on in the world is by helping the world to get on. A man is never greater than the service he renders.

The sanctity of the ballot is nowhere better understood than in the French Republic. The ballot-box is never deposited in a tavern, a bar or a liquor shop of any kind. The judges sit with heads uncovered, and would not dream of using cigar smoke as incense before the shrine of the goddess of liberty. No Frenchman, whether he come as near being a city rough as a Frenchman can approach that crude estate, or whether he be a country clodhopper in sabots, fails to take off whatever head covering he may have on when he approaches the ballot-box, which is to him a veritable ark of the covenant.

What we want is the Christianity of conduct. We have had every other kind. We want this conduct in its corporate capacity, and we have found out that the way to get it, and the only way, is to put the full power of citizenship into the hands of that class which, men say, has thus far "personally conducted" itself the best,—taking the ballot away from no one who now enjoys it, but adding to the army a contingent of more trustworthy recruits.

Mrs. Isabella Bird Bishop bears high testimony to the value of medical missions. She says that there are now one hundred and sixty-nine missionaries abroad who hold British medical diplomas, and nineteen of these are women. She declares that "the life of an Oriental woman is really without hope, her circumstances developing fierce passions of hatred, jealousy and intrigue, while her better nature is altogether stunted." Mrs. Bishop had a medicine chest with her, and she states that women came to her, literally hundreds of times, and asked for something to make a favorite wife look ugly or odious, or to destroy a favorite wife, or the favorite son of a favorite wife. She thinks that the position of women in Mohammedan countries is more degraded than in any other part of the world. Statements like these cannot be encouraging to a certain American consul, who, after having spent some years in Oriental countries, has come home decked out in the full costume of a Mohammedan and set at work to convert his countrymen to that faith, doing so—as he has the impudence to declare—"in the interest of women."

WISCONSIN.

HER MAJORITY ATTAINED.

Wisconsin's coming-of-age convention was held in Fond du Lac, June 4–6, and doubtless many pleasant and helpful memories linger with each of the one hundred and thirty-five delegates. Brave Fond du Lac union, with only twenty members, deserves great credit for the excellence of its preparation for and entertainment of the convention. To us who came and enjoyed it all there seemed no omission of the smallest thoughtful service which could add to our comfort and convenience.

So well had these faithful workers announced the event that in spite of commencement exercises and other local attractions, large numbers came out to our day and evening meetings. The tired workers were cheered and strengthened by the assurance that the convention had so raised the W. C. T. U. in the estimation of the community that new helpers and friends would rally around the local union.

We have perhaps never held a state gathering in which the devotional spirit was more marked than in this one. The half hour Bible reading preceding the noon hour was faithfully observed each day. We were strengthened by the helpful ministrations of Mrs. Addie W. De Long, our evangelistic superintendent, and Mrs. K. S. Lewis, our state evangelist, whose wonderful Bible readings are always an uplift.

Our financial reports, although they showed that less money had been expended for our work than in some former years, were yet very encouraging. Wisconsin has felt the "hard times" quite keenly, and with some women's organizations the struggle for mere existence has been no small matter. Many of our local unions have done heroic work this year in the way of raising money. Their devotion has been especially marked in their loyal, unselfish efforts to sustain the "W. C. T. U. Home," with its beneficent work for unfortunate girls. No phase of our work appeals more surely to the hearts of our women than this labor of love, so abundant in good results for our weaker sisters, and for the maintenance of no other department will they work and sacrifice more cheerfully. At least nineteen out of every twenty girls committed to the "home" in the eight years of its existence are known to be living upright, industrious lives—some of them earnest Christians.

The "birthday thankofferings" collected at the convention amounted to more than thirty dollars.

One strong, sweet woman was sadly missed from our gathering this year—Mrs. Annie J. Bradbury, who has done so much to bring our magnificent L. T. L. work up to its present high standard. Milwaukee unions also mourn her going, for she has done most blessedly helpful rescue and other mission work in that brewery shadowed city. Years of unceasing, wearing work have told upon her health and she is obliged for a time to lay aside the work which has grown wondrously dear to her. After a few months' rest among the New England hills, she goes to her son in the Rockies. Colorado women will surely find her out, and if she is able to work, our loss will be their great gain.

Our convention speakers are an especial cause of congratulation to us. The Y's were fortunate enough to secure Miss Ida Clothier, and a large audience listened eagerly while she spoke strong, winsome words for "The Young Woman of To-morrow." Miss Clothier's efficient help in conducting the Y conferences was greatly appreciated.

The following evening we had with us Mrs. Sophie F. Grubb, who spoke on "Influence vs. The Ballot," a fine address which created a profound impression as to the sacredness of the ballot, the necessity of woman's enfranchisement and the importance of work among our foreign brethren. This impression, together with the forcibly-presented fact that seventy-five per cent of Wisconsin's population are foreigners, led to a vote in the convention to resume the work among foreigners. This department had been dropped from our list as no woman could be found who felt sufficient for the great work laid down by our efficient Scandinavian sister, Mrs. Ostregen, on her removal from the state.

A pleasant incident, remarked upon by many delegates, was the presence among us of a number of National workers. These were, our governor's wife, Mrs. Mary C. Upham, National superintendent work among lumbermen; her assistant, Mrs. A. E. Shores; Dr. Annette J. Shaw, National superintendent health and heredity; Mrs. S. F. Grubb, National superintendent work among foreigners; Miss Ida C. Clothier, National Y organizer, and our own president, Mrs. V. H. Campbell, National vice-president.

We turn our faces toward another year's work, praying that to each worker may be given a large portion of the spirit and purpose of the Master that so our work may be blessed of Him to the helping of His humanity.

During the spring campaign a small, new union did a stroke of work, one of the results of which was to almost bring a no-license victory to their little city. The following petition was drawn up by the union: "We, the undersigned, women of the city of Mondovi, are deeply interested that our municipal government shall be good and clean. We believe this is not possible in the highest degree while we have the legalized saloon in our midst. We have no power to say whether the saloon shall stay or not. You are our representatives at the ballot-box, and we earnestly ask that you will rightly represent us by voting against license." A systematic canvass was instituted, the names of a large number of women were secured to the petition (some good literature being distributed at the same time), and a copy of petition and signatures conspicuously posted at each polling place. At the request of the union, ministers had preached on the subject, and appeals appeared in the local papers. As a result, they lost the no-license victory by only eight votes in a town that had always given a large majority for license.

Wisconsin was favored during the month of May in having a series of lectures at different points by Rev. Henrietta G. Moore, of Ohio. Always a favorite in the state, she has doubly endeared herself to our people during this trip. Her masterful addresses, which cause a strong and telling "arrest of thought," her genuine, charming womanliness, her whole-hearted, unselfish devotion to the cause, combine to make her a most useful worker. One union is rejoicing in twenty new members which she won for it; another union more than doubled its membership during her stay, and at each place visited by her the onward impetus given the cause is still felt.

IOWA.

ALL AROUND ACTIVITIES.

Although Iowa has not been heard from recently, she has been actively at work.

Our beloved president has been much confined to her home by ill health or by sickness in her family. But she keeps the affairs of state well in hand and is constantly devising ways and means to forward our work.

She is again in the field. Unions desiring her services can write to Mrs. M. J. O. Whiting, Belmond, for terms and dates. She earnestly urges the filling of Temple wheels which can be procured from her for two cents each. Mrs. Dunham has obtained a large number of copies of the symposium on raising the age of protection for girls, published in the January Arena, and asks our workers to send seven cents each to her for copies. She asks them to prepare a program with extracts from the symposium, a synopsis of our laws as they are on this subject, and with what other talks and papers as seem best; then to call a meeting, carry out the program and to circulate a subscription paper to raise funds for work in our legislature next winter, when we shall labor to have this age raised from thirteen to eighteen years.

Our state lecturer and organizer, Mrs. C. H. Howe, has formed unions as follows since my last report: Greenfield, with ten members; Fontanelle, six members; Defiance, nine members and two honoraries; Farnhamville, seventeen; Orient, twelve; "Maple Grove," twelve; Sciola, thirteen; Nodaway, ten; Ayrshire, twelve; and Superior, fifteen.

Mrs. Howe goes to her home in Missouri the first of July for a rest, after which she will take up work in the twenty-third district.

Mrs. Anna M. Palmer, state and National evangelist, has organized a union at Boone with fifty-four members, composed of representative women from all the churches, one at Lenox with eighteen members, and one at Ogden with seventeen, also one at Prole, with twenty-one. She is constantly in the field sowing gospel temperance seed, which is sure to grow. She has held meetings in Shenandoah, which resulted in an increase of twenty-eight members to that union, while Clearfield union doubled its membership under her powerful presentation of truth. At Prole thirteen young men signed the pledge. This gives but a meager idea of what this consecrated woman is doing for our fallen state.

Mrs. Joanna B. Shesler, president of the nineteenth district, has recently organized a union at Rolfe with twenty members. Miss Anna Brown has formed one at Clemons, numbers not reported.

Mrs. Naomi Mackey, president of seventh district, has organized a union of ten members, at Bayard. Mrs. Mackey has also given several lectures on the mulct law and finds that the people are blind to the awful wickedness of that law. Col. C. J. Holt is doing valiant service here. Hundreds of drinking men have been induced to sign the pledge, reading rooms have been established, home protection clubs organized. W. C. T. U. women have visited saloons, pool rooms and billiard halls and warned the proprietors of these haunts of death that they must keep the law or suffer the consequences. The greatest work, perhaps, was at Sioux City, where, under his instructions, a crusade band of one hundred white-ribboners visited every saloon in the city demanding a strict observance of the laws which they found were being violated in every place visited.

It will be remembered that these heroic women were respectfully treated in every saloon but the one kept by John Mandersheid. Here the proprietor assailed these pure, Christian women with the vilest epithets, and with the assistance of toughs who were present violently ejected them from his place of business. These indignities were borne without resistance, singing and prayer being their only defense. Proceedings were instituted against Mandersheid, resulting in his being fined five hundred dollars for contempt of court for violation of an old injunction against him in the matter of the sale of liquors. He has appealed to the supreme court.

Miss Anna Brown, state superintendent of L. T. L. work, and Miss Bowers, editor of our Iowa Signal, are filling a large number of engagements and instructing the children concerning the evils of strong drink, organizing L. T. L's and drilling speakers for contests.

Mrs. Lora A. Bennett, president of the fourteenth district, reports twenty-five unions in her territory, including two new ones, one at Chester, and one at Rock Creek. This enterprising district has recently held its second W. C. T. U. institute, which was attended by thirty or forty from abroad and by many from the vicinity. It was a pronounced success. The departments of peace and arbitration, L. T. L. medal contest, franchise, literature, scientific temperance instruction, social purity, systematic giving and mercy were intelligently discussed. A medal contest was held in the evening, Miss Carla Minner winning the prize.

Mrs. Virginia S. Mercer, of Ohio, has given several elocutionary entertainments in the state. She is a fine artist. She excels in training children for contest work, or older ones for public speaking.

The saloon-keepers of Des Moines are in deep waters just now, on account of action of the supreme court.

The saloons in our capital city are all closed on the ground of insufficiency of the petition under the Martin mulct law. It is officially said that "this settles the matter until fall when the appeal can be taken up."

The Prohibitionists have just held their annual convention at which W. C. T. U. delegates were granted the same privileges as other delegates, Chicago papers "to the contrary notwithstanding." No report received.

WEST VIRGINIA.

STRENGTHENED STAKES.

Our state convention, which met in Fairmont, June 4–7, is just passed into history.

It has been long known that if the W. C. T. U. did much in our state a better organization must be effected and there must be links that would connect the remotest union to the state organization. This was much talked of in the meetings of the executive committee and recommended to the convention which promptly took it up, and as fast as possible a county organization will be perfected.

The secretary's report showed sixteen new unions, an increase of about 294 in membership, a special awakening in Demorest medal contests, and active work among the juveniles.

We were agreeably surprised at the sentiment for unfermented wine in communion services. There was scarcely a union that did not report churches in their community aroused on this question.

The committee appointed at our last convention to go before the legislature in the interests of a girls' industrial school, failed in its purpose at that time but was continued with hopes of better success.

The great white stone that marks the year's work in the state must be the home for fallen women at Wheeling. Not between the wide oceans is there a better union than this same Wheeling union. They have raised over seven hundred dollars for the home, established it, furnished it, and already, though scarcely on its feet, the needy ones of our sex have sought its shelter, been redeemed and restored to useful lives. This union has held over 102 gospel temperance meetings in the year, sown the city deep in literature, "mothers" two fine Loyal Legions and a Y. Every avenue that is open to work is entered by these faithful ones.

We could not help but contrast with this union some of the weak, far away, almost deserted unions in certain sections of the state, so bound down and hemmed in by prejudice and false notions of "woman's sphere" that their efforts of service are simply sublime heroism. Should our state ever be redeemed from the curse of rum and from the bondage of women, it will be because these few have held the mountain fastnesses for final possession by the army of the right.

The greatest attraction of the convention was the address by John G. Woolley. A large audience listened with breathless intensity while that man poured the truth at them like the discharge of a gatling gun. Nothing speaks to us so truly of a better Prohibition sentiment in Fairmont than the fact that an audience here will sit under the strongest language that could be uttered on the temperance question, and respond with applause, where not long since such an address would not have been tolerated.

The last evening of the convention was devoted to a Y conference. Mrs. Hammond, of Ohio, made the address of the occasion.

The convention enrolled about one hundred delegates.

Telegrams of greeting were sent to Michigan and Wisconsin in session at the same time, and return greetings received from them.

A shadow rested over the convention in the extreme illness of Mrs. Elizabeth Burt Clayton, a member of the Fairmont union, widely known over the state. Since the adjournment of the convention Mrs. Clayton has passed over to the reward awaiting the redeemed. She was so sturdy of character, so strong in council and so hopeful that it will be long before we will be able to recover from the loss.

Our first effort in the new year before us will be to increase the membership to the five hundred mark by October.

Scientific temperance instruction will be given more attention this year. Our main effort will be to strengthen and build up what we have.

The following officers were elected: President, Mrs. M. R. C. Morrow; vice-president, Mrs. M. M. Love; treasurer, Mrs. M. C. Parson; recording secretary, Miss Sue Johnson; corresponding secretary, Miss Kate Ebert; Y secretary, Miss Ida Abbott.

We would write you oftener of the work of the state but have not yet succeeded in getting local unions to report work to us.

KANSAS JOTTINGS.

DISTRICT DOINGS.

The house-cleaning of the home and the municipality have no doubt taken so much of the precious time of our membership, that but little could be spared for correspondence with your reporter, and I have resorted to gleaning in the field of Our Messenger for much of my information.

The crop of spring conventions has been well-nigh harvested, results to be realized later on.

The fifth district held its semi-annual convention at Washington, and the sixth district at Beloit, where there was a large attendance both of membership and visitors. Among the latter were several prominent ministers, each adding his "mite" to the interest of the meeting. Many excellent papers were read and discussed. Among the subjects treated were Y work, legislative and franchise and narcotics. Rev. Brown, of the Baptist church, conducted a parliamentary drill. The district president, Mrs. Carson, conducted a medal contest on both evenings of the convention.

The delegates were provided with carriages for a ride to the Girls' Industrial School, really a child of the W. C. T. U., though now "adopted" by the state, which gives it a comfortable support. The visit was made a very enjoyable one.

Seventh district convened at Kingman in the new M. E. church. There were present three of the general officers, superintendents of seventeen departments, also delegates from Wichita, Hutchinson, Nickerson, Cheney, Maize, Haven, Wellington, Pratt, Medicine Lodge, Freeport and Sterling, with a goodly number of visiting white-ribboners. Mrs. Thornburg presented a paper on "Sabbath Observance," and Dr. Tiffany on "Woman's Enfranchisement."

The seventh district unions are not discouraged but are determined to press forward to success the work of the franchise department. In the evening Rev. Nusbaum favored the convention with a fine stereopticon lecture on "Intemperance and Its Results." On Thursday, an "Ideal W. C. T. U." was organized, and happily conducted with Mrs. H. M. Burgess as president. Miss Viola Dumenil gave a recitation, an original suffrage poem was read by Mr. C. H. Ogborn, which was, of course, most highly appreciated, coming from an "honorary." Mrs. Mason read a paper on juvenile work, and short talks were given by superintendents of the departments of evangelistic work, narcotics and scientific temperance instruction. Mrs. Haines, president of the fourth district, took the place of President Smith, who was detained at home by illness. Five "Crusaders" were present and a feature of the occasion was a "Crusade experience meeting." Mrs. Haines writes that the horses which bore the delegates from depot to church, were decorated with our white ribbon.

The remaining districts decided to hold no semi-annual meetings this year, but as far as possible hold county schools of methods.

COUNTY CONFERENCES.

Riley county held its spring meeting at Manhattan, Mrs. Evans reporting the appreciation of railroad men for the W. C. T. U., and their statement that W. C. T. U. women were the only ones that ever visited them when "only a railroad man" was hurt or killed. The usual number of instructive papers were read and discussed. At the vote taken on "How many women want full suffrage?" every hand went up. Rev. Gill confessed to having twice been made "ashamed of Kansas," and both times from the same cause—the defeat of the suffrage amendment. He insisted that when it shall be tried the third time it will prove the charm. May his prophecy be fulfilled!

L. T. L. work was well represented. A class of about thirty-five children entertained the convention with several songs. Mrs. Evans reciprocated and sang a song for the children, after which the white and colored Legions united in singing the "Wind-Mill Song."

Wyandotte county met at Rosedale. Among the topics discussed were "Rights and Privileges of Honorary Members," "Boys' Brigades," and the topic, "Woman as a Wage-earner" was ably discussed in a paper by Mrs. Armstrong. The county president, Mrs. Lewis, resigning on account of removal from the state, Mrs. Armstrong was elected to fill vacancy.

Anderson county W. C. T. U. convened at Harris, a place having no union, but as a result of the convention ten names were added to the credit of our state, which is a goodly number for a new union. They also organized an L. T. L. of seven members. Isn't this a good plan for others to follow? I believe it is worth trying in many places where we could not otherwise succeed. We are trying very hard to raise our proportion for the roll-call of the National this year.
